MR. EDITOR: In compliance with a duty made obligatory upon me by the Discipline of the Church, and for the information of the friends of Zion in general, I improve this spare hour, in making a short note, of how we are getting along on Pennville Circuit. We commenced our labors on this circuit, at the close of the first quarter of the present Conference year, and although this Circuit two or three years since, shared largely in a revival of religion; yet, by inattention on the part of the membership to their duty, and disappointment on the part of the minister appointed to serve them the present Conference year; they also shared largely in a spiritual declension. We commenced our work with fear and trembling, endeavoring to impress the minds of the membership—with the importance of erecting and keeping up the family altar, which alas! in too many instances had already died away, and the fire of the altar had become entirely extinguished. They went immediately to work, not only around their family altars, but also in their closets, seeing and feeling the necessity of a revival of religion; their united cry was, "O Lord revive thy work." thus they continued until our second quarterly meeting, which was held at Mt. Zion meeting house, February 12th and 13th. There was nothing special on Saturday and Sabbath, only the membership were growing lively, and congregations large, but on Monday morning in our lovefeast the Divine Power came as the rushing of mighty winds; saints were made to rejoice, backsliders were again brought to confess their Saviour, and sinners made to tremble. On Monday night, we came together, and after sermon, seekers of religion were invited to the altar for prayer; when six or eight persons came trembling to the altar, inquiring for him, of whom "Moses in the law and the Prophets did write." On Tuesday night the Divine Power was still greater, some ten were found at the altar, anxiously seeking an asylum in the wounds of Christ, this night two souls were happily converted to God. Here might be seen the weeping father and mother, bending over their children, exhorting them to come to Christ, the young soldiers of the cross at once became missionaries, going out into the congregation, and bringing up to the altar their associates. Here might also be heard, the rejoicing of revived saints, the shouts of new-born souls, and amidst these might be heard the deep-toned sighs, and groans, of the sin-sick and penitent souls. Our meeting continued until Wednesday night still growing better and better, when it was thought best to suspend till Friday night, that the people might have some time to rest. On Friday night the attack was again renewed, and the meeting continued until Sabbath afternoon, when, in consequence of other arrangements, and engagements, it broke. I know not, that I have attended a meeting for the last three years, that was fraught with so many convictions; for every sinner in the house seemed to be under the influence of conviction. The result was, three conversions, and one accession to the church. Thus it is seen, that while other fields of labors are sharing largely in the blessings of a revival, that the cloud has already passed this way, and we have caught a gentle shower of reviving grace also; and my prayer to God is, that we may receive a more plentiful shower before the close of the year. At this meeting we had the labors of Brs. S. Akins and J. McCann, who labored for the salvation of souls. We have peace in all our borders.

Yours in the bonds of a peaceful Gospel,
JAMES W. SOUTHARD.

BR. BASSETT: Notwithstanding the ill health of my colleague, Br. Gray, which has compelled me to labor alone almost the entire winter, we are trying to get along, and among our discouragements, we have something to cheer us. The first meeting of interest held on the circuit, was held at Union class; it commenced February 5th, and continued till Thursday following. The church was much revived, and six souls professed to find peace, 6 gave their names to the church. At this meeting we were favored with the valuable labors of Br. Ross. The next was held at Franklin meeting house commencing February 19th, and closed March 1st. This was among the best meetings I think I ever attended, truly it was "a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Mourners crowded their way to the altar at almost every invitation, and hardly an evening passed without the conversion of a number of souls, till I think about 40 professed to obtain the blessing, and 49 gave their names to the church and I trust their hearts to God, at this meeting we were much cheered by the energetic and very acceptable labors of Brs. Hamilton, and Long. Our second quarterly meeting has just closed, after a continuance of 10 days. Br. Nichols aided us on this occasion, and labored to the satisfaction of all that heard, some 3 or 4 professed religion during the meeting, five joined the church. We have received about 70 into the church this year. We received 115 on this circuit last year, making in all in the last 18 months, 185, and there are many more that ought to be converted, we are still hoping for better days. Pray for us.

Yours, WM. DULING.

Bournville, Ohio, March 18th, 1848

BR. BASSETT: By your permission I will again report the condition of Bournville Circuit.—Since my last communication we have held a protracted meeting at the Indian Creek class, which resulted in the addition of seven members to the class. On the 26th day of February we commenced a protracted meeting in Bourneville, which lasted one week. Here the prospect seemed gloomy but the citizens gave us a hearing, and we went to work trusting in God, and the Lord poured out his spirit, and souls were awakened and converted, and twenty-six were added to the church. At this meeting we had the assistance of Br. S. P. Kezerta, who labored faithfully, and to effect: our quarterly meeting coming on, we had to leave for Mt. Olive, where we had a pleasant time, though nothing special was done. March 9th, we renewed our effort at Bourneville, aided by our worthy and indefatigable brother J. M. Young, who labored faithfully with us, for which may the Lord reward him largely. Br. Kezerta was also with us part of the time. We continued the meeting till last night. Numbers were at the altar of prayer every night and almost every day, and many found peace in believing. Twenty-two names were added to the church, making in all at the two meetings 48, thirteen from the M. E. Church, and the others from the world. We once had a society in this place with a comfortable frame Church, but from a combination of causes the flock was scattered, and when I came here I found but 4 or 5 persons who professed to be Methodist Protestants. We now have two excellent classes, embracing 53 members of good material. One of these is composed of very interesting young ladies (20 in number) with a female leader. We expect to organize immediately a good Sabbath School in our Church.

During the above meetings our brethren of the Presbyterian church, and many of the M. E. Church came up to the work nobly. We have received in all since Conference seventy-three members, and our prospects are encouraging for many more. To God be all the glory. Pray for us.

Yours, C. H. WILLIAMS.

[The following portion of a letter chiefly on business, by a highly esteemed brother, should have been inserted several weeks ago. We regret exceedingly the oversight, especially as we have repeatedly urged Br. F. to write oftener for us. We know he would excuse us, if acquainted with the accidental circumstance, by which the omission occurred. Try us again, Br. F.

BR. BASSETT: Through the medium of the Recorder, I would inform the friends of Zion that we are still trying to live on Port William ct. Peace and harmony appear to abound, and we have been blessed with some degree of prosperity. Although we have had no particular revival, we have had some increase of members. The number received this Conference year is twenty-eight, and prospects appear to be fair for a still further increase. I have found a kind hearted & generous people on this circuit, who appear to take a great interest not only in the welfare of the church, but also in the comfort and support of their preacher; and my earnest prayer to the Father of all our mercies is, that our labor with this people may not be in vain in the Lord. Our second quarterly meeting for Port William circuit will be held at Eleazer Meeting House, commencing February 26th 1848. Ministerial aid is solicited.

Yours in the bonds of a peaceful gospel,

Cicero Circuit, Ia., March 8th, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: I wish through your paper to inform the friends of Zion how matters seem to stand in this section of the country. Br. S. W. Widney is laboring amongst us, and is very successful. There have been some conversions, and 30 or upwards united with the church. The brethren are becoming more zealous in getting out to meeting, and also in doing more than heretofore in support of the preacher. These things indicate an advancement in the sacred cause. I was in the neighborhood where Br. Griggs and others held their Convention, in Middletown Circuit, and spoke twice in the M. P. Meeting House. The different churches there hold each other at a distance. The new branch have rather the pre-eminence in that immediate neighborhood. They are now called Republican Methodists, & have adopted the Congregational plan of government. I pray the Lord to make them men of pure hearts, and clean hands, that the work of the Lord may prosper under their labors. I do think we will soon have such a variety of churches, that if men perish it will not be because there is no church or church government suitable to their mind, to which they might attach themselves and be saved. I have changed my address to Brook, Jasper county, Ia.

Yours in bonds of love,
JOHN ALTER.

Driftwood Mission, March 15th, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: Our second quarterly meeting commenced on Friday night, February 11, at Mt. Hebron, and closed Monday night following. Our beloved Br. Shipp, the president, was with us, and labored with his usual zeal. The result of this meeting was, the church was much revived, eight united with us, and one conversion took place. On the 4th Inst. we commenced a meeting on White Creek, Bartholomew county, which lasted three days. At this place we had but few members, and they much discouraged. But on Saturday night, the cloud broke in blessings on their heads. The people of God were enabled to rejoice, whilst sinners were enquiring the way to Zion. At this meeting we saw the mourners coming forward, from the gray headed to the youth of ten or twelve of years old.—Eight persons united with the Church. To God be all the Glory. Four have since joined—two at Lane's School House, and one converted—and two at Urbana School House, making in all 37 since Conference.

As ever, yours in Christ,
GEO. WHEATLEY.

MICHIGAN DISTRICT.

Kingsbury, Ia., March 7th, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: Permit me to say for the encouragement of the readers of your excellent paper, that the good Lord is, yet favorable to, and is reviving his work in almost every part of the Michigan District. From a recent communication I have received from the President of this district in relation to his eastern tour, I learn the work of the Lord has been spreading most gloriously at almost every quarterly meeting, and that "we may reckon between two & three hundred as the fruits of those meetings." A line from our zealous, and good Br. Oaks reports over one hundred hopeful conversions, and an addition of about ninety to the Lagrange circuit, as the fruit of about two months protracted effort, which he, and Br. Button have made on that circuit. The Valparaiso circuit, is also on the advance under the labors of Br. Munn; a revival spirit seems to be awakened in almost every part of the work. The prospects, are more flattering for the Laporte circuit. The Lord has been reviving his work to some extent on this circuit, and we are now making arrangements for building a Meeting House, for the use of our church. We have now one chapel made of Logs, hewed inside, and made quite nice, and comfortable; but it looks rather course on the out side, we hardly dare call it a meeting house. I have left, and still feel great anxiety to advance the work within the bounds of my charge, but all the long winter my health has been poor, and my lungs greatly affected, and it has been with difficulty for me to meet the regular appointments. I have attempted to hold some protracted meetings but have been compelled to close them in time of great interest—while mourners were crying for mercy. May the good Lord revive his work more gloriously. Pray for us.

Yours affectionately,
J. GAY.

NORTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT.

Princton, Ill., March 9th, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: The Lord is still reviving his work in these ends of the earth. The second quarterly meeting for this (Princeton) circuit was closed on last Sabbath evining. It was protracted some ten days, and was a good time. From ten to fifteen were converted and reclaimed, ten joined the church—more are expected to unite soon. There were quite a number of seekers when the meeting closed, that had not obtained peace, who I hope will perseverve until they find mercy.

Yours in Christ,
P. J. STRONG.

Southern Management.

The Baptist denomination have established and endowed a Theological Seminary at the village of Covington, in the State of Kentucky. The funds were chiefly collected in the free States; and for sometime they were entrusted to the care of citizens of Cincinnati, as it was desired that a location should be selected near this city, on account of its central position with reference to the whole country. These citizens ascertaining that a handsome sight might be bought at a cheap rate in Covington, purchased there. By judicious management the necessary buildings were erected, and when it was found that the condition of things was such as to warrant the opening of the institution, Dr. Patterson, a northern man was elected President. This election did not appear to suit certain persons in Kentucky, who were more watchful for the interests of the peculiar institution than for the progress of sacred literature, or the increase of learned ministers. It was not long before a demand was made upon Dr. Patterson to define his position upon the anti-slavery question. This demand he did not see fit to comply with to the satisfaction of the Kentuckians. They at once commenced efforts to get the institution under their own management.

An interview with the Trustees and Faculty was had, and the committee, after laboring to effect a compromise, either by a division of the property, or by such a division of the Trusteeship as would give one half to the South, and failing to accomplish anything in that way, as a last resort, applied to the Legislature for redress and they have so amended the charter as to secure to the South the entire management of the institution.

While it is true that the Baptists of Cincinnati and other Northerners, have been the principal agents in placing the institution on the permanent basis upon which it now rests, and that they have paid more for it than all others beside; yet, when by this aid it has come to rest upon a solid footing, the slaveholding portion of the Kentucky Baptists have taken the advantage of its being located on the Kentucky side of the river, to secure by Legislative enactment the entire management of it.

Much instruction may be derived from this experience that will be of advantage to those ecclesiastical bodies, that have any such partnership arrangements to make.—Watchman of the Valley.

WESTERN REGORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO;

Thursday, March 23, 1848.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"A New Hand," in reply to "Homo," shall appear next week. No 1, by Brother C. Springer, on the Restrictive Rule, is also in hand. "South," on the same subject has just been received. A "Friend of Tobacco" shall appear. The good sister who sends us "A Dream" for publication, is informed that we have been interested with the private perusal of it, but we do not think that its publication would be judicious.

THE TREATY.—The Treaty between the United States and Mexico, which is now the topic of intense interest all over the continent, appears in full in a late number of the Baltimore Sun. Its title is as follows: "Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Limits and Settlement, between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic, concluded at Guadaloupe Hidalgo, on the 2d day of February, and ratified, with Amendments, by the American Senate, March 10th, 1848." The instrument is lengthy in proportion to its title, containing 23 Articles. It was adopted in the Senate, after 9 o'clock on Friday night, 10th instant, by a vote of 37 Yeas, to 15 Nays. Of course the amendments are subject to the assent or rejection of the President and Congress of Mexico, before the Treaty can be considered binding. Mr. Sevier of Arkansas has been appointed a special Commissioner to Mexico.

MORE GOOD NEWS.—Our department of Religious Intelligence, is still encouragingly supplied. We rejoice that revivals have become quite common. The Head of the Church is pouring out his Spirit in many places. In various religious denominations the good work of reformation has begun and is progressing gloriously. Our Baptist brethren of Zanesville we rejoice to say, have shared largely in the visitations of saving grace, for several weeks past. Many have been baptised each Sabbath for four or five weeks past—numbering in all, we believe more than one hundred persons.

FROM CINCINNATI.—Brother W. B. Warrington, who is associated with Brother Finkbine in charge of the Elm Street Mission, sends us a private letter in which he informs us that a blessed out-pouring of the Spirit has been experienced, several souls have been converted, and 12 or more have been added to the church in Elm St. Br. Dalbey, he informs us is holding a protracted meeting in his new charge, the George Street Mission, and the Lord is blessing his zealous labors. A number have been converted, and 20 or more have been added to the Mission Church since Conference. The health of Br. Stockton he states is very feeble. He has large and serious congregations, and some additions have been made to the 6th Street Church, our correspondent knows not how many. We trust we shall be favored to receive more particular word from each of the brethren.

EVANGELICAL PREACHER.—We published most of the prospectus of this work, with a favorable notice, in January last, before the issue of its first number. We have now, thus early been favored to receive a copy of the January and February numbers. The work is neatly gotten up, and the publisher promises further improvements. No 1 contains a Sermon by Rev. Dr. Stow, of Boston, and one by Rev. Prof. Robinson, of Covington, Ky. No. 2 contains a Sermon by Rev. Dr. Lynd, of St. Louis, Mo., one by Rev. Pres. Bailey, of Granville College, Ohio, and one by Rev. Dr. Howell, of Nashville, Tennessee. Each number is to contain two original Sermons from eminent living ministers. The Editor, Rev. N. N. Wood, is sparing neither pains nor expense to make his monthly a tasty and useful work. Terms, $1 per year in advance. Address "The Evangelical Preacher," Zanesville, or call at the "Aurora" office, Main, street, where the work is printed.

CINCINNATI, AND WASHINGTON CITY.—Dr. Baily of the National Era, in his last paper, gives a striking contrast between the state of pauperism, and the state of the markets in the two above named cities. He says that during a residence of fifteen years in Cincinnati, he was not beset with half so many beggars,, (white beggars) during that whole period, as are in the habit of calling upon him in a single month in Washington. A great difference, that, yet he ascribes it to the influence exerceised by the presence of slavery upon the respectability of free labor. Abundant provision is made for the poor of the Federal City. An Asylum is provided with spacious grounds where they must work that they may eat. Yet it seems that men, women and children had rather beg than labor. In reference to the expenses of living in Cincinnati, in contrast with the same in Washington, we give the Doctor's own words. After stating that in Cincinnati, he has often bought ducks at 10 cents, fine chickens at 18¾ cents per pair, turkeys at 37½ cents a piece, the best of butter at 16 cents a pound, and eggs at 5 cents a dozen, he adds:

The Queen City knows how to live. She has opened numerous communications with the rich valleys all around her, by railroads, canals, macadamized turnpikes, radiating in every direction; and the grounds in her immediate vicinity, as rich as the lands overflowed by the Nile, are settled by hard-working German gardeners, who supply her markets with a superabundance of fruits and vegetables. The country for miles and miles all around the city is rapidly being transformed into gardens, vineyards, orchards, dairies, and market-supplying farms, under the magical influence of free labor, while St. Louis, in a slave State, possessing commercial facilities about equal to those of Cincinnati, and founded before the latter, did not enjoy, in 1846, the benefit of a single foot of railroad or canal, and but two or three miles of macadamized road, the country around it being comparatively uncultivated!

Washington is in a similar predicament, except that it has the advantage of some canal navigation. All around us there is good land, waiting for the hand of the diligent to make it productive. Our markets are high—mutton and beef 10 cents, turkeys from $1 to $1.50 a piece, chickens 50 to 62½ cents a pair, potatoes 30 to 37½ cents a peck, flour $7 to $8 a barrel. What an opening for German immigrants and Northern farmers! This city must increase so long as it shall continue the seat of Government, and, owing to the crowds of strangers attracted here by the the sessions of Congress, the demand for produce and provisions will always be great. There is a large quantity of land adjacent to the city which may be bought at a low price, and at once brought under productive cultivation.

CHRISTIAN WREATH.—We have just receved from the publisher the numbers for January and March, of this excellent work. They are filled with interesting and instructive reading matter, in prose and poetry, and illustrated with beautiful engravings. The January number has a fine mezzotint plate of Christ blessing little children, a colored flower, and a popular piece of sacred music. "All is well." The frontispiece of the March number is a neat view of Jerusalem. J. Van. Court, Publisher, Philadelphia. Only $1 per year. Send for it.

Letter from a Minister of the Virginia Conference.

We take pleasure in giving place to the subjoined letter, for the following reasons—1. We love to give a candid and impartial hearing to brethren on each side of a question. 2. We like the general spirit of our Brother's remarks. 3. We are happy to find that he comes so near as he does in concurring with us in our views.—Below we shall take the liberty to append a few friendly notes.

Lynchburg, Va., March 6. '48.

BR. BASSETT: You will oblige me by changing my "Recorder" from Charles City, C. H., to this place. I am pleased with the "Recorder" on several accounts; and wish it continued.—Many of its original communications, are well written; and I have been interested in many of the selections, as well as the editorials. On the whole, I consider it an interesting, good paper. I would endeaver to obtain some subscribers to it, were it not so strongly spiced with "ABOLITION," editorially, and otherwise. A paper, devoted in whole, or in part, to the cause of what is generally, and I presume appropriately, styled,—"Northern Abolition," meets with very little favor in Eastern Virginia. Of this, you are doubtless aware, already. I am not an abolitionist, as you are, perhaps, prepared to hear; and it is, therefore, not any sympathy with the abolitionists, that causes me to continue my subscription to the "Recorder." I am unprepared to determine, positively, whether you will be pleased with my classing your paper with Abolition Journals, or not; and, indeed, I doubt whether it may be considered, strictly, as an abolition publication, as its columns, as far as I know, are open to writers on both sides of the question. I think, however, that the worthy Editor has, at different times, "defined his position" with sufficient distinctness, to satisfy his readers, that he affiliates with "Northern Abolitionists," and their scheme—as we think—of mistaken and misguided philanthropy. But, my Brother, while I do not think any more highly of you for being, as I think, an abolitionist, I assure you I do not think any less of you on account of it. I am prepared to admit, as far as I know, that abolitionists are as good men, as those who are opposed to them; but I will not, because I cannot conscientiously, assent to the truth of the immodest and arrogant sentiment of the abolitionists themselves, that they are better men, than their uncompromising opposers. I do not, however, allege this as your own sentiment, because I am not aware that you have ever expressed, or intimated it. But it is evidently implied, and often unblushingly expressed, in the writings of many, if not most, of the abolition party.

But while I do not affiliate with the abolitionists, I am willing, and even desirous, to hear what they have to say. I always read their articles, when I meet with them, in your paper, though some of them are, in my opinion, of the most exceptionable character; so much so, indeed, that I have been quite surprised at their being admitted into the columns of the "Recorder." I allude to such articles, for instance, as that which appeared, nearly a year ago, perhaps, in which the writer attempted to prove that the devil is a slaveholder, and that, therefore, the slaveholder is a—if not the—devil! I do not attempt to give his words, for I have forgotten them, in part; but the sentiment, I remember, as I understood it, was, as above expressed. I know that the Editor of a newspaper is not considered as endorsing every sentiment that appears in its columns. But when SUCH SENTIMENTS as the above appear in a paper, and there is no editorial expression of disapproval, the inference is very apt to be drawn, and quite legitimately too, I think, that the Editor is, at least somewhat, of the same way of thinking.

As you know, I live in a slaveholding State. I have always done so, indeed. This may account, in your own opinion, for what you would be likely to call my prejudices, on the subject of slavery, and against abolition. I have very great and very serious objections to slavery. What my views might have been, had I been brought up in a free State, is more than I can tell. I might have been an abolitionist. We are all, more or less influenced by surrounding circumstances. And it is a fact, that many northern & eastern persons of the abolition school, who have visited the southern States, have had their views modified, on the subject of slavery. They have found that slavery, as it is, at the south, is not what it is represented to be, at the north. Other considerations, besides, have probably contributed some influence in changing their views of the institution. Many of the abolitionists are of the opinion that, situated as we are, in the midst of a slave population, and many of us being more or less, directly or indirectly, interested in its perpetuity, we are incapable of considering the subject fairly, or that we will not reason upon it, with a sufficient degree of impartiality. This is no doubt more or less true, in many individual instances; and in some instances, it is probably true altogether. But many of the people of the south are far from being asleep on this subject.—While they are as watchful against the abolitionists, as a shepherd is against the wolves that would enter his fold, they are solicitous to adopt some plan for the melioration of their slaves.—Living where I do, I profess to know something about the views of many who hold slaves; and I assure you, that there are many who evidence a desire, not only to be freed from slavery, themselves,—(the owners often being the greatest slaves—)but to see their slaves happy in the enjoyment of freedom: and they are disposed, at heart, to take steps, towards the accomplishment of that end. But, it is a fact, when they are called by the foulest of all names by northern abolitionists; when their motives are questioned, and their sincerity is denied; being men, and only men, and subject to the passions of men, and having to contend with the frailties and imperfections of our common fallen nature; their desire for emancipation is checked; and, in many instances, it has, no doubt, from this very cause, died entirely, and will never again be revived and cherished! That they are right, in suffering the course of the abolitionists to have this effect upon them, I am very far from affirming. But abolitionists should, I think, learn a lesson from it. Men who have their liberty, "may be led, but will not be driven." A free discussion upon the subject of slavery, if conducted in a right spirit, would doubtless do good. If some of your correspondents, of the abolition party, who are so excessively desirous of enlightening and reforming the south, upon this subject, would read the discussion between Doctors Wayland and Fuller, they would see, for once, if they never have before, that this subject, as well as others, may be examined to its very core, or root, and discussed freely, in a gentlemanly and christian manner. But many abolitionists, while they can discuss any other subject, even of the greatest magnitude, and solemnity, in a calm, dispassionate manner; so soon as slavery comes up, they almost literally boil over, with the foam of a wild and terrible madness. They at once lose their equilibrium, and you can see their eyes sparkling with an unnatural fire, their lips quivering, and their limbs shaking; and they speak as if they thought that all the wickedness of the world, besides, were far less than that which is concentrated in every poor slaveholder's heart! .... So great is their delusion!

But I must conclude. When I sat down to write I intended to make only a few remarks.—But, "what is written, is written." You can use this letter as you may think proper.

Yours, very sincerely,
WM. Mc'GWIGAN.

We thank our Brother for his kind and friendly allusion to our sheet, at the beginning of his letter. And we are happy to find that he and several other worthy brethren of the same Conference, are not afraid nor ashamed to patronize a paper coming as does ours from a northern State, notwithstanding unfavorable reference may be had occasionally to a southern institution.—Our Brother modestly forbears to classify our paper with Abolition Journals, through deference to our position. We have here just to remark, we intend never to shun any reproach on account of our anti-slavery views, but we do object to having our paper thus classified. We devote a portion of our columns to the cause of Temperance, of Missions, &c., and a portion occasionally, if not constantly to the Anti-slavery cause. There are other journals devoted specially to the Temperance cause or the Missionary—or the Anti-slavery cause. These are properly and professedly Temperance papers or Missionary or Abolition papers, as the case may be. Yet, though our paper takes ground in favor of Temperance and of Missions, and against slavery, it is not to be set down as a Temperance paper, or an Abolition paper, any more than it should be classified as a scientific journal, because we also usually have a scientific department.

As to our 'affiliating' with a 'scheme of mistaken and misguided philanthropy,' we do not deny that we affiliate with various schemes of philanthropy. And we are bound to concede that we are liable to mistake, and to be 'mistaken,' and to be 'misguided.' And will not our very candid Brother concede on his part, that himself may misapprehend the nature, design or bearing of a given 'scheme' of northern men? We are not in the advocacy of any definite anti-slavery scheme, further than this: We hold that slaveholding is wrong. We stop not to state in how many respects it is wrong, or what amount of condemnation should be meted out to it. We say that as a wrong, it ought to be abolished. But we cannot expect those who have been accustomed all their lifetime to the presence of slavery to be as much impressed as we with the iniquity of it. We are therefore in favor of a friendly and dispassionate 'reasoning together' to convince those who are in the wrong, that such is the fact, and that to forsake that wrong, would be not only just, but politic, advantageous & safe.—

But we no more affiliate with "northern abolitionists" than with "southern abolitionists." Nay, we indeed sympathise more with these. We rejoice to learn of some heaven begotten movements in the south which we trust betoken the approach of a glorious day. We are glad for our Southern brethren to do their own work, we wish not to dictate for them—it gives us no pleasure to meddle with their affairs. But we assure our brother that we do not 'affiliate' with either northern or southern abolitionists who may have ropes wherewith to hang slaveholders, or swords to decapitate them, or tongues or pens to misrepresent or denounce them. If such there be, we regret it. We confess it has long been our opinion that the anti slavery cause is sadly retarded by the denunciatory course of some of its injudicious, but doubtless sincere friends.

We admire the good sense of our brother in admitting that abolitionists may be as good men as those who are opposed to them, and in that he candidly reads all they have to say, even when he considers them unreasonably severe. The picture he draws of some men who 'lose their equilibrium' so soon as slavery comes up, is too true in the case of some. But whilst we concede that we have those in the north who go upon extremes, we know that Bro. M'G. will own that there are also ultra men on the side of slavery.

Our brother informs us that he has always resided in a slave State, and that had he been brought up in a free State, through surrounding circumstances he might have even been an abolitionist. This again is candid. We who have been raised in free States, and have an almost natural abhorrence of slavery, should on our part make allowance for the training up and circumstances of southern men. Had such been our 'circumstances,' might not we have been so unfortunate as to be of the number of those, we are wont to consider oppressors? But we are most happy to see our brother admit that he has "very great and very serious objections to slavery." Why, that is our ground exactly. Br. M'G. Pray, give us the hand. What are we more or less on either side but anti slavery? The term "abolitionist" is mostly but an epithet of reproach.

We know that many eastern and northern men going south, have changed their views on the subject of slavery. It has not been so with us. We have repeatedly visited southern States, and in one instance spent a whole year in one of them. We were indeed led to modify our prejudices against humane slave-holders, and to make large allowances for their surrounding circumstances, but we were not brought "to see that slavery as it is at the south, is not what it is represented to be at the north." And after all the sad tales of the evil of slavery twice told at the north, (and these may be exaggerated,) we declare that the worst and most dreadful of all such tales have been told us in the south, by slave-holders themselves. Such cases however we trust are comparatively rare.

We are glad to learn from our brother that many within his knowledge, are awake on this subject, in the south, and are willing and even desirous to be free themselves and to see their bondmen "happy in the enjoyment of freedom."—May the spirit of true philanthropy extend and prevail, till oppression shall be no more.

Finally, we agree with our brother, that 'A free discussion upon the subject of slavery, if conducted in a right spirit, would doubtless do good.' That's the only plan upon which we wish to have any discussion, especially on this subject.

The above remarks have been suggested by the kindest and most friendly feelings towards our esteemed brother, and we shall be happy to hear from him again at his convenience.

Proposed College--Proceedings of Public Meeting.

Pursuant to notice the citizens of the village of Brownsville and its vicinity met and the meeting was organized by calling by request Rev. Mr. Robinson to the chair. The meeting was opened with reading and prayer by the President. Samuel Porter was then chosen to act as Secretary. When the chairman proceeded to announce the object of the meeting. It was then resolved that the meeting proceed to hear, consider, and adopt such resolutions as may be thought best calculated to bring about the and and object of the meeting, viz: The erection of a M. P. College in the village of Gratiot or Brownsville.

When Mr. Wm, Hamilton offered the following resolutions, (accompanied by a train of spirited remarks in which he spoke of the utility of institutions of learning; and the necessity of such institutions being governed by some religious denomination,) which resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Resolved, 1*st*. That since truly republican principles (religious as well as civil) can only be safely and soundly established upon enlightened and well cultivated minds, it is the imperative duty of the Methodist Protestant Church to build and sustain a College with zeal, energy and decision.

Resolved, 2*d*. That whilst we regard the Preacher's Aid Society, to be a highly important step towards the prosperity of our Zion, we believe its claims can only be cordially embraced and sustained in the public mind, when our preachers make some pecuniary sacrifice to prepare themselves for the sacred office of the ministry.

Resolved, 3*d*. That the wants of our country demand the despensing with a certain city refinement connected with College education. Smaller institutions of learning studded all over our country will accomplish the same ends (with worthy students) by means not only easier attained to, but also safer to the morals of youth.

A fourth resolution was offered by Wm. Hamilton and after some time spent in its discussion was laid on the table.

On motion the meeting adjourned till 2 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Pursuant to adjournment the meeting was again called to order by the President. On motion of S. Porter, the resolution of Wm. Hamilton; which had been laid on the table was taken up and ultimately adopted, viz:

Resolved, 4*th* That the Zanesville circuit only awaits the response of the superintendents and friends around the Muskingum District, to commence and complete their part of the work already promised and published by an order of their last quarterly conference.

After considerable discussion about the best way to arrive at the feelings and voice of the Muskingum District fully (knowing it could only speak through its Annual Conference in session,) and knowing that it is highly important that the sympathies of the entire church should be enlisted in this great and good enterprise. A resolution was offered by Br. J. F. Bane, which passed as follows:

Resolved, 5*th*. That we appoint a committee of correspodence, whose business shall be to address a letter to every official member of the Annual Conference, requesting them to consult their officiary and membership as far as practicable in one week and answer the following questions. Do you see a need of an M. P. College? Are you willing to patronise it if such shall be built on Zanesville Circuit? If not, where? What is the probable amount you can give for its present completion, and future support? How many families with you will give their sons at least one session to complete their education?

Resolved 6*th*. That Brs. E. S. Hoagland, Wm. Munhall and S. Porter, be appointed a committee of correspondence with the official members of M. P. Church, Muskingum District, with a request that they attend to their respective duties forthwith.

Resolved, 7*th*, That this meeting adjourn to meet four weeks from this day at 2 o'clock, P. M. in Gratiot to hear a lecture or lectures on education, hear the response of the District, and take what farther steps in the Proposed College, the united wisdom of the meeting may then deem prudent, and that to this meeting we invite not only our own membership, but citizens of every name and order to participate.

Signed,

WM. M. ROBINSON, President.

J. PORTER, Secretary.

Division of the Ohio Conference.

BR. BASSETT: It has been urged upon me by various brethren to forward a communication by way of enquiry whether it would not be advantageous to divide the Ohio Conference. Several reasons are assigned for this, all of which we pass by for the present. The northern division might include Richwood Circuit, and the line might run thence westwardly to the State line.—Likewise a part of the Muskingum District might be added, say about four circuits, or six counties in the north-west part of the District. The great distance to be travelled to the places of the sitting of the Conference, has often served to discourage the attendance of Delegates, and we fear that this evil will be still more sensibly felt, if we should be enabled to occupy and cultivate the north-western counties. Here is a large field, in which our banner of mutual rights is scarcely known. Yet a number of our friends from other parts have emigrated there. The churches are in an unsettled state, and now is the best time to send missionary help. If any are sent, let them be of the right kind. Will our brethren who are concerned, speak out and let us have their views upon this subject?

Yours in the Gospel of Christ,

JAMES SWANEY.

News of the Week.

Fearful Scene with a Mad Dog.

A part of our city was much excited, yesterday, by a Spanish poodle dog, in a state of madness. The dog was of a large size, for the shaggy or woolly breed, and was first seen early in the morning, by Mr. Bishop at the corner of 3d and Walnut. In his course towards Fifth, the dog in question bit several other dogs, and a boy. He jumped at the boy's face, but his teeth, luckily, only penetrated the boy's cap, doing him no particular injury. The rabid animal passed up Fifth to the residence of Mr. F. Ringgold, of the St. Charles, who had just stepped from his room on to the door step, and pulled the door to after him. At this instant he saw the dog coming furiously towards him, snapping his teeth, his eyes glaring fire! Mr. Ringgold commenced kicking the dog with all his might, but his boot being of light texture, no permanent effect could be made on him, but at each rebuff he returned for a better hold. Several times did his teeth tear the leg of the pantaloons, and even the boot. This desperate encounter lasted for some time; we saw Mr. Ringgold soon after, and before the indentation of the animal's teeth had disappeared from his leg. Leaving this combat, the animal next attacked a boy in the street, who ran with much fury, and hallooed "murder!" "murder!" so lustily, that the dog gave up the chase at the end of a square. Here he was met by a man having a revolver, who came so near, in order to make sure of killing, that the dog sprang upon him, caught the thumb of the pistol hand in his mouth, and a terrific struggle ensued the man alternately raising by his thumb the dog from and returning him to the pavement! He at last succeeded in getting his thumb from the dog's mouth, but not until it was horribly mangled. He gave up his pistol and started, full run for the Medical College. The alarm became general, and Mr. Ringgold and others were busily engaged in finding fire-arms with which to dispatch the infuriated beast, but as it generally happens, none were at hand. A man from a neighboring street came up, and discharged his piece, but at such a great distance as to miss his aim altogether. The dog now ran back Fifth to Main street, where he was shot by some person, and the excitement, now general, was allayed. Such a scene was seldom or never witnessed in our streets before—in fact, the oldest inhabitants of our place cannot recall a more desperate mad dog scene, and in which the lives of so many citizens were endangered, and one that a horrible death stared numbers in the face, and from which some five or six escaped very narrowly; if indeed the man whose thumb is bitten is so fortunate.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Birth-day of Jackson.

Yesterday, March 15th, was the anniversary of the birth of ANDREW JACKSON, by all conceded the most remarkable man of his time, whose name and acts will mark in all time to come, without the aid of sculptured marble, this age of the Nation's history. A chronological sketch may not be inappropriate.

1767—On the 15th of March, JACKSON was born, in Waxhaw Settlement, South Carolina.

1780—Andrew, though but a little more than 13 years of age, entered the army as a volunteer, with his brother Robert, (who was afterwards killed,) and served under Gen. Sumpter.

1781—Taken prisoner by the British, and received a severe wound for refusing to clean an officer's boots.

1784—Commenced the study of Law in Salisbury, North Carolina, and after the completion of his studies, was appointed Solicitor for that portion of North Carolina, which afterwards became the State of Tennessee.

1791—Married Mrs. Rachel Robards, an accomplished lady, who had been previously divorced from her husband.

1796—A delegate to the Convention for forming the Constitution for the New State of Tennessee, and was elected the first Representative of that State in Congress, and took his seat in December 1796.

In November, 1797, he took his seat as a Senator of the United States, and acted with the then Democratic party.

He soon after resigned his seat in the Senate, and was appointed Judge of the Supreme Court of his State, and, also, received a Commission as a Major General in the State Militia.

1804—Resigned his Judgeship, and retired to his farm near Nashville.

1813—In January, of this year, he descended the Mississippi at the head of a body of volunteers, destined for the defence of New Orleans. There being no necessity of present service, he was ordered to disband them at Natchez, but disobeyed orders and marched them back. His course was subsequently approved.

In the same year, he was appointed to the command of an expedition against the Creek Indians, and after several severe battles, brought, them to submission.

1814—Appointed a Major General in the United States Army, on the resignation of General Harrison.

In November of the same year, he "took the responsibility," and stormed Pensacola—that town giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

1814—Fought the British below New Orleans, on the night of the 23d of December.

1815—Eighth of January—The memorable Battle of New Orleans—"the Marathon of America."

1818—Commanded in the Seminole War—fought several successful battles, and again took possession of Pensacola.

1822—Nominated by the Legislature of Tennessee, as a candidate for President of the United States.

1823—Offered the station of Minister to Mexico, which he declined. In the same year, again elected U. S. Senator.

1828—Elected President of the United States. The administration of Jackson, 8 of years' duration, like his life, was an eventful one. It was marked by circumstances, which gave new aspects to political affairs, and directed party hostilities into new channels. Under his administration, which was distinguished for the boldness of its measures, our country attained to a higher character abroad than it had ever yet held. Its effects at home are yet remembered and felt.—The destruction of the United States Bank, the removal of the deposites, and the famous Nullification movement, which called forth the "Proclamation," as well as the onslaught which awoke France to her obligations, are well known to all.

1837—Having served eight years as President, he retired to the Hermitage.

1845—On the 8th of June, 1845, he expired, in the 79th year of his age.—Cincinnati Commercial.

The improvements now going on at the rapids of the Wabash, are expected to be completed this fall. When the obstructions at the rapids are removed, the Wabash will afford good steamboat navigation during the greater part of the year.—At last account there were twelve steamboats detained at the rapids.

ANOTHER STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT.

LOUISVILLE, March 13, A. M.

The steamboats Swatara and Yazoo, came into collision early on Friday morning, at Dogtooth Bend, by which the former was sunk to her boiler deck. The Swatara was freighted for Pittsburgh, and most of her cargo, which consisted of bacon and grain, is a total loss. The cargo is mostly insured, and the damage to the boat is also probably covered. There were no lives lost by this accident.

CENSUS OF TEXAS.—The Secretary of State has reported to the Legislature the following census of Texas:

Total white population,	100,508
Electors,	20,748
Slaves,	35,038
Free negroes,	229
Total population,	156,523

☞On the 20th ult., at Wetumpka, Ala., the rain fell in such torrents that the livery stable of Mr. Eckles, fell with a tremendous crash. At the time of its fall, five men and twenty horses were in it. One man was wounded, five horses killed, and several more hurt.

HOG SLAUGHTERING.—Upon undoubted and reliable authority, we are enabled to give the following 'correct' estimate of the number of hogs slaughtered in this city and vicinity, during the season just past:

Killed in the city,	412,161
Brought in from country, (dressed,)	74,860
Total.	487,021

Cassius M. Clay has gone Eastward, and it is said that he will publish in New York an account of his imprisonment and adventures in Mexico.

The people of Steubenville having failed to satisfy their appetite for news by watching the wires of the Telegraph, which pass through their goodly borough, are now making a "brush," to secure an office and instrument there. Some $2500 has been already subscribed and it is thought that the whole amount will be made up.—Zanesville Courier.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—Mr. Peter Frazier, of South Codorus township, York county, (Pa.) was killed on Sat. last, by his horses running off and throwing him under the wheel of his wagon.

SINGULAR AND HORRIBLE AFFAIR—KILLING OF A LITTLE GIRL BY A LUNATIC.

We heard this morning, (says the Maysville Eagle of March 11th,) the particulars of one of the most singular and horrible murders ever committed in the West—the deliberate butchery of an infant by a lunatic. About two o'clock yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Evans, the wife of Mr. Volney Evans, of Aberdeen, Ohio, left her house to visit a neighbor for a few minutes—leaving a beautiful little daughter, about three years old, asleep in her cradle, and a boarder in the family, Strother B. Reed, sitting by the fire reading the Bible. She had been gone but a few minutes when Reed went into the yard and procured a board, which he laid on the floor, and stepping to the cradle, jerked the little innocent with such violence as to force the arm from its socket, and laying her head on the board, deliberately chopped it with a broad-axe in five different places. Four of the gashes were in the top of the head—one about five inches long, from which the brains oozed out—and the fifth across the back of the head above the neck.

After the deed was done, Reed walked to the kitchen and called the attention of the servant woman to the horrid spectacle, who instantly ran to the neighbors, and gave the alarm. When the house was reached, Reed was again seated by the fire intently reading the Bible. The little sufferer lingered, perfectly conscious of all that had passed and without a cry or a murmur from the time it was left sleeping in its cradle until it went to sleep in death, for four hours after the death-blows fell upon its innocent head. Poor Reed! a harmless and inoffensive man in his lucid hours, how shocking the deed of the few moments, loss of reason, the deed of maniac madness! If he had been a sane man, the feelings of the community would not have been restrained, and he would have been a victim of popular violence.

The poor lunatic gave as a reason for killing the little girl that "he had been commanded to do so, and she lay there tempting him." Another report is, that he said "he had as much right to kill children as Herod, who commanded to slay the children in Bethlehem from two years old and under." He was so much deranged the night previous as to require sitting up with. He will be sent to the Lunatic Asylum, where he should have been before.

STAGE ROBBERY.—The Lexington stage was robbed on Wednesday, night two miles beyond the Lowell Blue Licks, of a valuable trunk belonging to Hiram O. Clark, of this city. The Trunk which contained about $400 worth of clothing, jewelry, and other articles, belonging to the lady of Dr. C., was found next morning by a wagoner, rifled of its contents. The trunk was stolen from the boot. A successful robbery of this kind always encourages to other similar attempts, and it is earnestly hoped the robber may be caught.—Cin. Chron.

MADE FRIENDS.—Hon. Henry Clay, and Mr. Gallatin, of New York City, have not been on speaking terms for many years, on account of severe words in debate, in Congress, long ago, uttered by Mr. Clay. On Mr. Clay's late visit East, he called on Mr. G., and they made up, and embraced.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are heldt responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

Published at Columbus, Ohio, on the 1st and 15th of each month. M. B. Bateham, Editor and Proprietor. Terms, $1 per year—four copies for $3—payment invariably in advance.

THE fourth volume of the Ohio Cultivator will commence Jan. 1st, 1848. This paper has now become so well known that it is scarcely necessary to speak of its character, or to allude to the commendations it has received from the Public Press and other ources. The editor is determined to spare no pains on his part to sustain the reputation of the work, and make each succeeding volume more useful than the preceding one. Our motto is "upward and onward;" and the object of the "Cultivator" is not only to collect and disseminate valuable facts and information relating to practical agriculture, but to inspire 'Farmers' with more just conceptions of the dignity of their profession; to induce them to cultivate the 'Mind' as well as the 'soil,' and thus elevate themselves to that position which it is their duty and privilege to occupy as 'American Agriculturists," in this age of Progress and Improvement.

With its very large list of contributors, numbering over "two hundred," most of them practical farmers in the West, the pages of the "Cultivator" will contain the results of "Experience," as well as the teachings of "Science;" and being written or selected with special reference to the climate, productions and farming of Ohio, this paper will be found more valuable than any other for the farmers of this and the adjoining States. It will contain the latest intelligence of the "Markets" of this country and England; notices of the weather and the crops; descriptions (with engravings,) of improved implements, machines, &.; instructions in gardening and fruit culture; rearing and management of domestic animals; construction of farm buildings, fences, &c.; and a "Ladies' Department" devoted to household affairs, useful receipts, &c.

The friends of Improvement in Ohio and adjoining States are requested to obtain and forward subscribers for the Ohio Cultivator. Remember that the price is only "seventy-five cents" each, when four or more names are sent by one person. All subscriptions must commence with the first number of the volume; a complete index is furnished at the end of the year. Specimen numbers and a prospectus will be forwarded to all who desire them.

☞"Now is the time to subscribe!" Letters with remittances may be sent by mail at the risk and expense of the publisher. Address,

GENERAL CONFERENCE

PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

For four years the Pictorial Family Magazine has been before the American public, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Publisher to know, that his efforts to do good through its medium, have met with the universal approbation of the public & the public prints, wherever it has found its way. It is now too firmly established upon the broad foundation of public confidence, to require a great flourish of trumpets to proclaim its continued existence, or the tricks of 'puffery' to allure the people to its support.

To those who are acquainted with the Magazine, it is unnecessary to speak of its design & merits; to these who are not, we will make a brief statement of both. The original design of this work was a noble one, and worthy of all praise. It was intended as a vehicle for conveying solid information to that class of citizens whose circumstances denied them the privilege of drinking abundantly

POET'S CORNER.

THE CONTRAST.

I have sought round the verdant earth,
For unfading joy;
I have tried ev'ry source of mirth,
But all, all will cloy.
Lord, bestow on me,
Grace to set the spirit free;
Thine the praise shall be;
Mine, mine the joy.

I have wandered in mazes dark,
Of doubt and distress,
I have had not a kindling spark,
My spirit to bless;
Cheerless unbelief,
Fill'd my laboring soul with grief,
What shall give relief?
What shall give peace?

I then turned to thy Gospel, Lord,
From folly away,
I then trusted thy holy word,
That taught me to pray,
Here I found release.
Weary spirit here found rest,
Hope of endless bliss,
Eternal day.

I'm a pilgrim and stranger here,
In this world of woe,
But my Savior is always near,
As onward I go;
Jesus is my friend,
He'll be with me to the end,
And from foes defend,
My spirits cheer.

I have heard my Redeemer say
His promise is sure,
He has bid me to watch and pray,
All hardness endure;
Jesus be my guide,
In thy promise I'll confide,
Keep me near thy side,
My life, my way.

I will praise now my Heavenly King,
I'll praise and adore;
The heart's richest tribute bring
To thee, God of power;
And in heaven above,
Saved by thy redeeming love,
Loud the strains shall move,
Forevermore.

Hallelujah through Heaven will ring,
Salvation the theme,
Glory, honor and praise, we'll sing.
To God and the Lamb;
Crowns of glory wear,
Palms of victory we shall bear,
Shouts of triumph there,
Never shall end.

Strictures, &c.

NO, II.

What is termed the Restrictive Rule of the Constitution is embraced in the seventh section of Article ten, and reads; "No rule shall be passed to abolish an efficient itinerant ministry, or to authorize the Annual Conference to station their ministers and preachers longer than three years, successively, in the same circuit, and two years, successively, in the same station."

The design of the convention in the passage evidently, was, to institute and perpetuate an efficient itinerant ministry in the Methodist Protestant Church, and to prevent forever the introduction of settled pastorates, or any other species of congregationalism. The members of the convention appear to have been fully satisfied, that an itinerancy was essential to our success; and, that as it had succeeded in England under Mr. Wesley's single-handed administration, and under the aristocracy of his hundred successors, and also, in this country under the Methodist hierarchy, termed the Methodist Episcopal Church, that it could be made much more efficient under a representative form of church government, where all interests of the church are blended, and the entire fellowship participates, by their delegates, in the business of the several departments, legislative, executive and judicial. They were also of the opinion, that, while itinerancy can be made available under any kind of government, from a pure despotism up to that of a representative form, it cannot be made to amalgamate with congregationalism, or a system of settled pastorates. That the latter by drawing off the best talents and acquirements to the wealthier stations, and circuits, would leave the poorer parts of the work to be supplied by men of much inferior grade and attainments, and thus deprive them of what their heavenly Father never does, the passing rounds of the fruitful showers, or in other words, the advantages of a free circulation of ministerial services, by all grades of ministers.

The Restrictive Rule consists of two parts.—First; "No rule shall be passed to abolish an efficient itinerant ministry." Had the rule stopped here, it would have been indefinite,—and could have been easily evaded, both by the General and Annual Conferences, and would not have protected our itinerancy.

The second part of the Restrictive Article forbids the passage of any rule, "to authorize the Annual Conferences to station their ministers and preachers longer than three years, successively, in the same circuit, and two years, successively, in the same station." This addition perfected the rule—gave it a definite character—effectually prevents all evasions, and secures the great design of the convention, namely, the perpetuity of an efficient itinerancy, to the exclusion of every species of congregationalism.—And yet, the more effectually to secure the contemplated objects, the convention placed the rule among the items of the Constitution which are unalterable, except by a subsequent General Convention, called for the special purpose, by two thirds of the whole number of the Annual Conferences, next preceding the General Conference.

Imperious circumstances led the convention to adopt the itinerant system in preference to all others, and to make it permanent. From our personal knowledge of the members, and thorough acquaintance with the views which influenced their action, we have no hesitancy in saying, that no other system for the spread of the gospel could have found favor with the convention for a single hour.

And what were those circumstances which so powerfully influenced the minds of the brethren?

1st. The lay-members of the convention were all Methodist, deeply imbued with the Wesleyan views of the great utility and superior advantages of a periodical interchange of ministers; & and, believed, that tho' the minutia of our itinerant system could not be clearly made out from the Scriptures, yet, the great and leading principle is taught by our Lord, and made obligatory in his last commission to his disciples: "Go into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature," &c. Several of the ministerial members of the convention had spent the prime of life in the itinerant service, and were practically convinced of its superiority over every other system for the propagation of the gospel, and ingathering of souls. Their education, judgement, will and affections all tended to itinerancy. The local ministers, of whom many were present, were so fully persuaded in their own minds, that an efficient itinerancy was essential to our success. that to secure it, they voluntarily gave up their right to seats in the Annual Conferences, conferred on them by the conventional articles, for the purpose of establishing an itinerancy which would not be in danger of breaking down by its own weight, or be susceptible of perversion by designing men.

Here then we have the character and views of the men who constituted our general convention. They were trained in the Methodist school—were convinced by palpable facts that itinerancy is the best mode of extending the gospel and saving sinners—and were actuated by no other motives than a sincere design to promote the glory of God, by employing the best means for the accomplishment of the best ends.

This, we say, was one imposing circumstance. To have presented to a body of men, similarly influenced, a system of settled pastorates would have been presumptious and absurd in the extreme. The state of the vote on the final passage of the Restrictive Rule sufficiently shews the decidedly itinerant character of the convention. The affirmative vote was thirty-two and the negative five.

2. Another circumstance which influenced the convention to adopt the itinerant system, was the settled belief that with any other, it would be impossible to compete with our persecuting mother, the Methodist Episcopal Church, whose itinerancy covered the length and breadth of the land. To have met her with a congregational system of settled pastorates, in the hope of sustaining ourselves in the presence of her hosts of itinerant preachers, who could be constantly changed to meet all circumstances, and who had preoccupancy of the entire field, and had succeeded in training the community at large to expect from Methodists a periodical change of ministers, would have been silly and futile, in the extreme. The impression was general in the convention, that nothing less than an efficient itinerancy could justify us in the hope of sustaining ourselves, in a competition with the Meth. Episcopal Church.

3. Another circumstance which influenced the convention, was, the received and acknowledged opinion, that an itinerant ministry, would be the most certain to make the Methodist Protestant Church extensively useful, as an evangelical church of Christ, and of propagating the righteous, scriptural and equitable principles which lay at the foundation of our church government. This opinion of the brethren has been fully sustained by subsequent facts. Our church has been enabled to compete with the Methodist Episcopal Church—has falsified the predictions of her enemies—has met the most sanguine expectations of her friends—has been extensively useful—and stands high in the estimation of the citizens of these U. States, as possessing an economy, scriptural, evangelical and republican.

4. The last circumstance we shall bring into view as having influenced the mind of the convention, is, that the associated Methodist Churches who sent the members to prepare for them a Constitution and Discipline, expected the convention to adopt an efficient itinerant system. Had that body adopted a system of settled pastorates, their work would have been indignantly rejected, and their system cast to the moles and the bats.

The above were the principal circumstances which influenced the general convention to adopt the itinerant system in preference to every other. And these still have their weight in the minds of the great body of our brethren. Our people are still Methodists, and have, with very few exceptions, a preference for its itinerancy, especially, one which mingles the laity with the preachers in all the business of the Annual Conferences, and equally divides the powers of the General Conference between the laymen and the ministers. We still have to compete with the colossal power and itinerancy of the Meth. Episcopal Church, who has lost no portion of her antipathy to lay representation. We still desire to employ the best means to secure the best ends—that which will enable us to do the most good.—And the great body of our people are yet averse to congregationalism in any of its phases.

Moreover something is due to the character and sacrifices of the men who composed the general convention, especially to our unstationed brethren who voluntarily gave up their seats in the Annual Conferences for the sake of securing an efficient and permanent itinerancy, which regards them as assistant ministers and co-laborers in the Methodist Protestant Church. It cannot be expected that they will tamely submit to the introduction of settled pastorates, which can have no feeling or fellowship with them. If they contributed to the elevation of itinerant ministers, that class of men may rest assured, that the unstationed ministers will not stand by and see their order sacrificed, but will reclaim their waived rights, and come up to the rescue, and buckle on again the armour for another contest with itinerant assumptions. The unstationed ministers have already witnessed a breach of good faith on the part of itinerants. In the general convention it was proposed to pass a rule which should require the several elective colleges to return an equal number of stationed and unstationed ministers as nearly as possible, as the ministerial representation to the General Conference from their respective Annual Conferences. After considerable discussion, however, it was agreed that the object contemplated by the proposed rule should be obtained by an understanding, that all the elective colleges should make such returns. But, with the exception of the Maryland Annual Conference, this understanding has been disregarded, and the plighted faith of the convention repudiated. This breach of good faith has opened the eyes of the unstationed ministers, and will urge them to look well to the designs and movements of certain itinerant advocates of settled pastorates. Some persons affect to dispise the efforts of the unstationed ministers, but it would be well for such to recollect, that those very men, while in bondage in the Methodist Episcopal Church, by the power of their pens shook her to her centre, and secured to the Methodist Protestant Church her Constitution—her itinerancy—and her admirable system of mutual rights. If they accomplish thus much under the restrictions of the "gag law," what may they not effect, in a church where all such restraints are removed? They have no wish to produce excitement in our church, but the real agitators will see, that these men are not disposed tamely to witness their covenanted rights invaded, and their order sacrificed, for the agrandizement of a few tired itinerants.

Do our lay members wish to see the Methodist Protestant Church agitated with unprofitable questions? We believe they do not. And we know these discussions are doing great injury.—We know of some members who withhold all contributions for building new churches, lest they should become settled pastorates. Others we are told of, who wish to make handsome bequests to the superannuated funds, but are deterred by the settled pastorate question. And we know several excellent members, who declare that if this question cannot be put to rest, they will leave the Methodist Protestant Church, and seek a resting place where peace and quietude can be obtained, and where things are on a stable foundation.

We cannot but admire the wisdom and foresight of the members of the general convention. We now see the great value of the Restrictive Rule. It stands between us and ruin. It is now the avowed design of certain itinerant ministers to introduce a system of settled pastorates, and they employ every specious argument within their knowledge to render this rule odious, believing, that if it were repealed, there is nothing in the way of their obtaining in due time a "snug little harbor," a resting place full of all good things, from which they "could not be removed, but by the voice of the society." A few years past certain persons were of the opinion, that the Restrictive Rule never would be repealed.—They then had recourse to the untenable doctrine of permanent home mission, and operated upon this notion until some of them, after worming themselves into the affections of certain of the membership, have found that they and their adherents are unchurched. This scheme of evasion having failed to accomplish the purposes of its advocates, they now appear disposed to rally their forces for a direct, renewed attack on the Constitution, hoping to break down the only barrier which stands between them and the "glorious heritage" of a settled pastorate.

An Affecting Account

Of a Young Man brought to Ruin and an Untimely Death by Gambling.

The day passed away, and there was no game introduced except poker and brag. The doctor was invited to play several times, but always objected. Mr. T. inquired of him why he did not play. 'Oh, to tell you the truth,' said the Doctor, 'I am in the habit of playing so high at those games—I bet so high on so small hands, that those young players would never win a pot or anty.' 'Well,' said T., 'sit down and play and we will run the risk of your running us off.' The Doctor complied with the invitation, and had not been seated long before Mr. T. bet twenty dollars; the doctor observed it was hard, but he was bound to bet him about four hundred better.—'Well,' said T., 'take it.' C. was standing and looking on, and thought that if it had been himself in place of T., he would have taken the other up. T. then showed three aces. 'Oh,' said the Doctor, 'that was very good.' And upon the Doctor's showing his hand, it appeared that he had only one pair of kings. and this satisfied C., that he himself was a better player than T., for if he had had his hand he would have called the Doctor. They continued to play for some time, the Doctor winning of his opponent quite frequently; and when he had won some two or three hundred dollars, T. asked C. to play his hand a few minutes, when, in a very short time, C. made a bet and the Doctor staked three hundred better. C. called and beat him. The Doctor asked him to let him see his hand, when C. laid down three aces. 'Good!' exclaimed the Doctor, and C. pocketing the money, seemed very much elated at the success he had met with. The game soon closed, and T. was loud in his praises of the young man's success, and said that he would soon make a first rate player.

That night T. asked the Doctor to play faro for them; this he agreed to do after supper, and for this purpose took them into his state-room, where, for the first time in his life, the young man witnessed that fascinating mode of gaming. He was very much delighted with the game, the box, the instrument itself, the beautiful checks, &c. T. took some of the dollar checks and bet, and occasionally some of the five dollar checks, and played all the evening; and when the Doctor closed the game, T. was two or three hundred dollars winner. 'Well,' said the Doctor, 'friend T., you have been too much for me this evening,' and paying him the amount of his winnings, he added "Never mind, I will make you pay for this shortly." When they left the state-room C. was taking with T., and congratulating him upon his good fortune. 'Oh yes,' he replied, 'but we will play to-morrow, and perhaps he will win the whole of it back,' charging C., at the same time, not to say any thing about their playing in the state-room, least some should think they were gamblers. 'Never fear,' said C., 'that I am going to speak of any thing that would make people think unfavorably of us.' And at his request, Mr. T. proceeded to give him a description of a gambler, that he might be on his guard against such persons.—'They will sometimes,' said he, 'when they are in groups by themselves, try to assume the character of gentlemanly sportsmen. These men cheat in every possible way, when they play at cards, and if they cannot by this way get your money from you, they will not hesitate, if an oppportunity occurs, to pick your pockets; and if your money is in such a situation that it is not convenient to get hold of it, (that is, if you have it tied round you) the greater part of them will not stick to knock you down and take it from you; so you see that you ought never to form any acquaintance without an introduction by some particular friend.'—'Well,' said C., 'indeed I had no idea that there was such a bad race of beings upon earth; it is true, father told me that I should always be on my guard against that class of men, but he never told me in what way I might be able to designate them; pray tell me, Mr. T., what causes these men to be so bad—is it necessity?' 'Oh no,' said he, 'many of them have been well raised, had pious parents; some of them, perhaps married against their parents' will; others would be set up by their parents in business, and by some bad management would fail, and to elude the grasp of their creditors, would leave their native place, and attach themselves to this desperate class of sportsmen, or gamblers. But the most of them, perhaps, are misled through vanity. You may see some twenty of these young men in company together, all of them fine looking, and of sprightly minds, and good sense; and if you enquire more particularly, you will find their history to be something like this:—They had all the opportunities, in their young days, of becoming ornaments to society; but in many respects had acted badly, and disobeyed their parents, and being prepossessing in their appearance, and connected with families of respectability, wealth and influence, they were generally admired, but particularly by females of a questionable character: and being self-willed and self-confident, they would pay little or no attention to the remonstrances of their friends against this kind of company, but would take their own way, until they would become so addicted to bad habits and associations, that their parents, as well as other people, would so far lose confidence in them, that they would not dare to trust them; while they would probably have other brothers not half as well calculated to do well as themselves, but owing to the correctness of their deportment, would enjoy the confidence of their parents, and could get any amount of credit they might wish for. They go on from one degree of depravity to another, until their parents (no matter how strong their affections for them may be) feel themselves bound to discard them, or let them remain and ruin the rest of the family, and render them penniless in their old age. Under these trying circumstances, what can they do but to tell him that they are bound to let him shift for himself. He now, perhaps, seeks consolation by telling the story of his misfortunes to his mistress, who, he confidently believes will sympathise with him, and only be the more devoted to him in consequence of it. He soon learns, however, that he has a rival in her affections; and the next thing is, that she (with hollow professions of pity for his condition,) discards him also. His situation he now feels to be a very desolate one.—His education, if he has one, will be of no service to him, for no person has sufficient reliance in his steadiness and integrity, to be willing to give him employment, and having no trade, he feels himself driven, almost as a matter of necessity, to throw himself into that class of persons called gamblers, and soon becomes as desperately bad as the worst of them.'

C. replied, that such persons were greatly to be pitied. 'Oh,' said Mr. T., with an air of perfect indifference, 'we have no need to trouble ourselves about other men's evil doings. But tell me,' he continued, 'is not that game of faro a very pretty one?' 'Yes,' said C., 'I am so delighted with it, that I have thought that I would venture to bet some myself the next time it is played.'

On the following day the Doctor 'opened' for them, and T. 'changed' (that is, took checks) to the amount of a hundred dollars, and commenced playing. C. also desired to do so, but T. told him that he would rather he would not, and upon C.'s insisting, T. finally gave him some twenty dollars worth, and requested him to bet for him. This pleased the young man very much; he loved the excitement of betting, and having played for some time, he found himself some fifty dollars winner. T., in the meantime, getting out of checks, borrowed some of C., whose bank appeared to be much better than his own; so that at the end of the game, C. had won not less than two hundred dollars for Mr. T. Having succeeded so admiriably, the young man flattered himself that he was perfectly conversant with the game, and determined that when the Doctor opened again, he would play upon his own responsibility.

The Doctor opened for them the third time, and C. changed to the amount of fifty to try his luck, T. endeavored to persuade him not, but he refused to take his advice; he played on, and won, at the close of the game he came off some twenty-five dollars winner. The Doctor gave him the money for the checks; but C. insisted upon his playing on, that he would give him a chance of winning his money back. The Doctor excused himself by telling him that he was tired. In this game T. was a loser to a small amount. After the game was over, 'Well,' said T. 'you would bet would you?' 'Certainly,' 'replied C.' 'and you see that I was right.' 'There is nothing like nerve,' said the other, 'and I see you have plenty of it: but mind, you cannot say that I ever persuaded you to play.' 'Oh, certainly not,' said C. He then went and locked himself up in his room, and studied the principles of the game of faro, and finally concluded that he was quite able to beat the man who dealt the game.

The next time the Doctor opened, C. changed his money for checks, and commenced betting in a new way, which he felt sure could not fail to prove successful. His plan was this: to bet one check, and if he lost that he would bet two, and if he lost them, bet four, and so on, continually doubling his bet; so that, on this plan, whenever he would win, he would get back all that he had lost, and one dollar over. This plan he adopted, but kept it a secret from T., for fear he might fail, and that then T. would laugh at him.—He and the Doctor played some two or three hours, and C. found himself winner some twenty-five dollars. The Doctor opened every day, and at the end of each sitting, C. had the satisfaction to find that he had come off winner, though the amounts were small.

By this time they had nearly reached New Orleans, and thus far the young man was very much pleased with his trip. When they arrived at the city, Mr. T. observed to him that the slaves had not yet arrived, and as their baggage was aboard of the boat, which was going to remain in port some ten days, he thought that it would be as well for them to stay on the boat as long as she was in port. To this proposal C. readily assented; the Doctor, however, left the boat with his servant, and took lodgings in the city.—C. was very much pleased with New Orleans; he was delighted particularly with the theatres, balls, and other amusements which he attended in company with Miss Amelia; and the more so, as he had been for some time deprived of her company, in consequence of her having been quite ill.

Not having seen the Doctor for some time, he finally asked T. what had become of him. T. replied that he had been occupied by a great deal of company, but that he was aboard of the boat that morning to see them, and had left cards for them to call and see him at B———'s arcade. 'Suppose we go and see him,' said T. 'Certainly,' was the reply. They accordingly made their call on the Doctor, who professed to be much gratified at seeing them, 'For,' said he, 'I have been so engaged in business that I have not been able to indulge myself in a single game of faro since I left you.—'Well,' said T., we have no objection to gratify you for a short time.' The Doctor produced his apparatus as usual, and the game went forward. Sometimes C. would be one or two hundred dollars loser, but would continue to double his bets until he would get even again. T. observed, 'I think, young man, you bet rather high. 'Oh no,' said C., 'I do not think so.' They played all that afternoon, and C., as usual, was winner to a small amount. That evening they retired and renewed their betting; but they had not been engaged long before T. said that he had some business down stairs, but told C. to play on and he would soon be back. C. bet on and lost, and continued to double his bets until his bet amounted to five hundred dollars; he lost that also, and then bet one thousand dollars. Here the Doctor requested him to put up the amount. 'Certainly,' said he, and pulled out his roll of money and payed the Doctor the amount of his losings, and put up the thousand dollars besides; and having lost that, likewise, he put up two thousand, and losing this, he put up four thousand, and lost that: and telling the Doctor to hold on, he pulled out eight thousand dollars, and at that moment the negro servant said that Mr. T. was coming, when C. caught up the money and crammed it into his pocket, begging the Doctor for God's sake, he would not tell Mr. T. that they had been playing any higher than usual. T. came in and they were both very calm. 'Well boys,' said he, 'how do you make it?' 'Oh, about even,' replied C. T. observed, 'I wish to see you on some private business, so come with me.' They walked out of the room on the gallery of the arcade, when T. said, 'I have a proposition to make to you. There is a friend of mine in Texas that wishes to purchase our negroes on four months' credit, and if I can purchase yours of you, I will take the responsibility on myself, and I will pay you the cash for your half. and will also give you five thousand dollars profit, and then you will have the use of your money the length of time that will intervene before you will have to lift your bond; and you may purchase sugar here and ship it home, and make perhaps five thousand dollars more.' This C. thought was a good offer, and accordingly accepted it. T. then counted out to him some twenty-five or twenty-six thousand dollars, observing, that as soon as the negroes arrived, he would go with his friend to Texas, and that he should remain and amuse himself in the city until his return. He then left C., telling him that he had some business to attend to, and advised him to go and see the Doctor, and that he would call for him as he came back.

The young man called at the Doctor's room, who was sitting as unconcerned, apparently, as if nothing had happened.—C. insisted on his 'opening' again. He did so, and C. being now amply supplied with cash, bet large sums on the game, and in a short time found himself loser to the amount of several thousand dollars more, and was very much excited, when T. was heard coming in, who said, 'Excuse me Mr. C., but I wish you to go down to the vessel—she has arrived with the negroes.'

Poor C. now began to feel the smart of the gambling-table, and particularly the faro. He now felt how greatly he had erred in not obeying the advice of his parents. He was no less than twenty thousand dollars loser in the course of a few hours. He had carefully abstained from letting T. know anything of his losings. He had only one remaining hope, and that was, that he would get the Doctor to play for him, and that perhaps by this means he would win his money back again.

TO THE AFFLICTED, READ AND BE WISE.

ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegitable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. A large number of certificates, from those cured by the use of the Vegitable Ointment, could be given in proof of its virtues, but it is deemed unnecessary.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the modo of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisnness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle, & full of health, life, and vigor. TRIBUTE TO J. Q. ADAMS.

BY GRACE GREENWOOD.

It was never our fortune to look on the face of the venerable Adams, though from earliest childhood, he has been the object of our most enthusiastic hero-wosrhip; but we well remember having seen many years ago, a fine portrait of him, and the emotions which it called forth, written down as they arose in our mind. Will our readers pardon a brief extract from this youthful poem:—

Aye, there he stands, as he hath often stood,
Unawed, unbowed, before the multitnde;
Firm and erect, with purpose strong and high,
Right on his lip, and freedom in his eye!
As ocean's King slow rises from the deep,
When wildest storms across its bosom sweep,
And awes the waves to silence—thus he rose,
When faction's tempests did around him close,
Thus calm he stood, tho' storms with storms combined,
And stretched his sceptre o'er the sea of mind.

Methinks from those closed lips must come the voice,
That oft hath bade the patriot's heart rejoice—
That filled the traitor's craven soul with dread,
And hurled a scathing curse upon his head!
That wondrous voice—methinks I hear it now—
Its accents rich and clear, yet soft and low,
As is the murmur of a summer stream,
Or home's sweet song heard in an exile's dream.
The theme is changed—that voice now stronger, higher,
Pours from his lips in words of living fire!
Blazing with light, scorching with heat intense,
A lava flood of matchless eloquence!
The tones that late the listener bent to hear,
Now sound and ring upon the startled ear,
Like to the clang of arms, the clarion's cry,
Or Heaven's own thunder pealing from the sky!

Thou veteran statesman, and thou patriot sage!
How from thy country's proud historic page.
Gleams out thy name in lines of living light—
Last of the stars that lit her early night!
Where e'er thy glorious deeds have borne thy name,
Thy meed hath been no vain and dying fame,
Praise, honor, 'love' are thine—should more be given,
It were the worship only due to Heaven.
We know full well that even to the end,
Thine upright soul can neither swerve nor bend;
That thou wilt yet live out thy life's brief span,
The noblest pattern of an 'honest man,'
Then sink to slumber, peacetul, dreamless, sweet,
Enwrapt in glory as a winding-sheet!
Nor all of thee, Oh christian Sage, shall rest,
Folded to sleep on earth's maternal breast,—
The living 'soul' whose light once lit the world,
Shall then, upon its starry wing unfurled,
Away from earth, unclogged, unclouded, rise,
When "well done!" peals in pœans from the skies!
And he who earth's dark paths with pure heart trod,
Shall in the light of Heaven behold his God!

The Church of the Clergy--The Church of the People---The Church of both the Ministry and the People.

CONCLUDED.

The tenth edition of the Discipline of the M. Episcopal Church has "Explanatory Notes, by Thomas Coke and Francis Asbury," who, it is stated in an Advertisement, "were desired by the preceding General Conference to draw up these Annotations on the Form of Discipline and to publish them with the present edition." The Book was printed at Philadelphia A. D. 1798.

In their first Note on "The Origin of the M. Episcopal Church," the two bishops say, "It cannot be needful in this country, to vindicate the right of every Christian Society, to possess within itself, all the privileges necessary or expedient for the comfort, instruction, or good government of the members thereof." p. 6. But the bishops did not permit the societies to have one word to say in the construction of the government of the Methodist Episcopal Church; nor did they deem it "needful in this country," the freedom of which had just been achieved, "to vindicate" their "right" to construct a government independently of the societies. In so doing, they subverted, in their church, the first principles of religious liberty and the liberties of civil society.—The principles of the Revolution, and on which the Constitution of the States, and their Confederation, were founded, and the bishop's church, were diametrically opposed, and ever have been. The religious freedom obtained for themselves by American citizens, were denied to them as Methodists by the bishops. In fact and in principle the government of the Methodist Episcopal Church is irreconcilable with the liberties of the country. This is saying a great deal. It is true. Mr. Asbury good and exceedingly useful as he was, had ever been a high prerogative ruler. Dr. Coke was a British subject, filled with authority, as he said, by appointment of Mr. Wesley. In their Notes, the bishops declare, "that nothing has been introduced into Methodism, by the present form of episcopal government, which was not before fully exercised by Mr. Wesley." In another Note they say, "Mr. Wesley, as the venerable founder (under God.) of the whole Methodist Society, governed without any responsibility whatever." Again, "Mr. Wesley had the entire management of al the Conference funds and the produce of the books." This is exactly correct. Mr. Wesley never had more than full powers to make rules and regulations; he never possessed more than the sources of these full powers, which were in himself, nor had he more than the means of sustaining his authority—to wit; the money, the pulpits, and the press. Nothing beyond these were appropriated by the bishops to themselves; nor any thing less.—Whatever co-ordinate powers they conceded to the itinerant preachers were in the nature of grants. So with the privileges of the societies, they likewise were grants.—The preachers, in point of fact, enjoy little in their own right—the people, nothing. So it is to this day. All of the local preachers, exhorters, stewards, class-leaders, and private male members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, were it practicable, (with their consent,) to gather them in one assemblage, could not put a letter in the book nor take a letter from it—nor appoint a single representative of the hundreds of thousands, to act for them. Were the bishops present, they could in all good conscience affirm to the people, "We are not accountable for our acts to you. Mr. Wesley was not accountable to the societies—he did not derive his authority from them—nor do we derive any authority from you—we derived our authority from Mr. Wesley." "Nothing has been introduced into the present episcopal plan which was not fully exercised by Mr. Wesley." How self-deceived were the bishops. Mr. Wesley never founded a church. His societies were not churches, or a church, and this he declared again and again. He also declared that "So far as I governed the societies, it was at their own entreaty." This Messrs. Coke and Asbury never said—nor could say. Here are mighty differences in relations. The Methodist clergy church was founded in a free country on false principles; to prove this assertion we need not go to the Scriptures; which were we to do, we should find enough to condemn all the fallible wisdom and fallible wills of all who have constituted churches of the clergy! Churches of the clergy!! A Protestant church of the clergy!!! No wonder that there have been secessions—no marvel should there be more. No wonder there has been one grand division, no marvel should there be others of less importance. The great geographical division of Episcopal Methodism, affected by ministers only, was legally consummated. It was done by a law of the General Conference, composed only of bishops and ministers. To the North the law said, "you shall," and to the South it said "you shall." The people were at home uninformed. Behold the force of combination in the dominant clergy of the clergy church! See the nothingness of the people. Since then many double-fisted ministers have been seen both North and South. Thanks to the civil law, physical force has been inexpedient. There has certainly been too much of a disposition on both sides to fight.

These lawful sayings of "We will" and "you shall," have caused several secessions from the original Methodist clergy church in England, as well as in the United States. The statistics of secedent bodies in the United States, the editor can give if he pleases.

Some Notice of the English Secessions—and their present condition, showing how Churches of the Ministry and the People are succeeding.

THE METHODIST NEW CONNEXION.

This was formed by a secession in 1797.—"The following particulars are gathered from the Minutes of the fifty-first Annual Conference of the Ministers and Lay Representatives of this Body, held at Hanley, (Eng.) on the 24th day of May, &c., 1847; W. Burrows, President; E. W. Makinson, Secretary. Chapels in England, 277; Ireland, 15; Canada, 35; total, 327.—Societies: England, 298; Ireland, 19; Canada, 262; total, 579.—In England; Circuit preachers, 79; Local preachers. 705.—Ireland, Missionaries, 12; Canada. 59.—Members; England, 15,236; Ireland 352; Canada, 3,201; total, 19,289. Funds of the connexion; amounts for the year ending May, 1847: Yearly collections for relieving distressed circuits, £1,671; Paternal fund for children, £1,602; Benificent fund, for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans, £2,473; Mission fund, £3,324; Chapel fund, £1,788; Book Room account, £2,933. Besides which there appears to have been an extraordinary effort made during the year, under the name of the Jubilee fund, by which £20,000 was raised. The connexion published a monthly Magazine, and a small Magazine for children. In a connexion of 19.289, there was raised the last year over $135,000.

The Methodist New Connexion and the Wesleyan Methodists have fratornized. The Rev. Jabez Bunting, the leader of the Wesleyans, preached the opening sermon at the last Conference of the former body. They have not united, but they have lately come into amity.

THE BIBLE CHRISTIAN CONNEXION.

This body of secedent Methodists date from 1815. At the Twenty-ninth Annual Conference of the Ministers and Representatives of this denomination, commencing June 28, 1847, the following statistics were presented:—

Stations, Preachers, Members, &c.
Stations, or Circuits occupied,	67
Chapels,	391
Itinerant Ministers,	125
Local Preachers,	426
Persons meeting in Societies,	13,553

Missionaries Employed.

They have a Book Room and School.

In answer to the question, "What is the spiritual state of the connexion?" it is said, "We heartily rejoice that the members of the churches appear generally to feel deeply interested in the cause of God, display much christian affection to their ministers, liberally support our institutions, live in peace & harmony, & are zealous by striving to extend the kingdom of God." It is acknowledged that there are causes for deep humiliation, in view of a small decrease.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CONNEXION.

This dates from about 1818, and denies being a secession. The founders were thrust out, for alleged irregular proceedings. At the Twenty-eighth Annual Conference, the following was reported as the state of the connexion numerically:—The number of Members, including the Home and Foreign Missions, 86,795; Travelling preachers, 502; Local preachers, 7,840; Leaders, 5,339; Connexional Chapels, 1,421; Rented Chapels, &c., 3,340; Sunday Schools, 1,069; Children taught in Sabbath Schools, 83,566; Gratuitous Teachers, 15,041.

WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION.

Formed in 1834. From the Minutes of the Twelfth Annual Assembly of the Representatives of this Association held in July 1847, the following statements are selected:—

Itinerant Preachers and Missionaries, 97; Local Preachers, 1,001; Leaders, 1,365; Members in Society, 20,105; Members on trial, 1,111: Chapels, 316; Preaching places, Rooms, &c., 215; Sunday Schools, 328; Sun. School Teachers, 6,391; Sunday School Scholars, 41,550.

The Association has a Book Room in London; and publishes a Monthly Magazine; besides standard works and occasional publications.

From the London "Patriot" of November 22, 1847, we copy the following:

The Number of Chapels in England & Wales.

	England.	Wales.
Wesleyan Connexion, say,	3,000	469
Methodist New Connexion,	277
Wesleyan Association,	316	6
Primitive Methodists,	1,421	12
Bible Christians,	391
Independent Methodists,	50
	5,455	487
Total in Eng. and Wales,		5942

So that the Wesleyan Connexion which has existed for a century has not near a third more chapels than the other recent Methodist bodies.—So much for representative systems.

"This is, indeed, says the Patriot, an astonishing fructification from the first Methodist Society formed by John Wesley in 1739,—little more than a hundred years ago. At the last Conference which Mr. Wesley attended in 1790, there were reported only 295 preachers and 71,668 members. From that parent stock all the other Methodist connexions have sprung, and the aggregate numbers in society, including those in the colonies and the foreign stations, is now upwards of 609,000. The whole of these 6,000 chapels have sprung up since the middle of the last century; and by far the greater part within the last thirty or forty years. And all these places of worship have been built and maintained by the voluntary contributions chiefly of the middle and poorer classes. Call it the voluntary principle, or the principle of Methodism, or the religious principle, it must be a principle of wondrous social power which has so vigorously struck its roots and developed itself in such results." In the United States every thing is dependant on the voluntary principle. What an example to the world! Representation and the voluntary principle cannot always be kept separated even by the Methodist Episcopal brethren, they will not forever be governed without their consent. S.

LETTER FROM DR. WRIGHT, AUGUST 26, 1847.

This is a year of judgments. It is now some weeks since locusts made their appearance in this province, and the devastation which they have committed in some places is truly wonderful. They have so completely destroyed the wheat in some fields, that reapers have left them in despair, weeping aloud. Fortunately, however, the wheat had so far ripened in most parts of this province upon their arrival, that they have not done much harm to it. They have fed here mostly upon cotton and grass, fields of which they have in many cases swept clean.

It is a fact worthy of observation, that the locusts first appeared this year in the neighborhood of Tiflis, where the cholera originated. They also, like the cholera, advanced gradually in this direction, appearing at Erivan, Khoy, Salmas and Orooniah successvely. At the former places, the ruin occasioned by them was much greater than at the latter, as they appeared there earlier in the season when wheat, barley and other kinds of grain were green, and more palatable to them.

All clases, Mussulmans and Christians, regarded the locusts as a judgment from God; and now that another more fearful judgment is added, many stand in awe and tremble. May the voice of God, repeated once and again, be heard in the land and may men be led to turn from their sins.

[In a subsequent letter, dated Seir, September 29, Dr. Wright gives the following account of the dreadful ravages of the cholera at Oroomiah.]

Last month we wrote you briefly, announcing the appearance of that fearful pestilence, the cholera, in Oroomiah. It is now our painful duty to inform you that our most serious apprehensions at that time as to the fatality of the disease have been more than realized. For about ten days it went over the city like wild-fire, and laid hold of its victims with almost unparalleled violence. It is estimated that four hundred died in a single day. It penetrated every ward, every street, and nearly every house. For a time, the ordinary routine of business was broken up, and the mass of the people were occupied with their sick and dead. So many were falling victims to the disease, and its aspect was so fearful, that terror was stamped on every countenance, and every one was in momentary expectation of being attacked. In some cases every member of a family was swept off in the course of a few days, and the house was left desolate. Such a panic prevailed at one time, that the people fled from the dead, who were left one or two days in their place just as they breathed their last. The mosques and places of prayer were thronged, and congregations often assembled in the Bazar to listen to the exhortations of the Mollahs.—Great multitudes spent night after night upon the house-tops, crying aloud to God, that he would have mercy on the ill-fated city.

Some of the higher classes left the town and sought a more salubrious atmosphere in the country around, though there was no general dispersion of the mass of the population. The influence of the Mollahs was decidedly against it. One of his class, who is held in great veneration by the Mussulmans for his piety, was asked one day by a poor man in great terror, whether it was well to flee at such a time. "Yes," replied the Molah, "flee by all means, and without delay." "Where do you advise one to flee," asked the poor man. "Flee to God, and there you will be safe," was the reply.

No accurate estimate of the number of deaths by cholera in the city has yet been made. We have no doubt, however, that four thousand, and perhaps more, have fallen victims to it. The estimate of the native population reaches as high as five or six thousand. It is supposed that the whole number of inhabitants in the place varies not far from twenty-five thousand.

Shortly after the appearance of the pestilence in the city, it began to spread in the villages on the plain, few of which were exempt from its ravages. In some of them its violence was terrible. In one village, thirteen persons were cut off in a single house in the course of two or three days. The father and two small children are all that remain. In Geog Tapa, twenty-three persons have died, which is not a great mortality for that village. But as three deaths occurred the first day of the appearance of the disease in the place, the greatest panic was spread among the people, and they flocked in crowds to the places for preaching and prayer. Our native helpers, Priest Abraham, John and Moses, were all here, and were continually engaged in preaching the gospel at morning and evening prayers in the church, in private houses at night, among the crowds that gathered around the sick and dying, and at the grave at the time of burial. One of them remarked that every day seemed like a Sabbath, such solemnity pervaded the people, and so much time was spent in prayer & preaching.

We now hear of only an occasionol death in the town, and the disease appears to have spent its force throughout the province.

We have occasion this year, as we had last, to record the singular goodness of God in watching over our missionary circle during this time of trial. He has most richly fulfilled to us his promise, that "when thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest thro' the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee."

The Nestorians have shared largely in the ravages of this fearful malady, though, but few immediately connected with the mission have been removed by it. One young man, employed in the printing office, was early cut down, and his loss is a serious one to us. He was the most valuable workman in the office, and his influence upon his companions, and upon the people of the village where he resided, was of the most salutary kind. We have long regarded him as one of the most interesting Christians among this people. He was humble and gentle in his manners, blameless in his life, and, though a man of few words, an earnest disciple of the Savior. He was also a respectable scholar, well acquainted with the Scriptures, and very competent to preach the gospel. Being a deacon, he often exercised his gifts among the people of his village, and much to their satisfaction and profit.

One of the girls of Miss Fisk's school died in Gog Tapa, and also one of the boys of one of the village schools in that place. In the death of these two scholars we have hope. They had given very satisfactory evidence for some time, that they loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and desired to do his will. It is a painful thought, that while thousands in so short a time have been hurried in eternity, so few probably were at all prepared to meet the great change.

The cholera has prevailed also at Tabreez, though its mortality appears not to have been so great as in Oroomiah in proportion to the population of the place. It is said that four thousand, the same number as estimated in Oroomiah, have fallen there, while the population is probably nearly four times as great. The general dispersion of the people from that city, upon the first approach of the pestilence, no doubt greatly diminished the mortality of it.

Our latest dates report that the disease has advanced from the north as far as Tehran, and that it has broken out in the south of Persia, and is advancing from that direction towards Ispahan.

Ministerial.

"That Awful Place---the Pulpit."

The habits, the views, and the feelings of eminent men and ministers of former days, are a sort of legacy to the church, to be had in lasting remembrance. The record of their sayings and doings often afford lessons of wisdom, by furnishing a key to unlock the secret of their success in doing good, and the means by which they engraved such deep lines of impression on the age and on the community in which they lived. The Rev. Thomas Spencer, of Liverpool, was a burning and shining light for a brief period; but by an inscrutable Providence, suddenly quenched in the night of the grave. He is said invariably to have passed from secret communion with God, to what he described as "that awful place—the pulpit." "The uncommon interest and effect which appeared to rest on his ministrations, says his biographer, were doubtless drawn more correctly from his heavenly habit of mind, than from those powers of pulpit eloquence which commanded universal admiration."

"Let it not be deemed enthusiam," remarks another eminent preacher, "to say that fervent prayer will make a more impressive preacher than all the rules of rhetoric, and that he who speaks what he doth know, and testifies what he doth feel, as in the presence of his God, will win more souls to heaven than if he wielded at will all the eloquence of men and angels."

Few men of modern days have felt more deeply the worth of souls, or entered the pulpit under a more affecting sense of his solemn responsibility to God in delivering the divine message to his fellow-men, than Dr. Griffin. He said. When one enters the pulpit, under a solemn sense that every unregenerated man before him, however awakened, is an enemy of God, is resisting with all his heart, and will continue to resist until he submits; that he must be born again before he is any better than an enemy, or has made any approaches towards holiness; when one looks around upon the unregenerate part of his audience, and see that they are under indispensable obligation to yield at once, that they have no manner of excuse for delaying, that they deserve eternal reprobation for postponing an hour; when one feels from the bottom of his heart that there is nothing short of regeneration that can answer any purpose, and that he cannot leave his dear charge to be turned from enemies of God to friends ten years hence—delivered from condemnation ten years hence—but must see it now, oh how he will preach! He will give God no rest, and he will give sinners no rest, and he will bring down their immediate, pressing, boundless obligations upon them with the weight of a world. Under such preaching sinners must either turn to God or be miserable. There is no chance for them to remain at ease this side of infidelity itself.—N. Y. Evangelist.

The Ministry of the Age.

No preceding generation of ministers ever saw such a day as this! Such openings for usefulness; such calls for exertion; such multiplied and extensive fields whitening to harvest; such abundant and potent means for doing good to mankind. To live now, is a talent put into your hands for which you must give an account. Have you an ardor of piety, a tone of moral sentiment, a spirit of enterprise, corresponding with this day? If not, give yourself no rest till you, in some good measure, attain them all. If an ancient heathen rhetorician, in giving directions for the attainment of the "sublime," in writing, could say—"Spare no labor to educate your soul to grandeur, and to impregnate it with great and generous ideas;" much more may the same language be addressed to the gospel minister, in the present state of the church's progress. Take unceasing means to get large views of ministerial furniture, ministerial duty, and ministeral success.—Strive to educate your souls to grandeur and conception and grandeur of wishes, and hopes, and enterprise for the moral benefit of your fellow-men. Aim high. Let no petty plans satisfy you, either as to acquirement or exertion. Every one of you, however humble his talents, if really disposed to make the most of what God has given him, might cause his influence to be felt to the ends of the earth.—Dr. Miller.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Methodist Museum.

[We have seen several of these museum articles in other denominations.]

1. A professor of religion, praying with great fervor that God would convert the world, yet never giving a cent for missions.

2. A man getting shouting-happy and telling how much he loves the cause of God, and how much he is willing to deny self, yet fretting and scolding if any one asks for a little money.

3. A professor, too poor to take a religious newspaper, yet taking three or four political ones.

4. A 'Christian' brother, very much hurt in his feelings to hear his minister refer to 'politics' on the Sabbath, yet spending the whole Sabbath noon conversing on doings in Congress, and the probability of Taylor or Calhoun being the next President.

5. Another one, who thinks it very wrong to desecrate the Sabbath by holding temperance meetings on the evening of the Lord's day, yet spends the same in visiting his neighbors, or going to see his hired man about the work for Monday morning.

6. A 'Christian' brother, very much opposed to anything like ornamenting our churches, such as furnishing them with blinds, carpeting the aisles, or cushioning the pulpit, yet furnishing his own dwelling with rich carpets, astral lamps and splendid sofas.

7. A follower of the Prince of 'Peace,' with his heart running over with the war-spirit, and rejoicing in the destruction of his fellow men.

8. A professing Christian family asking the Minister to pray with them, & not one of them kneeling with him.

9. Christian parents who take no interest in the Sabbath School.

10. Christian parents permitting their children to attend a dancing school.

11. The man who has a periodical head ache, returning every Sabbath morning.

12. The man who dare not expose his health by going to meeting on a stormy Sabbath, yet is very robust the next Monday, and can sled wood all the day though it storm & blow.—Zion's Hea.

HOW TO GET A LIVING.

Be Industrious.—Everybody knows that industry is a fundamental virtue in the man of business. But it is not every sort of industry which tends to wealth. Many men work hard to do a great deal of business, and, after all, make less money than they would if they did less. Industry should be expended in seeing to all the details of business; in carefully finishing up each separate undertaking, and in the maintenance of such a system as will keep everything under control.

Be Economical.—This rule is also familiar to everybody. Economy is a virtue to be practised every hour in a great city. It is to be practised in pence as well as in pounds. A shilling a day saved, amounts to an estate in the course of a life. Economy is especially important in the outset of life, until the foundation of an estate is laid. Many men are poor all their days, because, when their necessary expenses were light, they did not seize the opportunity to save a small capital, which would have changed their fortunes for the whole of their lives.

Stick to Your Own Business.—Let speculators make their thousands in a year or a day; mind your own regular trade, never turning from it, to the right hand nor to the left. If you are a merchant, a professional man, or a mechanic, never buy lots nor stocks, unless you have surplus money, which you wish to invest. Your own business you understand as well as other men; but other people's business you do not understand. Let your business be some which is useful to the community. All occupations possess the elements of profit in themselves, while mere speculation has no such elements.

Never Trade at Great Hazard.—Such hazards are seldom well-balanced by the prospects of profit; and if they were, the habits of mind which are introduced, are unfavorable, and generally the result is bad. To keep what you have, should be the first rule; to get what you can fairly, the second.

Don't be in a Hurry to Get Rich.—Gradual gains are the only natural gains, and they who are in haste to get rich, break through sound rules, fall into temptations, and distress of various sorts, and generally fail of their object.—There is no use in getting rich suddenly. The man who keeps his business under his control, and saves something from year to year, is always rich. At any rate, he possesses the highest enjoyment which riches are able to afford.

Never do Business for the Sake of Doing it, and Being Counted a Great Merchant.—There is often more money to be made by a small business than a large one: and that business will be, in the end, most respectable, which is most successful. Do not get deeply in debt; but so manage, as always, if possible, to have your financial position easy, so that you can turn any way you please.

Do Not Love Money Extravagantly.—We speak here, merely with reference to being rich. In morals, the inordinate love of money is one of the most degrading vices. But the extravagant desire of accumulation, induces an eagerness, many times, which is imprudent, and so misses its object from too much haste to grasp it.

A Christian Boat!!

I have recently enjoyed the pleasure of a short trip in such a boat, and I deem it my duty to introduce her to a Christian public. I am sorry she has a 'heathen' name; but she certainly approximates the Christian character more nearly, than any Packet, whose acquaintance I have had the pleasure to make. The Boat to which I refer, is the St. Louis and New Orleans Packet, Hannibal—a strictly temperance and Sabbath-keeping boat. She is commanded by Captain Bacon, of St. Louis, an accomplished and pious gentleman.—He is also the proprietor, and has determined, under all circumstances, to rest on Sabbath, according to the commandment. He keeps no bar, and allows no liquor to be sold or used on board. The boat is nevertheless a very comfortable one, and I perceived no lack of any thing a christian traveller would require. The Captain is remarkably polite, and attentive to the wants and comfort of his passengers; and at the same time very vigilant as to the safety and management of the vessel. I had, while on board this boat, a feeling of security, which I seldom have on the river. The character of the Captain and of the boat, seems to act like a charm upon the passengers. I do not recollect ever to have travelled with so orderly and respectable a company throughout, as that on this boat. Not an oath was heard—no cards were played, or liquor drank—nothing to which the most devout mind could object. What a contrast this with most of our popular packets, where your ears are continually tortured with horrid oaths; your eyes with the sight of gaming tables, brandy bottles, &c., and your nose regaled ad nauseum, with the fumes of tobacco and other stimulants! I hope, therefore, that Christian travelers, if not from principle, at least from regard to their own comfort, will show their preference to the boat that honors the Sabbath. An enterprise like this ought to be encouraged, even if it costs us a little inconvenience. And if Christian travellers would only be true to themselves, and either be careful to select the Sabbath-keeping conveyances, or always stop on Saturday night, it would not be long till all the boats would stop on the Sabbath. If every professor of religion would uniformly get out before the Sabbath, I do not believe that any boat would dare to proceed long on this holy day. It is the presence and practice of 'professed' christians, that embolden men thus to set at defiance the ordinance of heaven.

Justice to Slaves.—We are pleased to note the following instance of justice which took place in the Kentucky Legislature, says the Cincinnati Atlas. Mr. George T. Edwards of Mogan county, sent a petition to the legislature, setting forth that he and his mother had owned a female slave whom they manumitted; that afterwards she became the owner of a small tract of land, that she had since died; and that she desired her land to go to her two children who are slaves. By the law they cannot inherit, and the land escheats to the State. The petition therefore asked a special enactment vesting the title in him for the benefit of these two slave children. The committee in the Senate to whom the petition was referred reported against it; but the attention of members having been called to the facts of the case, the report was promptly dissented from, and the committee instructed to report a bill according to the prayer of the petitioner.

Religious Intelligence.

Genesee District.

Elba, Genesee Co., N. Y., March 16, '48.

Br. Bassett: The real friends of Zion are always interested in learning of her estate, that they may rejoice over her prosperity, or mourn and pray over her adversity. It makes but little difference from what part of the Master's vineyard the tidings is received, the christian heart feels a deep and real sympathy of pleasure, or of pain. Please to indulge me, therefore, in presenting through your columns a few items of information respecting the state of our cause in the Old Genesee District.

We commence with things at home, in Elba. This is a point where the flag of mutual rights has long waived in honorable triumph. Since its erection here, many have emigrated to other portions of the country; many have laid their armor by, and gone up to use the harp above;—while others remain in the field of toil, "pressing forward" for the crown. Days of prosperity and adversity, have alternately visited them, shedding upon them their respective influences. And in every vicisitude, they have thus far, demonstrated the benefits of being grounded and settled in the truth. Within the last year, they have passed through scenes, which were calculated to "try men's souls:"—but as yet, they STAND FAST.

We are now engaged in a series of meetings, assisted by Rev. A. Acheson, of Honeoye, Ontario county, N. Y. Present appearances are favorable for a gracious work. There has been an improving state of things here, the fall and winter past, and our hope and prayer is, that God will "send now, prosperity."

Kendall and Clarkson Circuit.—Things are in a favorable condition here, under the labors of Rev. B. P. Short. Brother Short has been considerably afflicted the past winter, with sickness in his family. May his afflictions be sanctified to the good of himself and worthy companion!

Carlton Circuit—I understand is doing well under the labors of Rev. Israel Cole. Brother C. is said to be a faithful laborer, and is permitted to see the fruits of his sacrifice and toil.—Heaven bless and prosper him!

Holly and Ogden Circuit.—I learn from the Superintendent, Rev. Simon Burt, that the spiritual condition of this circuit, is, in most parts, quite low. There are, however, some noble & worthy exceptions. His congregations at Ogden and County Line are good; and there seems to be a disposition, at these places to stand by their minister, and do their utmost, in advancing their Redeemer's cause. On the west part of the ct. a grievous apathy spreads its blighting influence, to an alarming extent. Oh that these brethren knew, and would attend to "the things which belong to their peace and prosperity!" Their second quarterly meeting was held on the 11th and 12th instant, at South Barre. The labors of Rev. A. Acheson, were had in place of the President. It was a refreshing season. The attendance from abroad was limited. Ogden and County Line were represented, while other places, far more contiguous, came up minus. How painful to the faithful itinerant, who is always toiling and travelling for the good of others, to see them so criminally neglectful and indifferent in sustaining the cause, by refusing to make a little exertion to get out of their own neighborhood once in three or four months!

When will brethren see and feel upon this subject as they should?

For the support of their minister, I learn with painful regret, that there has been no exertion made, and consequently, nothing done, except in three places. Ogden, ever at her post is dealing with a liberal hand; County Line, is her sister—and will not suffer herself to be out-done, considering the means she has to do with; and South Barre, though small of stature, knows her duty, and does not leave it undone. Blessings upon these faithful and devoted ones! Would that we could say the same of other portions of the circuit. But if we speak, we must tell the truth. They sin openly, by neglecting their duty as christians and Methodist Protestants, and should they not be rebuked openly? Brethren, the hope that you will do better inclines me to refrain. I will stay my pen awhile, and see what you will do. Only let me say (for I say it in love to you all) do not, I beseech you, for the sake of the church—for your own sakes—for your minister's sake—for the sake of a perishing world—and for the sake of Him who died on the cross to save you, do not sit any longer on the stool-of-do-nothing! The means, mental, moral and pecuniary, for accomplishing great things, you have in abundance. Only use them and God will send prosperity.

Richmond and Canadice Circuits—Is maintaining her ground well under the labors of Rev. A. Acheson. The blighting influence of infidelity, under the guise of Religious Reform has shed a withering influence over a fair portion of this field. Some over-wise, and over-righteous ones have discovered that all of the present churches are very corrupt; and there is no piety on earth, only in the world, as distinguished from the ch. And so they cry "Come out of her my people!"

Poor fallen human nature, how easily thou art bewildered and thrown down!

☞It should have been noticed before this date, that the name and appointment of Brother Alex. Acheson was inadvertantly omitted in the report of the Stationing Committee as published in the minutes. His appointment this Conference year is Richmond and Canadice Ct.

Batavia and Wyoming—Is on the advance, under the Superintendency and energetic labors of Rev. S. M. Short. "The diligent hand maketh fat."

Leicester and Castile—I understand is pressing onward under the labors of our esteemed & worthy Brother, Rev. A. Robinson. A minister and people that love to work as well as they do, can but prosper under the benign auspices of a work-loving God. Pardon the great length of this communication, and allow me to remain, as ever yours in Christ,

E. A. WHEAT.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Morgantown, March 22, '48.

Br. Bassett: After a long silence on my part, I take up my pen to give you, the President and the brethren, some intelligence respecting our prospects as a church, on the Waynesburg Circuit, and as I have several items to communicate I will commence, first, by stating that my health has entirely failed me, having had within the last two months, six attacks of something like bilious cholic, four of which have been very severe, requiring the most prompt and energetic aid; but by the Blessing of God I am yet spared, though entirely unable to preach or travel. My thanks are due to the kind brethren and sisters who nursed and took care of me in my afflictions—better care could not have been taken of any man, and to Dr. A. Shaw I feel myself peculiarly indebted, for the prompt attention and energetic medical aid rendered me, in one of my most severe attacks. May the Lord bless and reward those dear friends.

Second. We have labored under a very serious disadvantage this Conference year, having but one preacher, the ct. being large, and labor heavy, so that we have had but little ministerial help, except from two unstationed brethren that have worked nobly and did all they could in times of our religious excitements. Brothers Ehud and Jos. Fordyce, are men willing to work for God; are full of the revival spirit, and are great helps to a Superintendent.

Third. We have received on probationary priv ileges since Conference, some fifty persons; at our second quarterly meeting we received 16,—from that meeting a work of grace broke out in an adjoining neighborhood, (Rhinehart's) the brethren held a protracted prayer meeting, interspersed with now and then a sermon from our unstationed brethren; the meeting lasted some three or four weeks every night and Sabbaths: they received into that class some 16 or 18 persons, mostly young men. In Waynesburg, since Conference, we have received twelve persons. I would suppose we have had some thirty or forty conversions. Never were our prospects better than at the time I was taken sick, and indeed they are good even now. There is something remarkable in the history of this circuit. Never were there more true-hearted Methodist Protestants than are found here, and never have men been more severely tried. Here our beloved Brother Hopwood broke down for want of health, here our br. Porter broke down for for want of health and here your unworthy correspondent has partially broke down for want of health, here Gibson and Davis shipwrecked, all within three or four years, and yet Waynesburg ct. lives, and her march is onward and upward. We have written to our President for another preacher; hope he can supply us, as five physicians say I must not attempt to preach at least for two months, (even should I be spared.)

Fourth. We have raised some 600 dollars for a meeting-house, in the Rhinehart neighborhood: a frame 30 by 40 to be elegantly finished. It is sold out for $547,50, to be completed by 1st of November next, the purchaser being bound in a penal bond of $2000 for the true performance of his contract.

We have raised about $300 for a meeting-house about three miles distant from Rhinehart's and the subscription still progressing, with a determined set of men to have a house this present year. Brs. Hazlett and Sutton, will please except my thanks for their kind assistance at Waynesburgh & Clinton, their kindness shall not be forgotten. And now in view of eternity, I say, the Lord's will be done. I have no fears in prospect of another state of being. I say with the venerated Adams, "I am content." Pray for me, pray for the circuit, pray for the prosperity of Zion. Yours with due respect,

P. T. LAISHLEY.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Delaware Circuit, March 17*th* 1848.

Bro. Bassett: With the favor of a kind providence, and by your permission, we desire to give a further account of the present condition of our circuit. We have already intimated, in a former letter, that the eastern part of the circuit is not in so healthy a condition as we should like. However in and about Delawaretown, we are doing first rate,—no mistake. Our second Quarterly Meeting was held in Delaware; at which time we expected our worthy Bro. Potter's help; the people were much disappointed, because he failed to come. Yet we were not without help. Bro. Peat ventured over the line, and came to our aid. He preached for us on Saturday night, and most assuredly he showed himself a workman, that needeth not to be ashamed. We hope this is not the last job of the kind that he will do for us; and we request he will keep his eye on our notice, in the Recorder, of our third Quarterly Meeting, and that he will try the other side of the line once more. Brothers Howell and Welch also attended, and both labored to the great satisfaction of the congregations. Altheugh at this meeting there were but few conversions or accessions, yet we had a very excellent time. The Love-feast was one of the best kind. Quite a number of the members of our sister Churches were present, and seemed to enjoy the exercises well. On Sunday night we had a great time; sinners trembled, while the brethren rejoiced. But on Monday night, such a meeting had we as I never saw before, and my mind was carried back to the great day of Pentecost; for we had present a mixed company of persons of different nations,—Africans, English, Jews and Dutch. The African Minister met with us from the beginning, and took a part in our devotions. He and some of his members became very happy, and no less noisy; and to tell the whole truth, we were not a whit behind them. Having called on a Sister to pray, who appeared rather slow in beginning, without waiting for another call, a Dutch Sister broke out in prayer in her own tongue, with such a degree of power, that I never heard the like. A Dutch Brother, who was a Jew, was then called upon to lead in prayer; and while he prayed, it really seemed as if heaven and earth were coming together. When he got through, he sprung to his feet with a shout, and the Dutch sister with him; both shouting in Dutch: while our African Brother sent forth his loud hellelujahs. Some of our English Brethren were lying on the floor, and you may be sure they did not lay still. To cap the climax.—when the English got hoarse with singing, our Dutch friends broke out in their most beautiful strain, and though it was in Dutch I can truely say, I never heard anything more delightful. Of a truth, it may be said, their was no small stir about that way! The noise was heard over the whole town, and the great men cried out, "what meaneth this?" Taking the whole scenery together, we think we had a real pentecostal season. If our friend Potter had been here, he would have received a new impetus for preaching his pentecostal Sermon; for he would "have heard every man in his own tongue," and we have no doubt but that we should have heard him also.—More from us soon.

WM. HATFIELD Jr.

Coshocton Circuit, March 18*th* 1848.

Br. Bassett: Since Brother Ross' communication we have had a good meeting at the Ross apt. The Church was greatly blessed, even "Shouting happy" encouraged by the presence of the Lord the Captain of our salvation they went on to the work, & in God they were made to triumph, for he gave them the victory. Some thirteen professed to obtain peace in the blood of Christ, children happy in the Lord could embrace their parents and tell them what great things the Lord had done for them. Parents in return could embrace their children, and cheer them on their journey to the skies, the sight, Oh how pleasant to behold. Fifteen were added to the Society on probation, this was much to the encouragement of the Noble Society planted on Stone Creek. May the good Lord still enlarge their borders, and encourage the faithful to continue to confide in the Lord, until he takes them to himself. We hope to see still more accomplished in the name of Christ the Lord.

Yours &c.

OHIO DISTRICT

Bethel, Clermont Co. Ohio, March 24*th* 1848.

Mr. Editor: I wish to say to Br. J. M. Young our President and the other friends of Zion generally, that we have recently had much reason of gratitude to the Great Head of the Church for the revival of his work on New Richmond Circuit.

We held a protracted meeting at Clover Meeting House which commenced Feb. 12th, and continued near two weeks. We were favored with the faithful labors of Bro's. O Tatman, S. H. Evans, John Philips, and Bro's. Jay, Birdsell, and Smith, local ministers of the Methodist E. Church, and Bro. Riley of the Wesleyan M. Church. These brethren labored together for the good of souls; and lay brethren of various denominations came up to our aid and helped us much.

The result of the meeting was, old difficultes were settled; many back-sliders were reclaimed; perhaps twenty persons received the remission of their sins, and soventeen were added to the Church.

While our meeting was going on at Clover, the good work broke out at Zion, in a prayer meeting Br. Tatman left Clover to take charge of the meeting at Zion, which I also attended several days. This meeing resulted in the conversion, perhaps, of some twenty or thirty souls, and an accession of 16 to the M. P. Church, and perhaps as many to the M. E. Church.

The next meeting that I wish to notice, is the Quarterly meeting at New Richmond, which commenced the 1st Saturday of this month. This meeting continued two weeks. I had no ministerial aid, until the Tuesday week after the meeting commenced, then brethen A. H. Trumbo and Covel, come to our assistance, and did us much service. The Lord bless them! This meeting resulted in the revival of the M. P. Chuch at that place, which before seemed almost destroyed, and in accession of 37, to the Church; since Conference 72 have united with the M. P. Church on this Circuit.

To-morrow we expect to commence a protrated meeting at Hamersville. O that the Lord may revive his work at that place!

I am Respectfully Yours &c.

R. M. DALBEY.

Portage Circuit, March 21*st* 1843.

Br. Bassett: I would inform the friends of Zion how we are getting along on this field of labor. A short time after the rise of Conference, I reached the Circuit found many kind friends but in a low state of religious enjoyment. I have been endeavoring to labor eve since, though sometimes prevented by ill health, but we have reason to thank the Great Head of the Church that he has been with us, though not in so powerful a manner, as at other places.

Our second Quarterly meeting commenced on the 29 of January, and lasted till the 3d of February. We were favored with the acceptable labors of Brs. Swaney, Guest, Laney, Graham and Carter. The membership was revived and five hopefully converted to God. Six gave us their names as probationers. Brethren, pay for us that the Lord may revive his work more powerfully.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO.

Thursday, March 30, 1848.

Encouraging.—We have the pleasure this week of entering the names of twenty-four new subscriers, whilst the number of discontinuances is but two. Thnks, hearty thanks to our several brethren, the agents who procured us the names. We have now reached the middle of the volume, at which point we expected to discontinue a considerable number of delinquent subscribers. We however, have a good mind to wait a little longer on some of them. Should we think necessary to strike off a considerable number this week, we trust that their paces will be speedily supplied by other names. Send on, brethren. It cheers us in our toil, to see our circulation extending.

☞We are under obligations to our Philadelphia Correspondent for a valuable paper which we insert this week, embracing interesting statistics of Methodist bodes in England.

Putnam Female Seminary.—The Semi Annual Examination of this Institution has just closed. Our other duties and cares did not admit of our being in attendance, as we wished, but we learn from others who were present, that the examination was highly satisfactory, and creditable to the abilities and faithfulness of the Instructors, and the industry and application of many of the students. We have an increasing conviction that the Putnam Female Seminary is one of the best institutions of the kind. We direct attention to the announcement of the Trustees in another column.

Musical Concert.—We had the pleasure of attening on Tuesday evening last, a Concert by the Juvenile Choir under the care of Mr. Munson, in the Seminary hall. About fifty Female Choristers took part. Twenty-four short pieces were sing. We were delighted with the performances throughout. Enthusiastic applause was given by the large audience which attended. The whole was admirably arranged and well conducted. Mr. Munson gives evidence of excellent qualifications & skill as a Teacher of Music. He is especially successful in the training of Juveniles. Had we a dozen young daughters they should be placed under his instruction. We trust he will be well patronized. We further suggest that he might do well to repeat the Concert.

More Good News.—We still rejoice in the revival intelligence which continues to reach us from various parts of our Zion. In some instances, "waste places" have been built up, and the church revived where her interests had sadly declined. We cannot refrain from referring to the case of our excellent Br. R. M. Dalbey of the Ohio Conference. We sincerely sympathized with him at last conference that he received an appointment to a circuit, under the most discouraging circumstances, its principal societies having declined, almost to extinction, as we understod. Like a true itinerant, however, our brother, went promptly to his appointment, and pursued his labors, trusting in the arm of the Lord. Already, it has pleased God to send prosperity, and to cause the hearts of desolate ones to rejoice, in witnessing the time to favor Zion, as will be seen by perusal of the letter of Br. D. in another column. We trust that this circumstance may ever encourage, not Br. D. only, but his brethren who may in some instances have a field of labor assigned them where there is little visible encouragement to look for either success or suppot.—The divine promise to such is, that "in due time they shall reap if they faint not.

The best reason for Subscribing for the Western Recorder.—We received the other day, a letter from a brother, giving us to understand that he had recently embraced religion, and united with the M. P. Church. He reaised, he said, his acceptance with God, and wished to preserve inviolate, the existing unanimity between his spirit, and the Spirit of God, and therefore desired to be in possession of every means of grace that is attainable. In view of this he sent his name as a subscriber for the Western Recorder. We desire that the perusal of our paper, may ever be found promotive of a growth in grace, in the hearts of its readers. Will not our correspondents join us in an endeavor to refrain from writing or publishing any thing calculated to injure, rather than improve the hearts & minds of young converts? This thought has been suggested to us by the the circumstance above stated.

Wittemburg College.

We are gratified to learn of the prosperity of this institution. We have heretofore repeatedly spoken favorably of its location, its advantages, its management. It is located at Springfield, O., and belongs to the Evangelical Lutheran denomination. The privileges of its Theological Department, are tendered without charge, to candidates for the ministry of any denomination.—Its President and Faculty are evangelical and liberal men—men of the right spirit. May continued success and usefulness attend the institution. The following statement by Dr. K. the President, we take from the last number of the Lutheran Observer.

Our present session will close on the 14th of this month. We have enrolled for this session one hundred and eight students. Of these, 15 are connected with the Theological Department, besides two resident ministers—one of the Old School Presbyterian, and one of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The Board of Instructors is composed, besides the writer, of Rev. M. Diehl, A. M., Professor of Languages; Rev. J. Stevenson, A. M., Assistant Professor of Languages and Belles-Lettres; H. K. Geiger, B. A., Professor of Mathematics; and J. Burrows, A. B., Tutor. Tuition fees charged are $18, $22, and $26 per year, including two sessions, and depending upon the branches pursued. Nothing is charged for incidental expenses.

The students rooming in the college are charged one dollar per month room rent, for the whole room. The rooms are spacious enough to contain three students, who divide the rent between them. Wood we sell at $1.10, oak; and $1.40, hickory. Boarding in common, has averaged eighty cents for this session. Five young men, who live near the college in the tenant house of a farmer, have boarded themselves this session for twenty-five cents a week, including fuel and light. And they look very well with it.—Five others, in another cottage, live for about the same. One told me that his boarding for this session—6 months—would cost him not more than five dollars—and getting fat at that. These noble youths live on solid, healthy diet, and drink nature's pure beverage as it gushes out of the earth in the many beautiful springs about the college, and take a good deal of exercise in working during leisure hours; and Jehovah, approving of such laudable efforts to cultivate the mind and heart, and prepare for usefulness, prospers them greatly, gives them success in their studies, sound sleep at night, and fine health. Much may be expected from such youths, in the church and state. In regard to books, young men who wish to come to the institution would better purchase them here. We have a large bookstore, which furnishes all the books needed, and nearly on the same terms of the eastern cities.

The institution will have, by the beginning of next session, upwards of three thousand volumes in its libraries, and a sufficient philosophical and chemical apparatus to make all necessary experiments.

The summer session will begin on the 12th of April and continue four months.

Yours truly,

EZRA KELLER.

Godey's Lady's Book.—The April number has come to hand, finely embellished. The Widow's Hope, is a beautiful mezzotint. The Weather Prophet, is a very cute affair. Then we have "A Song of Freedom," an original piece of Musicc, The Fashion Plate, Patterns of Window Curtains, Model Cottages, Crotchet Work, &c. Something extra is promised in the May number, a plate entitled the "Queen of May" printed in colors,—the first attempt in this country to give a plate in a Magazine, printed in this way. $3 in advance will procure a copy of the "Book," and a copy of the "Lady's Dollar Newspaper."

Saturday Evening Post.—This well known and very popular Philadelphia Weekly has lately been enlarged to mammouth size, and has undergone various other improvements. We do not think that the Post is excelled in point of merit, by any of the Eastern Literary Weeklies. The former firm of S. D. Patterson & Co., has been dissolved. The present publishers are Deacon and Patterson, who were also connected with the former firm. Henry Peterson is Editor, and he wields by no means an indefferent pen. Terms, single copy $2, in advance. Four copies for $5.

American Pulpit.—This valuable Monthly has again appeared on our Table, the seventh and eighth numbers having been received. A variety of circumstances has delayed the regular issue during the past winter, but the publisher now expects to be able 'to exhibit greater promptness.' No. 7, contains a Sermon by Rev. Dr. Rawson, of M. E. Ch., Keesville, N. Y. Another by Rev. W. N. Slason, Pastor of Baptist Ch., Lake Village, N. H. Also several Sketches of Sermons, and a Ministerial Miscellany. The 8th number, contains a Sermon by Rev. H. Wilkes, pastor of the 1st Congregational Church, Montreal, Canada. Another by Rev T. Armitage, of Albany, N. Y. Also some excellent ministerial articles by the Editor, Rev. J. D. Bridge. The Pulpit is beautifully printed on fine paper, and is a useful work. Address, Samuel Chism, Publisher, Worcester, Mass. $1 per An. in advance.

Columbian Magazine.—We have just received the April number. Its embellishments are of the best execution. 1. Eunice Marston. 2. A charming view of Beirout and Mount Lebanon. 3. Spring Fashions. 4. Original Music, "The Carrier Dove." The "Columbian" is a very attractive work. Its contents are entirely original, and it is sustained by very talented writers. Edited by J. Inman and Robert A. West. John S. Taylor, publisher, New York. $3 per annum. Two copies for $5.

Episcopal Recorder.—This excellent religious Journal has just entered upon a new volume with an enlarged sheet. It is edited by an Association of Clergymen, and is a leading organ of the Episcopal Church. It is doing a good work, battling with masterly hand the errors which have made some sad inroads in the ranks of that denominatien. Success to the Episcopal Recorder. Its terms are $2,50 per annum, in advance.

☞What a singular Institution of Learning they have at Circleville. Wonder, however, if similar ones are not to be found at other cities and towns. Parents read.

"Street School."

The spring and summer term of this flourishing school is about commencing in Circleville.—Lying, swearing, gambling, fighting, vulgarity and obscenity in all their forms, and everything else contrary to sound docrine are taught successfully. The teachers are all accomplished, all being regular graduates of the Satanic college. For the accommodation of those living at a distance from town, auxiliary schools are kept up in the country on the Sabbath; place of meeting—in the woods, by the rivers, at taverns, &c. No outfit is necessary but a few marbles, balls, fishhooks, and a litle change. Parents need have no fears but the education will be purely of the kind proposed, as Satan himself is President of the school, and carefully excludes every religious, moral and virtuous sentiment. For the encouragement of such parents as wish to educate their children for the penitentiary or the pit, we would state the school is well patronised; even professors of religion of every name, class-leaders, deacons, and even ministers suffer their children to attend daily, Sundays not excepted. School open at all hours through the day, and to 12 o'clock at night, as the songs and yells heard nightly in our streets abundantly prove.

Parents, think, O think, of your responsibility! The salvation or damnation of your children depends more upon their early training than any other circumstance. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."—Relig. Telescope.

To the Ministers and Preachers of the Muskingum Conference.

The subscribers, having been appointed by a meeting of the Citizens of Brownsville and its vicinity, to be a Committee of Correspondence to address every official member in this Conference District upon the necessity and practicability of establishing a College of the M. P. Church; have availed themselves of the columns of the Recorder as the readiest and least expensive medium of communicating with you; and respectfully request you, at your earliest convenience, to consult the officiary and membership of your respective circuits and stations, upon the following queries, and to convey to us, by letter, their answers and yours thereto.

Do you see a need of a M. P. College?

Are you willing to patronise a College, if such shall be built on Zanesville Circuit?

If not there, where else?

What is the probable amount you can give for its present completion, and future support.

How many families with you will give their sons at least one session to complete their education?

We beg leave to urge upon you an immediate attention to the above; and to solicit from you, as soon as practicable, a full response, addressed to the undersigned, Brownsville, Licking Co. O.

☞We are happy to present the following as one of the evidences that our paper finds favor amongst the sisterhood. "Anna" will receive our thanks. And may her prayer be answered.

Br. Bassett:

I am so much delighted with your excellent paper, I could not resist the temptation of letting you know, I look forward to its coming with as much pleasure as I would some kind friend. While you have such writers as the "Dutchman," "A Church Member" and "Phoebe Mannerly," it will not fail to be both interesting and beneficial. I am in hopes it will do more for the reformation of the church, than the church is doing for the world. I do love Methodism and would like to see all its principles carried out. The world looks to the church for example, the church to the ministry. O that our ministers had more of the zeal, perseverance and self-denial of Mr. Wesley. But we need not go back any further than Samuel Davis—then we might expect to see Methodism as it was and not as it is. O that the Lord would take away all pride and self-righteousness from among the ministry and make them men of pure hearts and clean hands, although in the world, may they be not of the world. I must stop here, for fear that like some of my sex, I might permit my feelings to carry me beyond my judgment.

Yours truly,

ANNA PRUDENCE.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the New York Sun.

Intelligence by the Cambria.

REVOLUTION IN FRANCE.

From the Liverpool Journal and our other files we make up the following summary of the cause and progress of this, the third revolution in France within fifty years.

The facts are these: the people of France have virtually had no voice in the election of parliamentary representatives. The electors were few, and the mode of election the reverse of popular. This system needed change, and Government refused to make any alteration.

The French saw that other people met and talked—dined and talked. They wished to meet and talk; but the police forbade the gratification. An article in the penal code was brought to bear upon the privilege; and although M. Guizot had formerly denounced this interpretation, he now adopted it.

Denied the right to assemble, they dined together, and made speeches. Means were taken to prevent these banquets; but in the provinces they were, nevertheless, numerous. On the assembling of what we call Congress, the Reformers resolved on a monster banquet. Government interferred; the question occupied the Chamber of Deputies. The Ministers declared such proceedings illegal, Odillon Barrot, and others, contending for their strict legality. One said that it should not take place; the others said it should. Discussion only helped to inflame the public mind.

The Reformers in Paris received sympathy from the provinces. The banquet was announced for Sunday, 20th February, but the preparations not being complete it was postponed to Tuesday, 22d, and deputations from all the great towns, north and south, had intimated their intention to be present.

The question was, for the time, settled on Saturday, the 19th February, the Government yielding. Relying on the law, they would appeal in due form to the tribunals and permit the banquet to take place, holding as responsible, the deputies present. So far all was well; the interest in the affair was decaying, but the Ministers smarting under taunts and a sense of discomfiture, took umbrage at the call made to the National Guards to line the streets, thro' which a procession was to pass, dressed in uniform, but unarmed, and forbade the banquet.

The vacciliation renewed the interest in the affair; the agitation increased. Military poured into the city, and the people crowded the streets.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY, 21.

On Monday the Chamber of Deputies was almost empty. It was reported that Government intended to resort to extreme coersive measures—that Paris would be occupied by a strong military force—that Marshal Bugeaud was invested with the command of the troops, with the title and office of Governor of Paris—that all assemblies of persons which might be collected in any part of the capital would be dispersed by armed force.

Amidst the excitement two hundred and fifty Deputies rushed to their places.—During the debate which arose, Mr. Odillon Barrot adverted to the reported violent measures of Government, and M. Duchatel, Minister of the Interior, declared, in unequivocal terms, that such was the intention of government.

Circulars were posted by the Prefect of Police, and others, interdicting the Banquet, at a late hour on Monday night. In less than an hour they had all disappeared from the walls. Nothing could exceed the excitement.

An order was given to concentrate troops around the Chambers of Deputies, and during the nights of Monday and Tuesday, military wagons and artillery caissons, escorted by cavalry, were incessantly passing along the line of Boulevards which connects Vinoennes with the quarter of the Tuilleries and Palais Bourbon.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 22.

The public excitement on Tuesday morning did not show itself by any violent demonstration, but at an early hour considerable numbers, chiefly by the working classes and respectable shopkeepers were to be seen moving along the Boulevards and all the avenues leading to the Champs Elysees, and at noon, the vast area between the Chamber of Deputies and the church of the Madeleine was a dense multitude, which at one time could not have amounted to less than thirty thousand persons.

A little before 12 o'clock, a procession of laboring persons, consisting of several hundred, attired chiefly in blouses, arrived by the Rue St. Honore, and the Rue Duphot, at the Place de la Madeleine, and halted at the hotel where the meetings of the opposition deputies have been usually held.

Soon after several squadrons of the municipal cavalry arrived and the populace was dispersed.

At 1 o'clock the main thoroughfares were clear. During the remainder of the day, the principal streets were patrolled by the cavalry of the municipal guard, the infantry of the line keeping clear the footways.

About the same time the Hotel des Affairs Etrangeres was attacked by the populace, the windows broken, and an attempt made to force the gate, accompanied with shouts of "A bas Guizot," "La tete de Guizot," The armed force arrived, and the rabble were repulsed, and the court of the hotel was filled with soldiers. Between 2 and 3 o'clock, a mob, composed of the lowest rabble, ran thro' the Champs Elysees and broke all the gas lamps in the main avenue and branch roads, almost under the eyes of the troops.

At the meeting of the Chambers at 1 o'clock the greatest gloom prevailed. Few deputies were in attendance; and the benches of the Opposition were completely vacant. M. Guizot arrived at an early hour, and was shortly afterwards followed by the Ministers of Finance, Public Instruction, and Commerce. Marshal Begeaud, who had accepted the military command of Paris took his seat close to the Ministerial bench.

At 5 o'clock M. Odillon Barrot ascended the tribune, and deposited on the table a formal act of impeachment against Guizot signed by the deputies of the opposition to the number of 53.

M. Genoude submitted, in his own name, a proposition of accusation against the minister, conceived in these terms:

"Whereas the minister, by his refusal to present a project of law for electoral reform, has occasional troubles. I propose to put in accusation the president of the council and his colleagues."

The President raised the sitting without reading it, but announced that it should be submitted to the approbation of the bureaux on Thursday.—The house then adjourned.

In the evening, the greatest alarm and disorganization existed in Paris. The demonstrations of the day had not, however, produced many lamentable results. Several municipal guards were injured by stones. A sub-officer of that corps was killed and two soldiers wounded. Several gunsmiths' and armourers' shops were reported to have been attacked.

The soldiers refused to fire on the malcontents, the National Guard joined the masses, and as a necessary consequence, the obnoxious minister resigned. The King sought to pacify Paris by the appointment of a new cabinet Barricades were formed in many streets. The lamps were broken, and many emutes took place; but at midnight the troops had restored order to all places where disturbsnces had taken place.

The Boulevards from the Place de la Madelene to the Porto Saint Martin, were occupied during the whole night by upwards of 6,000 troops, and large fires were lighted by them. The place du Carrousel was occupied during the whole night by a strong military force. In the course of the evening, the King, accompanied by the Duke de Nemours and the Duke de Montpensier, passed the soldiers and national guards in review. His majesty was loudly cheered.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 23.

On Wednesday morning the iron railings in several parts of the town were torn down to supply weapons to the populace.

The national Guard of the 2d arrondissment, to the number of about 500 or 600, assembled at an early hour in the Rue Lepellitier, opposite the Opera.

Their motto was, "Reform, and the dismissal of M. Guizot." When the intentions of the citizen soldiers became known, an immense crowd assembled before them, crying, "Vive la Garde Nationale!" "Vive la Reforme!" The latter cry was loudly repeated by the National Guards, the officers rejoining in it, and flourishing their swords.

Meantime the riots continued in the quarters of St. Denis and St. Antonie. At 12 o'clock barricades had been established at all the corners of the Rue St. Denis and the Rue St. Martin, and in no other quarters; and at that time a junction was being carried out between the troops & the populace.

At the corner of the Rue Mandar and the Rue Montmartre a barracade was also established, behind which were men armed with pikes and muskets. In the Quartier du Temple the mob cast broken glass on the ground, to prevent charges of cavalry. Troops of boys were running in all directions, armed with sticks and clubs, smashing the gas lamps. In the Champs Elysees strong detachments of cavalry were stationed, with hay and provisions. At 3 o'clock, in the neighborhood of Rue St. Denis and the Place St. Denis a strong additional body of troops and artillery was directed. In the Rue St. Denis the insurgents fired several times on the troops, of whom several were said to be killed.

The dragoons were sweeping the Boulevard between the Porte St. Denis and Porte St. Martin, and they prevented any one from passing, but the distant shots could be heard. In the Rue Rambuteau, a captain of Cuirassiers was killed, and the mob carried his helmet in triumph on the top of a pole in the midst of the wildest enthusiasm.

Ten of the people made prisoners by the troops were confined in the guard-house of the Boulevard des Bonnes Nouvalles, which has uniformly been taken by the people in every emute. The people attacked it at five o'clock, disarmed the soldiers, discharged the muskets, and returned them, and liberated the prisonors.

On their way they called at the reforme newspaper office, and were told that all was over, that the banquet must take place, and that good care would be taken to secure their liberties.

The crowd before the Ministers des Affairs Etrangeres was immense during the whole of Wednesday, and at 5 o'clock there was not less than 10,000 persons collected round it. They had been repeatedly charged with the bayonet by the municipal guard, but re-assembled as fast as they were dispersed.

At half-past six the rumors of the resignation of M. Guizot had caused the crowd round the Hotel des Affairs Etrangeres to disappear. The troops were everywhere returning to their barracks. It was reported that the troops of the line had exhibited symptoms of disaffection.

At 10 o'clock a column of 600 or 800 people of all ranks, who had been fighting, passed up the Boulevard. The bearing and attitude of this column was terrible.—Although M. Guizot had retired from the ministry, the Hotel des Affairs Etrangeres remained occupied and guarded by troops. One young man walked up to the officer in command and blew out his brains with a pistol. Seeing him fall, his soldiers without orders fired on the people, of whom four or five were killed.

Twenty minutes afterwards, a most touching and melancholy procession arrived at the Boulevard des Capucines, and a low song of death, "Mourir pour la patrie," was chanted by the throng instead of the victorious 'Marseillaise.' Behind them came an open cart surrounded by torch-bearers, containing the dead bodies, partly undressed. When the head of the column reached the corner of the Rue Lepelletier, the song was changed to a burst of fury, with a unanimous shriek or cry of 'Vengeance!' The night was an awful one. Barricades—one immensely strong at the end of the Rue Richelieu, were constructed.—Every tree on the whole line of the Boulevards was felled. Every one of the superb lamp-posts thrown down, and all converted into barricades

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24.

On Thursday morning, Louis Philippe abdicated the throne in favor of the Count de Paris, and the regency of the Duchess d'Orleans.

On leaving the palace the King and his family proceeded to Neuilly under an escort of cuirassiers. After the troops evacuated the Tuileries, the palace was immediately occupied by the insurgents, who destroyed everything in it—winaows, furniture, pictures, &c. The throne alone was left entire, carried in procession through the streets and the Boulevards, and ultimately smashed to pieces. A similar scene of destruction took place at the Palais Royal. All the furniture was taken out and burnt in the court.

At 12 o'clock Odillon Barrot was invested with the superior command of the National Guard. In the Chamber of Deputies, at 1 o'clock, M. Suazet took the chair, in presence of about 300 members. Shortly afterwards, the Duchess of Orleans arrived with her two sons, accompanied by the Dukes de Nemours and Montpensier.

The greatest agitation and uproar prevailed and when silence was restored, M. Dupont rose and announced to the assembly that the King had abdicated in favor of his grandson, and conferred the regency on the Duchess of Orleans. A voice from the public gallery,—"It is too late." An indescribable scene of tumult ensued. Attempts were made to have the abdication accepted, but in vain. M. Sauzet put on his hat and concluded the sitting. The prince's and government party retired. The insurgents then called, or rather carried, M. Dupont de l'Eure to the Presidential chair. The tribune and all the seats were occupied by the people and National Guards, and members of the Provisional Government were proclaimed amist a scene which has not been witnessed since the Convention.

A Republic, on the model of the U. States, was proposed and insisted on.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

A proclamation was this morning posted on the bourse, signed by Thiers, Odillon Barrot, Duvergier, and Lamorciere, to the effect that they had been ordered by the King to form a new ministry, and stating that an appeal would be made to the people.

Afterwards the following notice was published:—

In the name of the Sovereign people.

Citizens—The Provisional Government has just been installed; it is composed, by the will of the people, of the citizens Frederick Arago, Louis Blanc, Marie, Lamartine, Flocon, Ledru Rollin, Recur, Marast, Albert—to watch over the execution of the measures which will be taken by Goverment, the will of the people has chosen for delegates in the department of the police the citizens of Cousidiere and Sobrier. The same sovereign will of the people has designated the citizen El. Arago to the Direction-General of the Post-office.

As first execution of the orders given by the Provisional Government, it is advised that the bakers, or furnishers of provisions of Paris, keep their shops open to all those who may have occasion for them.

It is expressly recommended to the people not to quit their arms, their positions, or their revolutionary attitude. They have often been deceived by treason: it is important that they should not give opportunities to attacks as criminal as they are terrible.

It is interdicted to the members of the Ex-Chamber of Peers to meet.

Paris was perfectly quiet, but the shops are closed, and the streets were barricaded as before.

The people were preparing to go to attack the Castle of Vincennes.

All was tranquil in the quarter of the Tuileries.

The Railway stations and barriers were in possession of the people. The rails were taken up to a certain distance from Paris to prevent the troops arriving from the country. The sacrifice of life is frightful. Many of the troops of the line refused to act, and joined the insurgents. Amions had seconded the movement.

The loss of life throughout the different affrays is variously estimated at from 100 to 500 persons. The immense fortifications which enclose Paris had not been served with ordinance, otherwise and if the troops had adhered to the King great damage to the city must have been done and with enormous slaughter of citizens. The range of cannon on these fortifications covers nearly every foot of ground in Paris.

The N. Y. Firemen are following in the footsteps of their brethren of this city with ferocious emulation. A New York letter writer, after describing a fight which took place in that city on Saturday night, adds: 'After the, fight I saw No 41, with her drag rope filled, and led by a man carrying a pistol in each hand, and two others with axes."

Dr. Stearns, one of the oldest physicians of New York, lies dangerously ill from his thumb, with a slight cut upon it, touching an erysipelas patient.—He lies perfectly insensible.

A. R. JACKSON.

P. S. As the above abstract includes only the corporate limits of Zanesville, it may be well to state that the returns from the other school districts show an addition of 171 school children, or (at the above ratio,) of 400 total, making, in the township, or what is really "Zanesville," a population of 6,725. A. R. J.

RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN ZANESVILLE.—The Spirit of God is doubtless carrying forward his work of convincing of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. It is not proper to speak of results yet, especially as we do not know what they may be. Though the ear appear to be forming well, we may be deceived in the harvest.—Several of our churches are open still every evening—attendance good and increasing attention most solemn. In the first Baptist Church between ninety and one hundred have been baptized. Most of the other churches have not been so hasty in receiving members. The present, is a time with us, when the christians who are awake, are bowed in the dust, and are agonising in prayer. Other christians are becoming distressed on account of their sins; and some professors, alas, are still sound asleep! Non-professors are every where under more or less of conviction, but there seems to be a mass of them who are not yet sufficiently shaken, to make them cry for mercy with earnestness. It is evident that christians are not yet sufficiently purified in their motives, and enlightened in their views of truth and duty. O that salvation would come! —Fam. Quarto.

FIFTY-SEVEN HORSES BURNED.—There were seven fires in New York from Saturday morning till Sunday night, the only one of consequence being the destruction of the stables of the Harlem Railroad Company, in the upper part of the city, on Saturday night.—Fifty-seven horses, valued at $5,000, were burned to death.

THE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE, which accompanied the remains of Mr. Adams to Massachusetts, are the objects of much attention in the hospitable city of Boston. Accompanied by the Common Council, the Hon. Abbott Lawrence, Hon. Nathan Appleton, Hon. T. G. Cary, S. Lawrence, Esq., and other gentlemen largely interested in factories, visited Lowell with them on Monday afternoon. They were delighted with their visit to that great manufacturing metropolis of the country. They saw all the mills, and at three o'clock dined with the city authorities, and at half-past four the party returned to Boston, after a run of forty minutes.

At six the company assembled at the Revere House, Boston, where a grand dinner was given by the city government. About two hundred gentlemen sat down, the chairman of the Common Council presiding, the Mayor being unwell.

After the more solid portion of the dinner was discussed, many speeches were made.

OHIO AND PENN. RAILROAD.—A meeting of the citizens of Pittsburgh was recently held for the purpose of furthering the Pennsylvania Railroad project, at which in it was resolved, "that the meeting highly approve of the charter granted at the late session of the Ohio Legislature for the construction of a Railroad to be be known by the name of the Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad, and that it be requested of the Committee named in said act, that they give notice for a meeting at the earliest possible day, for the purpose of organizing under the charter. That it is also recommended that Books for the subscription of stock be opened at Massilon, Wooster, Canton, New Lisbon, Beaver and Pittsburgh in the order named at such time as may be designated by the Committee."

☞A convention was recently held at Piketon, Pike county, Ohio, for the purpose of improving the Scioto river. It is stated that a small sum will render it navigable for small boats, to within three miles of Chillicothe.

SPIKE SOCIETY.—A new Teetotal Society has been started in Portland, Me., called the Telegraph Spike Society. It was started by two individuals, who believed they spent too much of their hard earnings for liquor, and each drove a spike down close into a telegraph post, under a solemn agreement that he who broke the pledge should pay to the other ten dollars, or draw the spike out with his teeth. The society is increasing rapidly, and unless the result is the shattering of teeth, great good will be effected.

CAPTURED SLAVES.—On the 9th of December the brig Louisa arrived at St. Helena, a prize to Her Majesty's steamer Heroine, with 640 slaves on board, mostly children. Between seventy and eighty died on the passage, and others continued to die at the rate of four per day. Seven other vessels had been taken prizes within two months, for being engaged in the slave trade, and had arrived at St. Helena.

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. LYELL.—This venerable divine died on Sunday morning at his residence in Anthony st. N. Y. at the age of 74 years. Dr. Lyell has been for many years the rector of Christ Church, and for some years has been the senior rector in this state. Though precluded by his quiet, unobtrusive habits and turn of mind from holding a conspicuous position in the Church or in Society, he enjoyed the respect and esteem of the clergy generally and the affectionate regard of his parishoners.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—The Rev. Dr. Richey, of Montreal, has been appointed the delegate of the Wesleyan Church, in Canada, to represent that body in the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to be held at Pittsburgh in May next.

THE HERMIT DEAD.—A man who has so long been known as the "Lynn Hermit," died at his hut last week, near Salem, Mass. His name was George Gray, 78 years old. He was a native of Scotland, a very ingenious mechanic, and the inventor of a ship's windlass, and also of a skylight for vessels. The "hermit," has left a property of about six thousand dollars.

NEW MOVEMENT.—A tract of land containing something like a thousand acres, hitherto entirely unimproved, South of Hicksville, Long Island has been purchased for a company of Germans, who are to take possession of it in the Spring.

A MISTAKE.—A gentleman at the Astor House table asked the person sitting next to him if he would please pass the mustard. "Sir," said the man, "do you mistake me for a waiter?" "Oh! no, sir," was the reply, "I mistook you for a gentlenan."

SERIOUS RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

We find the following particulars of the railroad accident between Philadelphia and N. York on Tuesday:—

The engine with the train was new and of extraordinary power. The engineer had only run it two or three times, and it seems was not well equainted with its speed. As he approached aNewark at full speed, the draw was up and a sloop was just preparing to pass. The usual signal flag was up, and was seen by the engineer. He immediately reversed the engine, just as the train was going on to the bridge—but it could not be stopped; the locomotive run off and went to the bottom. The baggage car followed it, and the forward second-class passenger car ran half over, when the wood work gave way which held it to the freight car, and it hung pendent over the chasm.

Only one person was killed. He was the fireman of the Raritan steamboat, which was burned on Monday, and was on his way home to his family in New Brunswick. His name was Chas. Sanderson; his age about 40.

He jumped from the car upon the bridge—striking his head and ribs against the beams and falling into the water below. He was at once picked up, but was dead when taken out. Two or three others jumped into the water, but were taken out unhurt. The baggage crates floated down stream, but were towed back and the baggage taken out.

The mails were taken from the water—thoroughly soaked—and sent forward, and reached Philadelphia perfect papier mache.

The engineer, whose name was Abraham Quackenbush, jumped from the locomotive, and was badly hurt. He was brought back to Jersey City. The firemen also jumped off and escaped unhurt.

TWO MORE GREAT MEN GONE.—The Hon. H. G. Wheaton, and the Hon. Ambrose Spencer, have both been gathered to their fathers. Their loss is a national calamity. The Hon. H. G. Wheaton expired at his residence in Roxbury, Massachusetts. Mr. Wheaton returned not very long ago, from a diplomatic residence of many years in Europe, his last post of duty having been the capital of Prussia.

Mr. Spencer has been long and well known as a State Senator of New York, Judge of the Supreme Court, and member of Congress, and died at his residence, in Lyons, Wayne County, on Monday, at the age of about 85. He was the President of the Baltimore Convention of May, 1844, which nominated Clay and Frelinghuysen.

BELPRE AND CIN. RAILROAD.—At a meeting of the directors of the Belpre and Cincinnati Railroad, on the 10th inst. in Chillicothe, Allen Latham, was elected president of the board to fill the vacancy occasioned by F. Renick, Esq., and measures were taken to prosecute the work with energy.

☞A Board of directors of the Ohio and Indianapolis Railroad, was elected on the 16th inst. and it is expected the road will be speedily put under contract. This road, it will be recollected, runs from Jeffersonville to Columbus and thence to Indianapolis.

☞A meeting was held in Hillsborough to take measures to prosecute the Hillsborough and Cincinnati Rail Road at which books were opened for the subscription of stock and and energetic measures recommended for furthering the enterprise.

DESTRUCRIVE FIRES AND LOSS OF LIFE.—Eight houses, mostly large, and of brick, occupied by several families each, in the rear of others in Mulberry, Mott and Hester streets, New York, were destroyed by fire about 4 o'clock on Saturday morning, most of the inmates barely escaping with their lives. The sight indeed, is said to have been pitiable—thirty families consisting of about one hundred persons, being thereby deprived of shelter and their little stock of worldly goods. Mothers were shrieking and running in every direction, in search of their children. The owners of the buildings were Mr. Dooly, Mr. Young, Mrs. Williams and Mr. Redman. The whole loss, independent of the insurance, will not fall short of $25,000. An old man, unable to help himself, was brought out upon the back of an intrepid fireman, and an infant was also rescued at imminent risk. A serious conflagration, had taken place about 1 o'clock the same morning, destroying three buildings with their contents, in Thirty-first, street occupied by German families. A man, who, from old age and infirmity, was unable to flee from the burning building, perished in the flames.

WESTERN TOOL BUSINESS.—Some of the western cities are beginning to rival the eastern in the quality and price of making tools. Cincinnati boasts of being able to make many tools both cheaper and better than those made in England. They say they can make planes and edge tools 10 per cent cheaper than we can do here. The amount of tools manufactured in that city during the past year, however, is of but small amount being only $170,000 worth and employing but 150 hands. A single establishment in New York manufactures nearly as much. It is calculated that there will be $560,000 worth manufactured in Cincinnati this year, yet there is but a very small amount for such a large city. The following are the Cincinnati wholesale prices of the principal articles in the edge tool and plane business.

Coopers and carpenters draw knives, different shapes, $8 per dozen; do. long head knives $12; do. short do. and champer do $8,50; do broad axes and adzes, $16; do. truss hoops, from $1.12 to $3.40 per set, do. stock howels, all sizes, $10,20 per dozen, do. patent lance crozes, $9, do. leveling planes, $8,40; carpenter's broad axes, $26 to 28; do. adzes, $16 to $18; do. hatchets, $4.50 to $6; do. hand axes; $11 to $21.—Scientific American.

In the case of the Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church at Brooklyn, N. Y. Judge Edmonds on Monday, rendered a decision on the motion for an attachment against the Trustees for refuing to obey the peremptory mandamus, requiring them to admit Rev. Mr. Griffin to the pulpit and parsonage. Judge E., in delivering his opinion, remarked that the mandamus by the statutes of New York, is made a civil proceeding. It is an order of the Court which the parties are bound to obey. It determines no rights between the parties, but it is a decision as to present possession which can be appealed from; but, during the appeal, must be obeyed. A refusal to obey will subject the Trustees to imprisonment for contempt of Court.

Freight.....	$12.530.40	$13.216,86

SEVERE BUT JUST.—The New York Tribune mentions an incident as occurring in the Circuit Court on Wednesday, in which a man, summoned as a juror, was severely reproved by the Court for making frivilous objections or excuses in reference to performing jury duty. Judge Hiram Gray presided, and the juror having exhausted almost every subterfuge, the Judge called him up in the Court and thus addressed him:

"You have several times yesterday and to-day asked the Court to excuse you from serving on the jury, and have as often rendered a different excuse. I have finally concluded to comply with your request—but not on any of the grounds you have stated. You first said you were sick, which I was satisfied was untrue. You next said you were considerably deaf, but you heard the first whisper which appeared to favor your application you said your wife was sick, of that I cannot consent to inquire here.—Now, I shall excuse you from any farther attendance here, not on any grounds assigned by you, but for reasons of my own. A man who will dishonor himself, and violate all the obligations he owes to society, is unfit to be entrusted with the decision of disputed rights between his fellow citizens: and I dismiss you as utterly unworthy of a seat with your fellow jurors."

The juror attempted to explain; but the Judge peremptorily ordered him to leave the Court.

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS —The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year, for $3,00—i copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,90—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

READ AND BE WISE.

ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegitable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. A large number of certificates, from those cured by the use of the Vegitable Ointment, could be given in proof of its virtues, but it is deemed unnecessary.

GENERAL CONFERENCE

PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

LIFE OF REV.

POET'S CORNER.

MARY AT THE SEPULCHRE.

TUNE—Martyn.

I.

Mary to the Saviour's tomb,
Hasted at the early dawn;
Spice she brought and sweet perfume,
But the Lord she lov'd had gone:
For a while she lingering stood,
Filled with sorrow and surprise;
Trembling while a crystal flood,
Issued from her weeping eyes.

II.

But her sorrows quickly fled,
When she heard his welcome voice;
Christ had risen from the dead;
Now he bids her heart rejoice:
What a change his word can make,
Turning darkness into day!
You who weep for Jesus' sake,
He will wipe your tears away.

III.

He who came to comfort her,
When she thought her all was lost,
Will for your relief appear,
Though you now are tempest tost:
On his arm your burden cast,
On his love your thoughts employ;
Weeping for a night may last,
But the morning bringeth joy.

The Restrictive Rule--Per Contra.

NO. I.

MR. EDITOR,—Your readers have recently been greatly enlightened on the subject of Methodist usages, especialy upon the itinerancy.—The Rev. E. S. Hoagland stated, in this neighborhood, not long since; "a number of us have agreed to discuss the expediency of the Restrictive Rule."—Perhaps the church may desire to know who this league is, thus laying Gothic hands on an institution heretofore so highly prized by the Methodists generally. Well, then, the Rev. Fielding A. Davis—the Rev. John Scott—the Rev. "Josey" Burns, of the Pittsburgh Conference, the Rev. Ezekiel S. Hoagland, and the Rev. Washington Maynard of the Musk. Conference, are the men, with a few others, probably, of similar stripe, in both the Conferences who staid on the back ground. Men who have hardly lived long enough in the world to mature a set of opinions on any subject, whatever, or to form a permanent character of any kind. Yet these are the worthies who have recently found out that the fathers of Methodism were a set of ignoramuses and that their itinerant "rule is a sensless thing."

Really! what an age we live in! Our sages have not only learned to talk by lightning, but, it seems, the very boys are beginning to think by lightning; hence the reason why they are so far outstriping their fathers, in ecclesiastical accuracy and every thing else.

Thus to disturb the repose of a church, by assailing her fundamental laws, evinces more arrogance than any set of young men ought to possess. How true the declaration of the Rule, —"Novices being lifted up with pride fall into condemnation of the devil." 1 Tim. 3 & 6. Whether the Restrictive Rule be a good or a bad one this company of young men have neither experience or discrimination enough to perceive. So that their cause may be regarded in the light of a reckless haphazard effort, to which they are prompted, no doubt, by the high opinion they entertained of their own abilities. They feel entirely satisfied, from their great resources and incomparable eloquence, that they are under no necessity of "building on other men's foundations," but are fully competent to edify any congregation, learned or unlearned, in country or city to the end of life. No wonder, then, that men of such rare talents should regard as "a senseless" thing a rule that lays in the way of their ambition. For their superior powers entitle them to itinerate the smooth pavements of our elegant cities, to repose on the Sofas and Lounges of the rich and to eat their sweet meats and panadas, while, to their rustic and less favored brethren, is assigned the duty of beating the brush and traversing the dreary mountains. Now, what an outrage upon "reason," "revelation" and "common sense" must that rule be which obstructs the pathway of these lovely and talented boys.

It will be recollected that this proposition to destroy, under the pretext of modifying, a fundamental rule of the church, does not come from the people, but from the aristocracy of the people; or a set of little priests, whose main object may be to get up a state of things in which they can enjoy a little more ease. Although we think it highly probable they do not understand themselves well enough to be conscious of any such motive. They will, therefore, no doubt, feel disposed to repel the charge with a great amount of holy indignation.

We are not much afraid that these luminous essays, on the restrictive rule, will make a very extensive impression, on the church. But, as there is apt to be a portion in every community who are more attracted by fox-fire than by the light of the Sun, if any such are among us, we wish to caution them, in this matter, by a scriptural reference.—There is something in the sacred oracles to teach and admonish us in relation to any question which may arise, or circumstance which may transpire. The occurrence to which we allude is recorded in the 12th chap. of the Second Book of Kings. After King Solomon's death the people being assembled to install his son to reign in his stead, demanded of Rehoboam a promise that he would abate the rigors with which his father had governed the empire. He asked several days to consider the matter; during which time "King Rehoboam consulted with the old men that stood before Solomon his father while he was yet alive," who gave such advice as would have ensured him a peaceful and successful reign. "But he forsook the advice of the old men, which they had given him, and advised with the young men that were grown up with him," and by adhering to their advice he lost the principal part of his empire; laid the foundation of the "Separation of Israel and Judah; also the long and ruinous wars which drenched these states in blood: and was doubtless the cause that ten-twelfths of the Jewish people became idolators; which crime was punished by the just judgment of God by the Babylonish captivity, which lasted seventy years; and by the carrying away of the ten Israeliteish tribes by the Assyrians, who are lost from the mass of the universe, and no longer numbered among the children of men."

All these fearful responsibilities and consequences are the legitimate results of taking the counsel of a set of mere boys in preference to that of men of age and experience. We ask all concerned in this matter to read the chapter with its context, above referred to, and to reflect maturely upon the subject. We do not pretend that there is any particular analogy between the Jewish institution and our own. But we do insist upon it, that, God, by this striking record, has given to the world, in every age—in every country, and in every form of social organization, a standing admonition never to confide the helm of government to the hands of inexperienced and reckless young men.

Mr. Editor,—after these preparatory remarks, we will come, in our next number, to the argumentative part of the subject. The boys have invited us to "reason together" "pleasantly." We will endeavor to do so. But whether the "pleasantly" will be for them or their opponents the sequel must disclose.

Continued domestic afflictions too much distract our mind for a task of this kind, and may interrupt the regular issue of our numbers. But we will try and do the very best we can for the Rev. boys, under the circumstances.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

Meadow Farm, O., March 15th, 1848.

MR. EDITOR:

In looking over the Recorder of February 24th, I was struck by the remarks of your anonymous correspondent "Homo." I do not know who he is, but, suppose him to be one of the Fathers; and he supposes the names of Brown, Springer, and Reeves, to be a sufficient answer to the arguments of Br. Burns. Now is it not a most humbling view, he presents of the intelligence of Methodist Protestants; that all that the opposers of any change in the Constitution of the Church, has to do, is to pour contempt on the head of the debater, and pay no attention to the facts, and arguments, in the case?

Now I for one, think a good argument from Joseph, has just as much weight, as the same argument would have from one, or all of the Fathers.

Men, who entrench themselves behind their age, or their experience, and will not examine the arguments of younger brethren; but pass them over with a sneer, remind me very much, of arguments that I have heard some men advance on another subject: namely, after presenting the bible doctrine of man's oneness by creation and redemption; it is met, by, how would you like to marry a nigger?

But my object in presenting this, is to try to awaken the spirit of enquiry, in the minds of the mass of the Church; to examine this with every other subject, by which the advance of christianity is hindered; or the good way evil spoken of. If this in any degree leads to that result, I will feel thankful, to the God of all the earth. To strengthen independent thinkers, and writers, and to shake the credulity, of those that think all they have to do, is, bow to the sayings of the Fathers; I will insert here some of the sayings and doings, of the ancient holders on to error, that the contrast between them, and our modern Fathers may be seen,

Mat. 13th chapter, 54th and 55th verses.—"And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in the synagogue insomuch that they were astonished, and said, Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works? Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?" And the 57th verse says, "And they were offended in him." The Lord Jesus, was too common a person to present truths for those Homos.

Loyola, the founder of the order of Jesuits, removed the scruple of the Pope; by adding the following: "He proposed, that besides the three vows of poverty, of chastity, and of monastic obedience, which are common to all the orders of regulars, the members of his society should take a fourth vow of obedience to the Pope, binding themselves to go whithersoever he should command for the service of religion!

This is Restrictive Rule No. 1.

We will now examine a little into Luther's history, to see whether a man must be a Patriarch, before his opinions are worth anything but a sneer.

He was born in 1483, and was summoned to appear at Rome, in 1518; so he was 35 and by that time he had shaken Romanism to its centre. But if Homo had lived in those days, he would have told him, stand back, and let the Fathers speak. When he was summoned to appear before Cajeton: he, Cajeton, "thought it below his dignity, to dispute the point, with a person so much his inferior." Luther was as much trouble to the Fathers, as some of our young men now are to our Homos. Hear again. "Notwithstanding all this, however, he discovered no symptoms of timidity or remissness; but continued to vindicate his own conduct and opinions." And my prayer is, that our young men may show the same firmness.

One of the results, growing out of the discussions in which he was involved, was his seeing the obstinacy of the Church of Rome "in adhering to established errors, and its indifference about truth, however clearly proposed, or strongly proven."

My introducing the names of the Revs. Brown, Springer, and Reeves, is not to be understood as designed to cast any opprobium on them, some of them are my personal friends, and others I do not know which side they would take; but as Homo introduced them for his purpose, namely, to pre-judge the case and keep men from examining it, I have also used them, desiring that the public may not give over the investigation of any subject, on account of names.

Yours for the truth of Christ,

A NEW HAND.

Defence of Tobacco.

MR. EDITOR,—There has been a great deal said upon the use of tobacco. Permit me to say a few things in favor of the much slandered herb. First, I consider my brethren who have called it obnoxious, have slandered its character as given by the Maker of herbs, who when he had completed the great work of creating this world with numerous vegetable tribes, pronounced good—very good. This is the character that He who knew the properties of which this and all other herbs are composed has given the much misrepresented plant called tobacco. God says, very good; man says, very bad. Is not this contradicting the Author of Creation, and plainly saying that God did not understand the properties of which this plant is composed? He knew well its character and made it for our use. To deny this is to deny the word of eternal truth. "I have given every green herb for meat." (Is not tobacco a green herb? We might as well call the staff of life obnoxious. For it is only called good, and therefore conclude that as to character in the Divine mind, they are equal, that is very good. Again, it is not only good in point of character. But very good to the taste yes, delicious to those who make use of this slandered herb. Then call it not obnoxious. Again, it is one of the best antedotes, for extracting poison from the human system, such as the bite of poisonous snakes, spiders, &c. It is therefore good, call it not obnoxious. Again it is good as a commodity. Many who settled in the Beach woods in by-gone days were of necessity compelled to resort to the cultivation of the good herb tobacco, as the most efficient means to support their families; and we need go no further than old Muskingum, Ohio, to satisfy ourselves that the farming community a few years ago thought the cultivation of the weed the most money making business they could engage in. Therefore it must be good,

A. S. R.

Now, Mr. Editor, we do hope that we shall not have so many harsh epithets heaped upon us, even if we should not sign the Anti Tobacco pledge. And we will try if possible to select a brother for next delegate to our Annual Conference that does not use the good herb. No more at present.

From Green's Arts and Miseries of Gambling.

An Affecting Account

Of a Young Man brought to Ruin and an Untimely Death by Gambling.

The young man called at the Doctor's room, who was sitting as unconcerned, apparently, as if nothing had happened.—C. insisted on his "opening" again. He did so, and C. being now amply supplied with cash, bet large sums on the game, and in a short time found himself loser to the amount of several thousand dollars more, and was very much excited, when T. was heard coming in, who said, "Excuse me Mr. C., but I wish you to go down to the vessel—she has arrived with the negroes."

Poor C. now began to feel the smart of the gambling-table, and particularly the faro. He now felt how greatly he had erred in not obeying the advice of his parents. He was no less than twenty thousand dollars loser in the course of a few hours. He had carefully abstained from letting T. know anything of his losings. He had only one remaining hope, and that was, that he would get the Doctor to play for him, and that perhaps by this means he would win his money back.

The next day he called upon the Doctor, and played, and was about seven thousand dollars loser, when T. called and told him that he was then about going to Texas to deliver the negroes. C. said he would remain in the city until he returned. T. advised him to remove his baggage to the hotel; (it having been at the boat until this time,) this, he said, it would be best for him to do, as he would have more company at the hotel. He informed Mr. C. that Miss. A. was going with him, as the trip would probably be of great advantage to her health. 'But,' said T., 'I will have your baggage taken to the North American Hotel, and will call and take dinner with you." He then left C., who returned to the Doctor's room, but did not find him at home, and the servant told him that his master would not be back until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. C. promenaded the hall of the arcade, until two, when he thought he would go to the hotel and bid Mr. T. farewell. When he arrived at the hotel, he found his baggage there, and a card from Mr. T. bidding him farewell, and saying that the boat would leave in a very few minutes, and he might expect to see him again in about three weeks, and requesting that if he could help it, he would not leave for home until his return from Texas.

C. now felt quite desperate near thirty thousand dollars out of pocket, and no person in the city; with the exception of the doctor, with whom he had any acquaintance. He did not eat much dinner, and finally thought that he would again go and try his luck at faro. He went, found the Doctor in his room, and they commenced playing. C. lost, as usual, and thus continued to lose until he had not a solitary dollar left. He then offered to bet his watch, this went at a breath. 'Well,' said he to the doctor, 'I am a ruined man unless you give me a chance to win my money back.' 'Certainly,' replied the Doctor, and then pulled out ten thousand dollars, and told him to bet that. C. played on, but it was not long before the money returned to the pocket of the Doctor. 'Well said he to the young man, 'call on me to morrow morning and I will give you a chance.'

As may well be supposed, C. returned to the hotel in a most desperate state of mind. His reflections ran back to his worthy old parents, and the situation he had placed them in, and bitter was the thought, that there was now no way left him by which he could secure them even a comfortable home; and under the influence of these reflections, most sincerely did he wish that he had never left home. The only glimering hope that remained was, that T. would permit them to live on their old farm the remainder of their days. He called on the Doctor again, but was told that he had left the city. This news nearly distracted his brain. He would visit the room every day as regularly as the day would come, and set about the door as if he thought that certainly he would soon return. Several days had elapsed, and C. had perhaps not eaten five meals during that time. He then thought that if Mr. T——— would return he would probably assist him. Some ten days had elapsed and poor C. was walking as usual through the arcade, when he received a note by a servant, stating that a lady wished him to call round on Canal street and see her as soon as convenient. This he did immediately, and as soon as he arrived, and to his great surprise, whom should he meet but Miss Amelia! For sometime they both remained silent; at length Miss Amelia exclaimed: 'Oh,' said she, 'forgive me Mr. C., but he is a great.' 'Who?' said he, 'Mr. T.' she replied, 'Impossible!' said the young man; 'he is the best friend I ever had, and had I taken his advice, I would this day have been a happy man.' 'Ah!' said she, 'you are not as well acquainted with T. as I am.' She then related to him the treatment she had received from him, and then observed, 'You will certainly forgive me, my troubles are great.' villain. He told her that she had no reason to fear anything from him, as he was not of a disposition to injure any person on earth, and the only persons that he had ever injured in all his life, were his dear parents. She then went on to explain to him in what way T. had deceived him. She told him that T. had found out his situation, and told her that he had had it in contemplation as much as three years before he did, to win, or swindle him out of his money; and that she was no niece of Mr. T.'s: that he had become acquainted with her when she was performing on the stage in Philadelphia, and that he had got her to come and pass for his niece, and that she had already been the cause of the ruin of several young men; that after his return from school at Philadelphia, all her pretended uncle's talk was as to the way by which he might decoy him. She finally told him that T. had written down lessons for her to learn, so that every thing might come out right; and that she was the person that had stolen his money at the theatre, and gave it to T.; and that the horse-race on which he had lost a thousand dollars, was gotten up on purpose to entrap him; that T. had the man to come and proffer the bet. She likewise told him that the fifty odd slaves were owned by T. himself, and that the sale was false. And as to the Doctor, she informed him that he was one of T.'s 'strikers;' that he always had from three to a dozen of such at his command; that the Doctor and T. had returned home and that the individual who went by name of "the Doctor," was a notorious gambler, and had, in his time, been a convict in the penitentiary; and that there was no doubt but that he would have got his money in some other way, if he had not gambled with him: that he always had some men on steamboats to steal for him.

This appeared to alarm C. more than anything else; for he recollected that he had frequently seen the Doctor conversing with very coarsely dressed men, and when he would come near, he would pretend that he was just asking them questions about the boat, the river, &c. These men, Miss Amelia assured him were all followers of the Doctor, that always held themselves ready to perform the most desperate acts that he might require of them.

She then told him that her sickness was all affected; that she only did it, that he might go to the arcade and play faro and that all the betting she had done on the race-course was for T. She then took out different notes that T. had given her, to confirm the statements she had made: that no person knew of the conversations that had taken place but T. He then saw at once through all the designs that had proved so fatal to him. He bade her good day, and returned to the hotel, and locked himself up in his room, and was soon absorbed in deep meditation upon his wretched condition. He knew not what to do: he was then in a strange country, without a friend or acquaintance except his Miss Amelia he had no friend to sympathize with him. He; thought he would return and see if she would not assist him. He returned to the house where she was, and the lady told him that she had stolen some articles of plate, and that she had found them with her, and that she had driven her from her house, and could give him no information concerning her, further. C. then left, and returned to his reflections upon his dreary condition. His mind again ran back to the advice his good old father had given him, and the little regard he had paid to it, having suffered himself to be led off by such a base character as he had discovered T. to be; and had he lost his money in any other way than by gambling, he would have regreted it infinitely less than he did. He then thought that he would set down and write to his father and mother, and give them an account of all the particulars in relation to his misconduct, and ask of them to forgive him—one who had ever wished to do their will, but had been deceived by a base man, in the character of a sportsman; but would entreat them not to cast him off for his conduct, inasmuch as his misfortunes had been brought upon him by the entrigues of that vile and unprincipled man.

T. having now completed his designs, had made his way home, and on his arrival, old Mr. C. called to hear something about his son, T. told him that he had purchased, as he had understood, a large lot of groceries, and he had learnt that he had thought of taking a trip to Texas; and if he went, he had supposed that hi (T.) would keep it a secret from them; but observed, that as his son had not told him his designs, he did not consider that he was under any obligation to keep his secrets for him. And then added, 'That is a pretty wild youth, that son of yours, Mr. C.' 'In what respect?' the old gentleman anxiously inquired, 'Oh, nothing more,' said he 'than he is very much given to levity, and has a great propensity to gaming.' Is it possible said the father.' 'Yes,' responded T.; 'but sir don't let him know that I told you that such was the fact; I was very much surprised when I found out his disposition.' 'Well,' said the old gentleman, 'I never dreamed that my son had any knowledge of the first principles of any game.' 'Why,' said Mr. T., 'he plays whist, poker, and no man appears to love the game of faro more than he does.' 'Well,' said his father, 'this appears like a troublesome dream to me; and have you ever seen him bet any money?' 'Only once,' answered T.; 'I saw him bet a thousand dollars last fall when we were at the races, and it made no more impression on him, than twenty five dollars would have made on me.' 'indeed!' said the old man, 'are you not mistaken Mr. T.? My son had only seven hundred dollars with him, which he had to purchase me a carriage, which cost over six hundred, and other necessaries, and he brought them all as was expected.' 'Oh yes,' said T., 'and I loaned him two thousand dollars besides; here are his notes' he then produced the notes, which young Mr. C. had neglected to take up, on giving the mortgage on his estate, and this man still had them in his possession, and was determined on having them paid the second time. 'Well,' said the old man, 'I would like to take up those notes and keep them till my son comes home, when I will show them to him and make him pay me back my money; and then I will have an opportunity to correct him for it without his having any plea or chance to deny it.' 'Oh, certainly,' said T., 'no difference to me who takes up the notes, so that I get the money.' Mr. C. then drew his check for the money, and gave it to T.; the check amounting to two thousand and fifty dollars interest and all. Mr. C. then returned home with a sorrowful heart, and with news sufficiently sad to break the heart of his poor wife, who always felt the tenderest concern for her son, and could never believe such things of that child, whom she had never known to tell a falsehood in his life.

When C. entered the house, she fastened her eyes upon him, and thought she could see a change in his countenance. She asked him if he was ill in health. His reply was that his health was as good as it was generally but that he found out something in relation to their son, which afflicted his feelings more than any thing had done during his whole life. He then sat down and told her every thing he had heard, and showed her the notes that he had taken up. This news appeared to shock the old lady very much; but she bore it with great fortitude, and tried to console her husband by saying that perhaps it was not so bad as they had supposed.

Conclusion next week.

Materialism Reasoned Out.

Conversing, the other day, with an intelligent German physician, who not long since revisited his native land, I was led to ask some questions about the Universities and great Professors of the continent. He spoke of some of the latter as rank materialists, and of others as scarcely daring to admit some evident truths, from their excessive fear of this error.

"They had better," said he, "do as I have done; go through materialism."

"How was that?"

"I once held such views myself, but I reasoned them out in this way: All bodies consist of atoms, upon whose peculiar arrangements and combinations depend their qualities. These arrangements and combinations are 'accidental.' Thus atoms combined under a certain form compose the heart: and it happens to be the result of such combination and contraction and expansion causes the flux and the reflux of the blood. Under another form they compose the liver; and it happens that atoms so combined secrete bile. Under another form they constitute the brain, and it happens that the brain, thinks, or as some have even ventured to assert, secretes thought. —Then thought is accidental; my reasonings are accidental. My very conclusions, therefore, which have led me to believe in Materialism, are the result of accident, are uncertain; are probability, 'untrue.' "

"And so," added my friend, "I got thro' Materialism."

THE BOY AND THE BELL-MAN.—The Rev. Jno. Marsh, in an address before the Greene County Temperance Society, introduced the following incident:

A beautiful story has been told of a little boy who was placed at the door of the Hall in Philadelphia, to give notice to the old bell-man in the steeple when the Declaration of Independence should be signed. The old man waited long at his post, saying, "They will never do it, they will never do it," when he heard a shout below. He gazed on the pavement, there stood the little boy, clapping his tiny hands and shouting,—"Ring! ring!" Grasping the iron tongue of the bell, backwards and forwards he hurled it a hundred times, proclaiming liberty to the land, and the inhabitants thereof. That sound crossed the Atlantic, pierced the dungeons of Europe, the workshops of England, the vassal fields of France That sound spoke to the slave, bade him look from his toil and know himself a man. Yes, & the voice of that little boy, lifting himself on tiptoe, and shouting Ring, has come down to us, and bid us ring the fiend's doom, and proclaim liberty to the world. We will shout it to the philanthropist, to every patriot, every father, every mother, every orator, and every preacher, Ring, and we will sound it through the world.

A minister, praying over a child apparently dying, said: "If it be thy will, spare." The poor mother's soul yearning for her beloved, exclaimed: "It must be his will—I cannot bear ifs." The minister stopped. The child recovered; and the mother, after almost suffering martyrdom from him while a strippling, lived to see him hanged before he was two-and-twenty! Oh! it is good to say, "Not my will but thine!"

ANTI-SLAVERY IN KENTUCKY.—Slavery in Kentucky appears to be doomed. A third or fourth attempt to repeal the law which prohibits the importation of slaves into that State, so far as to allow their importation for use but not for sale, was on the 29th defeated in the Senate by a vote of 19 to 17. The people have once voted in favor of calling a convention, and a bill has passed the Legislature now in session, again submitting the question for their final determination. At first the opposition was strong; but the vote already taken has put a quietus to the opponents, and those who were at first its strong opponents, are now loudly telling their reason for being in favor of a convention. A few of the leading conventionists are determined that the new constitution shall contain a provision for the gradual abolition of slavery; whilst other declare that so long as there is a black skin in Kentucky it shall be held in bondage. But that a majority are opposed to slavery, or at least, to the increase of slave, is clearly shown by the vote upon the bill repealing the law of 1833.

A STEP TOWARDS EMANCIPATION IN RUSSIA.—The Frakfort Gazette, of the 31st ult. publishes Imperial Ukase of the Emperior Nocholas, dated St. Petersburg, 20th ult., which permits the the present serfs throughout the monarchy to purchase the property of their masters when sold by public auction. By such purchase they acquire all the rights attached to the property. This is a very important movement.

Nothing is more ridiculous than to be serious about trifles, and to be trifling about serious matters.

A man who had worked out a long confinement on the treadmill claimed the honor due to a 'revolutionary' hero.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN NORWAY.—For two years past a system has been in operation which comprises the following rules:—"No member of any Non-comformist church whatever, can be bound to pay imposts which shall be employed for the maintenance of the Church of the State. There is no distinction between the members of different confessions of same state either as relates to their civel rights or to their obligations as citizens."

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S

Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla

PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. For sale at J. Deen's.

THE OLD MISER.

BY J. MAXIM.

Kind Editors, to you I send
This friendly scroll which I have penn'd,
And that you readers may be wiser,
I'll tell them all about the 'miser;'
Perhaps some one may question me,
And say, 'a miser—what is he?'
Well, 'tis a junk some like an ape,
But more resembles human shape,
Or something looking like a man,
With feet and legs and head and hands.
But what about it is most droll,
It has a carcase, but no soul!
That is, (now understand the joke)
It has no soul like other folks—
To tell the truth and speak it plain,
The miser's object all is gain.
His whole attention too is bent
On how to get and save each cent;
He works and toils both night and day,
And thinks of nothing but the pay;
And paper, gold and silver chink
To him are all his meat and drink;
For luxuries he does not care,
He is content with any fare,
And often scants his daily ration—
And spends no time for recreation;
He, of such things himself denies,
Not caring for his taste or eyes.
And if in case of joy or sorrow
He wants to read, he'll always borrow
A book, or almanac, or paper,
And thus make out a 'saving caper!'
Cries out, so poor he cannot buy,
While he has cash piled to the sky!
Ask him a newspaper to take,
'Twill make his very heart-core ache,
And though he loves to hear the news,
He always begs to be 'excused!'
'Why I am very poor,' says he,
''Tis strange that you should come to me,
If I should take a paper now
I soon should have to sell my cow!
Beside, when I some money get
I want to pay some little debt,
And having little time to read,
I must buy things I mostly need.
If I should want to hear the news
I'll go right down to Esquire Hewes;
He takes the papers two or three—
Which he will kindly lend to me;
And I can read them when I may,
And not a cent shall have to pay,
Therefore I think 'twill be the best
For me to let the matter rest!'
* * * * * *
Oh, how the misers, young or old,
Do love to worship sordid gold!
It is their god, their all below,
Although to happiness—a foe!
If all mankind were just such people,
No church on earth would have a steeple;
Societies would burst asunder,
And governments would soon 'knock under!'
All printing presses would go down
In city, village, or in town;
And every thing that suits the taste
Of decent men, would be laid waste;
They'd pinch their bodies out of breath,
And starve the human mind to death;
But Misers are not very plenty—
Perhaps not more than TWO (?) to twenty
Among the living sons of earth—
And we thank heaven, it is no worse,
And hope that all who owe the printer
Will 'pay him up' the present winter.

Temperance Societies.---Continued

The National Society, called The American Temperance Society; the several State Societies, auxiliary to the National Society; the County Societies auxiliary to the State Society; Town Societies, auxiliary to the County Societies; School District Societies, auxiliary to Town Societies,—all the members of these different Societies formed but one Society, even as the members of the body, though many, form but one body. It was readily seen that so great a combination of open moral force as was presented by this organization had an immense influence on the public mind. Accordingly the means thus openly and publicly used by the American Temperance Society and its Auxiliaries, were successful beyond anticipation. At first the establishment of a single Newspaper, designed to advocate Temperance, regarded as a mere business transaction, was looked upon as visionary and ruinous. Political papers in most cases were unwilling to publish articles designed to promote the Temperance Reform; even some refused to publish so much as a notice of a temperance meeting. In 1832, there were eight or ten Temperance Newspapers in the United States. Hundreds of thousands of these papers and tracts were gratuitously circulated over the length and breadth of the land. Had not this course been taken, there is but little probability that the glorious reformation would have so greatly advanced. It was well for the youth of those days that these efforts were so publicly and freely made—it was of incalculable importance to the world.—Similar labors are now needed, and will be needed by every generation, until that glad day when no one shall be found to poison himself or to poison his brother.

From 1826, to 1832, the results of the great Temperance Reformation were so apparent as to be seen in the increase of private wealth and happiness, the dimunition of crime, the decrease of taxes for the support of the poor, and the punishment of criminals. ☞Nor was the result less favorable upon the general health; especially as affording a security against the ravages of that scourge of the nations, the Asiatic Cholera, which in 1832, visited the United States. Take an example; In the city of Albany, there were 336 reported deaths of persons over sixteen years of age, from cholera. Only two of these were members of Temperance Societies, of whom there were at that time 5000 in that city, which then had a population of 26,000—and of the 336 who died, only seven including the two members of Temperance Societies, abstained from ardent spirits.

Great and glorious indeed were the doings of the original open Temperance Societies, upon canals, and rivers, and ships, and in reaports—and towns, and villages, and neighborhoods; and, families, and husbands, and fathers, and mothers, and children rejoiced in their saving influence. "There was joy in heaven."

Fifteen years ago, it was clearly seen that the effects of the Temperance Reform had been so happy, as to have carried the conviction to every reflecting mind, that if it were possible entirely to abolish the use of ardent spirit from the United States, they would soon rise to a point of greatness and glory, unexampled in the history of nations. The use of ardent spirit had been the incubus which had lain upon the States of North America since their union. Previous to the wars of 1756, and of 1775, drunkenness was by no means a common vice among the inhabitants of the then colonies.

In 1832, the Executive Committee of the State of New York, in its "Succinct history of the Temperance Reform in America," stated that if "the effects of the use of intoxicating liquors in a single year in the Union were collected into one group, there would be presented to the eye of weeping humenity, an army of 300,000 drunkards, 75,000 criminals, 200,000 paupers, and more than 600 insane persons—[perhaps not fewer than 50,000 fatherless children] all the victims directly or indirectly of ardent spirit, while at the same time, at least 30,000 sank into a drunkard's grave. With these facts before them, facts, which, however humbling they may be considered, were too well authenticated to be denied, Americans commenced the work of reform, openly, in the view of heaven and earth, willing that all the world should unite with them and participate in the blessings they sought—their publicly expressed desire was—a thousand times and in all modes expressed—that all nations should unite in an alliance, against ardent spirit, and remove forever that prolific cause of so much crime, misery and death.

The temperance cause is the cause of humanity. It openly appeals to all of every nation, & people, and language, where the miseries and unspeakable consequences of intemperance are seen and felt; and the appeal comes both from heaven and earth sanctioned by every motive which can have influence upon the human mind. Were the nations of Europe, the inhabitants of the United States, and of British America, to unite in admitting the claims of the temperance reform, what torrents of human wretchedness would cease to flow, and what an amount of human happiness would be secured! The Iron age would then probably soon pass away, and the Golden one be ushered in, and our earth bloom in something like primeval happiness and peace.

Standing out in the view of angels and men, the Temperance Reformers of 1832, exultingly proclaimed: This work can be accomplished.—Let but the great and the good and the wise, will its existence, and it shall be. Light and love, going publicly out into the earth, like twin sisters, in the light of the sun, shall scatter the mists of error, dispel the clouds of ignorance and prejudice—sorrow and sighing shall flee away, and joy and happiness shall take their place among men. Gaols, and penitentiaries, and State prisons, and alms-houses, shall stand only as monuments of departed vice; the drunkard's loathsome form shall no more awaken shame and sorrow, sobriety, good order and intelligence, shall be every where diffused, and the way be prepared for consummating the anticipations and the wishes of the patriots and philanthropists of all ages.

In 1823, Mr. S. Bronson, published a Tract, entitled "A Mirror for Christian Poisoners, Legal Swindlers, their Assistants and Abettors." Whether or not the following extract from the Mirror is applicable to any one or any class of men of the present day, the reader will please decide, in view of his own town or neighborhood.

"There is a class of men whose baleful influence and vile attacks upon society are more to be dreaded than those of the highway robber.—They strip their fellow citizens of their property; they destroy industry and morality, and every christian virtue; and promote idleness, poverty and disease. They are the root, the chief source of more than half the crimes committed in the land. They destroy the comforts and hopes of their victims, and send them to an untimely grave. They promote the commission of every kind of crime, robbery and murder not excepted. The separation of husbands and wives, the abandoning of parents and children, and their mutual discord and hatred, can generally be traced to the same origin.

"How can he who vends liquid fire, say that he believes in a state of future retribution! or that he has faith in Him who said, "All things which ye would men should do unto you, do ye the same to them?" Could any one in his right mind wish his neighbor to give or sell him a poisonous draught which would deprive him of his reason, and cause him to commit crimes which would subject him to the loss of life or liberty; and entail everlasting disgrace upon him and his posterity? No person who has for any length of time manufactured or vended ardent spirit, can speak the truth and say that his occupation has not been attended with pernicious consequences to his fellow-creatures! And no doubt many a one is now living, who recollects with horror the vending of that draught which caused either the premature death, or murder, of one or more of his fellow-creatures.

"Manufacturers and venders of ardent spirits are almost the only accessories to crime that the ingenuity of man has not invented laws to punish. He who only advises or assists in the destruction of his neighbor's property, or in the elopement of his child or ward, subjects himself to the penalties of the law; and he is adjudged a murderer, who only advises or assists in the destruction of a human being.—It is indeed surprising that any christian society should admit into, or retain in its body, any person whose occupation is so destructive to mankind." This was plain dealing—much more of the same sort is still needed.

Note.—The American Temperance Society, formed at Boston in 1826, was not the first Temperance Society in the United States, "The first society for this object, and based on the principle of total abstinence, of which we have any certain information, was at Moreau, in the Co. of Saratoga, N. Y. This was in the year 1808. Of the original members of this society, all, or nearly all are living, (this was said in 1833,) & have ever faithfully observed their pledge."—This is a remarkable fact, that nearly all who formed the first Temperance Society, were living 25 years afterwards. If Dr. Billy J. Clark is still living, blessings be upon him in utmost abundance and variety—if deceased, may his memory never perish—for it was he who first suggested the plan of reform by organizing the first temperance society.

Religious Controversy---The Natural Tendency of its Operations.

Mr. Editor: Of the full extent of the evil consequent on a baneful indulgence in Religious Controversy, but few persons, comparatively, are thoroughly aware. It is a grave and important subject, meriting a careful investigation; but, nevertheless, it is only very partially and imperfectly understood. A proper knowledge of it, indeed, can only be acquired by painful experience, which is said to "keep a dear school, though fools will learn in no other." The united testimony of those possessing the experience referred to, is decidedly against the practice, by which that unenviable species of wealth was unhappily acquired. They have an instinctive horror of the perplexing scenes in which they once participated,—very much on the same principle, that "burned children dread the fire." Could they, by judicious counsel, or earnest exhortation, deter their friends from engaging in a similar conflict,—good, in that event, would be truly brought out of evil, and former anxiety made conducive to present enjoyment. All that they can do however is to sound the tocsin of alarm, and fervently pray that their well-meant efforts may produce the intended effect.

A faithful history of the feuds and contentions, which, during the last half century, have disturbed and distracted the European and American churches, would be regarded, by most persons, as altogether incredible. The spiritual loss sustained by the parties, immediately concerned, no being, merely human, can correctly calculate. It is a mournful fact, that religious controversy is ordinarily conducted with more rancor and bitterness, than any other. The persons who engage in this exciting business, are generally strictly conscientious, and sincerely believe they are "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints." Hence they display a burning zeal, not always according to knowledge, and often manifest, towards their opponents, a spirit of intolerance and dogmatism, entirely inconsistent with the profession of religion. At the outset they contend for truth, and subsequently for victory, without being aware of the fact, apparently "resolved to conquer or die." In this way they lose, almost imperceptibly, the grace of God out of their hearts, and by a slow but sure process, substitute in its place hatred, malice and all uncharitableness. These feelings become contagious, and usually spread throughout the entire membership of the church, so that the Temple dedicated to the service of God, is converted into a Babel of discord and confusion. Oh! how the enemies of christianity rejoice over a scene like this! They dwell upon it with great complacency, and direct attention to the apparent fact, that the Christians of the present generation are distinguished for their hatred, rather than for their love of each other. An event of this kind, is better calculated, perhaps, than any other, to cause a yell of delight among the demons of the pit.

How professing Christians will answer, to God, for conduct of this kind, it is not easy to imagine. It surely must be regarded as "wounding the Redeemer in the house of his friends, and putting him to open shame." Those who have been "seeking his face and favor, with strong cries and tears," will probably be turned out of the way, and induced to regard professors of religion with distrust, if not with horror. We have always entertained the idea, and are getting more and more confirmed in it daily, that wayward and inconsistent church members injure the cause of religion, or interests of Christ's kingdom, more, than the combined efforts of all the open and avowed Infidels in the world.

Men, comparatively young and inexperienced, engage, we doubt not, in Religious Controversy, with the best and purest motives. They discover, or think they do, something in the church to which they belong, that requires to be put right, and hence they set about the work of reform, by prosecuting their views through the medium of the Church Organ. In their eagerness to do good, as they suppose, they gladly enter the lists, to run a tilt, or break a lance with their friends; forgetting, in their haste, that they may inflict or receive deep, if not incurable wounds. Did they duly consider the great injury that may be done, and the little good that can be accomplished, they would, doubtless, act with more prudence and discretion. They should remember that a single coal, nay even a spark of fire, might cause a conflagration that would lay waste a populous city, or flourishing neighborhood. It may be well moreover, to remind them, that if a body of water, long pent up, makes but the smallest aperature through the embankment that confines it, the whole breastwork, will, ere long, be swept away, and the surrounding country completely inundated.

We trust these cursory remarks will be received, as they have been written, in the spirit of kindness; and appreciated for their candor and moderation, if not for their intrinsic excellence.

A LOVER OF PEACE.

Ministerial.

Apologies before Preaching.

How disgusting to hear a man who professes to be called of God to deliver the word of the Lord to dying men, take up five, ten or fifteen minutes in worse than useless apologies before entering on his subject. There is not a word of gospel in it. Did the Savior ever make an apology for preaching? Did Paul, or Peter, or John? Any of the early ministers in whom the Holy Ghost dwelt in its fullness? Not a word of it; self was never mentioned unless to illustrate the power of grace to the glory of God. But, Brother, what is the object, what the principle that moves the preacher to speak of his youth & inexperience, his ignorance, weariness or present unfitness to preach? Has self nothing to do in it? Does it not spring from a secret, hidden pride—a desire to have the audience make every possible allowance for him, and thereby place the highest estimate possible on his effort? If he fail to meet the general expectation, he would have it charged to unavoidable present circumstances, and not to any want of talent—he could do better were he differently circumstanced. Such apologies might do for lecturers who seek honor from man, but the minister of the humble Jesus, who should be dead to self, has enough to do, to declare the message from God to men, to absorb his whole soul. He that hath my word, saith the Lord, let him speak it faithfully. Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season. Reprove, rebuke with all authority; let no man despise thee—but quit, O quit that useless, unchristian practice of apologizing in connexion with the solemn work of the ministry.—Religious Telescope.

Wesley on Study.

Wesley knew the importance of studious habits on the part of his preachers. To an indolent one he gives the following admonition, not inappropriate now-a-days:

"Your talent in preaching does not increase; it is about the same it was several years ago; it is lively but not deep; there is little variety; there is no compass of thought. Reading can only supply this, with daily meditation and daily prayer. You wrong yourself greatly by omitting this; you can never be a deep preacher without it, any more than a thorough Christian. O, begin. Fix some part of every day for private exercise. You may acquire the taste which you have not; what is tedious at first will afterwards be pleasant. Whether you like it or not read and pray daily. It is for your life; there is no other way; else you will be a trifler all your days, and a pretty, superficial preacher. Do justice to your own soul; give it time and means to grow; do not starve yourself any longer."

Youth's Department.

Recovery of a Daughter.

Many years ago, several German families left their country and settled in North America.—Amongst them was a man from Wirtemberg, who, with his wife and large family, established himself in Pennsylvania. There were no churches or schools then in that neighborhood, and he was compelled to keep the Sabbath at home with his family, instructing them himself to read the Bible and pray to God. He used very often to read the Scriptures to them, and used first to say, "Now, my children, be still, and listen to what I am going to read: for it is God who speaks to us in this book."

In the year 1754, a dreadful war broke out in Canada between the French and English.—The Indians took part with the French, and made excursions as far as Pennsylvania, where they plundered and burned all the houses they came to, and murdered the people. In 1755, they reached the dwelling of the poor family from Wirtemberg, while the wife and one of the sons had gone to the mill, four miles distant, to get some corn ground. The husband, the eldest son, and two litle girls, named Barbara and Regina, were at home. The father and his son were instantly killed by the savages, but they carried the two little girls away into captivity with a great many other children who were taken in the same manner. They were led many miles through woods and thorny bushes, that nobody might follow them. In this condition they were brought to the inhabitants of the Indians, who divided among themselves all the children whom they had taken captive.

Barbara was at this time ten years old, and Regina nine. It was never known what became of Barbara; but Regina, and a little girl about two years old, were given to an old widow, who was a very cruel woman. Her only son lived with her and maintained her; but he was sometimes from home for weeks together, and these poor children were forced to go into the woods and gather roots and other provisions for the old woman, and when they did not bring her enough to eat, she would beat them in so cruel a manner that they were nearly killed. The little girl always kept close to Regina, and when she knelt down under a tree, and repeated the prayers to the Lord Jesus, and the hymns which her father and mother had taught her, the little girl prayed with her and learned the hymns and prayers by heart. In this melancholy state of slavery, these children remained nine long years, till Regina was nineteen years of age and her little companion was eleven years old. While captives, their hearts seemed to have been drawn towards what was good. Regina continually repeated the verses from the Bible, and the hymns she had learned when at home, and she taught them to the little girl. They used to cheer each other with one from the hymn-book used at Halle, in Germany:

"Alone, yet not alone am I,
Though in this solitude so drear."

They constantly hoped that the Lord Jesus, would, some time, bring them back to their Christian friends.

In 1764, the hopes of these children were realized. The merciful providence of God bro't the English Colonel Boquet to the place where they were in captivity. He conquered the Indians and forced them to ask for peace. The first condition that he made, was, that they should restore all the prisoners they had taken. Thus both of the poor girls were released.—More than four hundred captives were brought to Colonel Boquet. It was an affecting sight to see so many young people wretched and distressed. The Colonel and his soldiers gave them food and clothes, and brought them to a town called Carlisle, and published in the Pennsylvania newspapers that all parents who had lost their children might come to this place, and in case of finding them, they should be restored.—Poor Regina's sorrowing mother came, among many other bereaved parents, to Carlisle; but alas! her child had become a stranger to her.—Regina had acquired the appearance and manner as well as the language, of the natives. The poor mother went up and down among the young persons assembled, but by no efforts could she discover her daughters. She wept in bitter grief and disappointment.—Colonel Boquet said, "Do you recollect nothing by which your children might be discovered?"

She answered that she recollected nothing but a hymn which she used to sing with them, and which was as follows:

"Alone, yet not alone am I,
Though in this solitude so drear;
I feel my Savior always nigh,
He comes the weary hours to cheer,
I am with Him, and He with me,
Even here alone I cannot be."

The Colonel desired her to sing this hymn.—Scarcely had the mother sung two lines of it, when Regina rushed from the crowd, began to sing it also, and threw herself into her mother's arms. They both wept for joy, and the Colonel restored the daughter to her mother. There was no one to own the little girl; and as she clung to Regina, and would not let her go, the mother took her also to her home.

As soon as Regina came home, she inquired for 'the book in which God speaks to us.'—Her mother was unfortunately destitute of that treasure, having lost everything when the natives burnt the house. A Bible, however, was presented to her, when application was made at Philadelphia; and it is remarkable that Regina had so retained her early instructions that she was enabled to read immediately, when the precious book was handed to her.—Related by the Rev. Mr. Rane, of Elsinore, in Denmark.

Scientific.

GEOLOGY.

The Bible was long pronounced a fable, by infidels, because it recorded the occurrence of a Deluge; and it was contended that no evidences of the changes which such a catastrophe must have produced, could be discovered anywhere on the earth, but that all things remained as they were from the beginning—if there ever had been a beginning. Hume, probably, was the leader in this mode of attack upon the Bible. Men of science, about his time, had begun to look curiously at the rocks, and to examine minutely the petrified wood, and bones of animals, and seashells, &c., of which many of the strata composing the earth seemed to be partly composed. Some of these fossils were found in very high mountains, far from the sea, and as the shells, while living, could never have crawled, by land, several hundred miles, to bury themselves, it was rationally concluded that they must have lived in their native element, and died there too, and been buried by the influx of sedimentary matter from rivers and coasts, which afterwards was converted into rocks, and the shells into petrifactions, after which the bed of the ocean was elevated and became dry land.

A few years proved that the earth had not always remained as it was from the creation, but that disturbances, affecting more or less the entire surface of the globe, had taken place—that the foundations of the primary oceans had been broken up and elevated to mountain heights—that the displaced ocean waters, in rushing impetuously down the inclined planes, produced by the upheaval, had torn up and born off, in their maddened carreer, thousands of feet in depth, and tens of thousands of miles in width, of the rocky strata previously formed beneath their surface, and finally found a resting-place in the basins of the present seas—and that the pebble, and sand, and clays, and rocky masses of the ancient beaches and shallower parts of the oceans, had been borne from distances of hundreds of miles, and left strewed in confusion over the surface of the newly exposed lands. These changes were found to have been wrought upon the earth—were demonstrated by fair and legitimate reasoning, and the truth of the Mosaic history thus far established. A deluge had carried devastation over the whole earth, and the wrecks and ruins of all the pre-existing state of things lay naked and bare, and clearly exposed to the gaze of the wonder-struck philosopher.

The Christian said, Now, where is your argument against the flood? Stop, said the infidel, and he trudged off in the track of the Geologist, and looked grave, and scratched his head for a few years, when, lo! a happy idea was at length caught.—Oh, yes, he exclaimed, there has been a Flood. There are abundant evidences of that; but there is more. There have been twenty Floods. Here are the evidences of it, and he pointed to a certain strata standing upon their edge, having been elevated by disturbing forces from their original horizontal position, and having other strata overlying them horizontally, and upon these the Drift, which the waters of the Deluge left behind, lay in confusion, affording evidence, as he affirmed, that more than one period of disturbance had occurred. And farther, he exclaimed, your Bible says the earth was densely populated before the deluge; yet not a single skeleton or bone of man, or any work of art, is to be found in the Drift, or beneath it; therefore these deluges, producing such tremendous effects upon the earth, must have occurred before the creation of man.

Well, well, says the Christian, dig, and bore, and search in cave and mountain, in hill and valley, and throughout the depths of the sea, as industriously as you please. I fear nothing. My Bible, my religion, is proven by divine testimony wholly independant of all the Trilobites, and Ammonites, the Saurians and Mastodons of all the rocks in the world. You yet may turn up the bones of a man from the Drift or older rocks but until you have ransacked the earth's entire surface and ocean's vast extent, ask me not to discredit my Bible on account of your ignorance of what may exist buried in the earth by the deluge.

Well, away went the infidel and made many wonderful discoveries, proving the world millions of years old, and Moses all wrong. Some of these I may notice again—one only may suffice for the present.—A year or more since, a lot of bones were found in Tennessee, in digging a well, 60 feet below the surface, in a fissure, or sink-hole, in the rocks. The bones were collected and arranged by the anatomists of the neighborhood, and pronounced to be those of a man, a giant eighteen-feet high! belonging, as was by some more stoutly contended, to a pre-Adamic race—because though he belonged to the same genus with the sons of Adam, yet there were such marked differences as to prove him a distinct species. Look here! said the infidel, where is your Bible now? It has but one creation of Man, and there has been two, at least.

Well, the skeleton was taken to the east, the wonderful discovery announced, and the curiosity loving world ran eagerly to gaze upon it. In stepped a genuine son af science, to see the monster man. At once he burst into an immoderate fit of laughter. The keeper was astonished.—An explanation followed, and the young Mastodon, for such it was, soon found itself relieved from the uneasy posture into which it had been reared upon its hinder feet, and let down again upon all fours, where it has ever since quietly rested.—Since then we have heard nothing of the pre-Adamic giant.—Christian Magazine of the South.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dr. Franklin on Infidelity.

The following letter of Dr. Franklin, found in his works, edited by his grandson, William Temple Franklin, (London edition, vol. iii., p, 279.) addressed to the author of an infidel publication, submitted to him in manuscript, [probably Paine,] claims the attention of every American citizen:

Dear Sir—I have read your manuscript with some attention. By the argument it contains against a particular Providence, though you allow a general Providence, you can strike at the foundation of all religion. For, without the belief of a Providence that takes cognizance of, guards and guides, and may favor particular persons, there is no motive to worship a Deity, to fear its displeasure, or to pray for its protection. I will not enter into any discussion of your principles, tho' you seem to desire it. At present I shall only give you my opinion; and though your reasonings are subtle, & may prevail with some readers, you will not succeed so as to change the general sentiments of mankind on that subject; and the consequence of printing this piece will be, a great deal of odium drawn upon yourself, mischief to you, & no benefit to others. He that spits against the wind spits in his own face. But were you to succeed, do you imagine any good will be done by it? You yourself may find it easy to lead a virtuous life without the assistance afforded by religion; you having a clear perception of the advantages of virtue and the disadvantages of vice, and possessing a strength of resolution sufficient to enable you to resist common temptations. But think how great a portion of mankind consists of ignorant men & women, & of inexperienced, inconsiderate youth of both sexes, who have need of motives of religion to restrain them from vice, support their virtue and restrain them in the practice of it till it becomes habitual, which is the great point of its security. And perhaps you are indebted to her originally, that is to your religious education, for the habits of virtue upon which you now justly value yourself. You might easily display your excellent talents of reasoning upon a less hazardous subject, and thereby obtain a rank with our most distinguished authors. For among us it is not necessary, as among the Hottentots, that a youth, to be raised into the company of men, should prove his manhood by beating his mother. I would advise you, therefore, not to attempt unchaining the tiger, but burn this piece before it is seen by any other person, whereby you will save yourself a great deal of mortification from the enemies it may raise against you, and perhaps a good deal of regret and repentance.

If men are so wicked with religion, what would they be without it? I intend this letter as a proof of my friendship, and therefore add no professions to it, but subscribe myself simply,

Yours, B. Franklin.

A Sailor on shore.—A tar growing sick of his business, deserted his ship, went into the country, and hired himself to a farmer. He was immediately set to ploughing with a yoke of oxen and an old mare called Jin. The sailor, being wholly unacquainted with the management of the tacks, sheets and bowlines of his old mare and oxen in his first attempt to put about, missed stay, and by turning the yoke, threw Jin and the oxen all down in a heap together. Jack, frightened with the confusion, bawled out for help.

The farmer asked—"What's the matter?"

"Matter! Matter enough," replied Jack. "The larboard ox has got on the starboard side—old Jin has got foul of the rigging, and they all went down stern foremost."

Religious Intelligence.

BOSTON DISTRICT.

We copy the following from the Boston Olive Branch.

Methodist Protestant Society.

The Methodist Protestant Society in Boston now worship in Bowdoin Hall opposite the Hancock School House, 138 Hanover Street. The place is leased by responsible persons, and persons wishing to worship with them have good reason to believe that permanent means of grace will be secured by the Society and its friends.

Rev. J. M'Leish, a gifted and eloquent minister, has been appointed to supply the pulpit every alternate Sabbath. He commenced his services by opening the new place in connection with the resident Pastor and others on last Sabbath.

Rev. C. W. Denison, who with his Society was received into the Methodist Protestant connection by the President during the last year, is appointed by the Conference to supply the pulpit on the Sabbaths not occupied by the President.—Mr. Denison is an able speaker, and esteemed by his friends to be a worthy man in whose piety they have full confidence.

Both he and the church, through their delegate, requested of Conference a man of gifts and unquestioned ministerial character, to aid him and them the current year. In accordance with this request, they released the President of the District from the obligation of visiting the societies in the District more than once, leaving every other Sabbath to be devoted to the Society in Boston. Accordingly, Rev. Mr. M'Leish commenced that service on the last Sabbath, and will continue his service every other Sabbath regularly. Rev. Mr. Denison will occupy the pulpit regularly the other Sabbaths.

We trust the friends of the Society will do all they can to sustain its best interests under the labors of the gentlemen who are to fill their pulpit. Mr. Denison will preach next Sabbath.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Vienna Ct. March 20, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I wish to inform the friends of Zion through the columns of the Recorder, that we are at our post, and through the blessings of the Lord we are endeavoring to advance the cause of our adorable Redeemer. Though we have not been favored with that success that we wished; yet we are not discouraged, for we know in whom we have believed. It is he that is faithful and just to bless the well-meant efforts of his children. I am happy to say, that I found this charge in a good condition; the societies were in peace. And peace and harmony still prevail. I commenced my labors on the first Sabbath after Conference. Held our first quarterly Conference in West Salem, November 13, protracted the meeting 10 days; 4 professed to have found Christ, the power of God to their souls in the forgiveness of sins. 2 united with us in church fellowship. Our next effort was in Green, the meeting was protracted 17 days. And of a truth the Lord was with us to bless the faithful with the outpouring of his spirit; and to add to their numbers, such we hope as will be eternally saved. He entered the ranks of the adversary, and arrested those that had fought many a battle sore. And though at the eleventh hour he led them to the mercy-seat. Then the Lord deigned to hear prayer, and in answer to the same streaming mercy descended, and several were enabled to rise and declare that God had power on earth to forgive sins: for they had the witness of the Spirit bearing witness with their spirits that they were born of God. Eight united with the society. The next effort was the second quarterly meeting, in Vienna. At this we were favored with the labors of the President, (Br. Clancy,) which were highly appreciated by all that were in attendance. Though the meeting was not attended with immediate conversions; it was one of religious instruction, and highly beneficial to the church; and the impressive sermons that were delivered by the faithful minister on that occasion, we trust will not be forgotten, but will be as the bread cast upon water, gathered after many days. Thus we have spent so much of the year, with little success, 16 conversions, and 13 added to the church. But we expect more, Oh! may God send prosperity to Zion, and build her waste places again, and let the notes of the turtle be heard through the land. Brethren pray for us.

A. R. BROWN.

IOWA DISTRICT.

Winchester, Van Buren Co., Iowa, March 16, 1848.

Dear Br. Bassett: I take up my pen, to let you and the readers of your excellent paper know, what the Lord is doing for us in the far-off West.

My second quarterly meeting commenced the first Saturday and Sunday in February. The Lord was with us in power, the church was revived, and sinners were convicted and converted, and among them a man noted for horse racing, & an infidel. Such was the power of the divine Spirit the meeting lasted nine days, during which time I had no help except two sermons preached by others, at which meeting 10 united. Four weeks afterwards I held another in Winchester but being disappointed in ministerial help was alone, except the blessed Master. The meeting lasted 7 days, 8 united with us, making in all 27 that have united with us since my arrival to the circuit, to God be all the glory. I should say the membership took hold and labored faithfully. We are still looking for greater displays of God's grace and power.

Yours in Christ,
ROBERT MILLER.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, April 6, 1848.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encouraging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	17
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chaneyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	5
Rev. A. S. Robinson, Ridgefield Four Cor. O	6
Rev. J. Nichols, Hoskinsville, O.	5
Rev. R. M. Dalbey, Bethel, O.	5
Rev. O. P. Stephens, Catawba, O.	5

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us

Middle of the Volume.—We had intended discontinuing a large number this week, of delinquent subscribers. We however have concluded to wait a little longer on some of them, for we do think they intend to pay. The number we have discontinued is twenty. We have had the pleasure however of adding the names of ten new subscribers this week. Many more are on the way we trust. Thanks to our friends.

Fast Day.—The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have appointed the last Friday in the present month, to be observed thro' out the connection, as a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer, that the divine blessing may rest upon the session of the General Conference of that Church, to meet at Pittsburgh on the 1st of May ensuing.

Another.—The last "Olive Branch," contains the proclamation of Gov. Briggs of Massachusetts, appointing the 6th day of April (this day) to be observed as a day of Fasting, Humiliation and Prayer. The Governor points out the necessity of individual and public repentance and humiliation. He enumerates various objects of supplication to the Almighty, one of which is the following:

"That he will immediately restore peace between this and a sister Republic, and open the way for giving liberty to the millions of the human race now wearing the chain of Slavery in our own land.

Quick—Certain and Novel Cure for a Felon.—Rev. J. C. Wright, of Northfield, Ia., informs us that Mr. D. Dilly, a neighbor of his, had a felon on one of his fingers which was so exceedingly painful that for several nights he was entirely prevented from sleep. The following novel expedient was resorted to for a remedy, after which he found relief in a very few minutes. He went out of doors by night, took his axe, and by moonlight, deliberately chopped his diseased finger fairly off! The blood was then staunched, and that night he slept as soundly as ever in his life! Wonder who will be the next one to try that remedy.

A Discourse, delivered in Defence of the Ministry of Women: or a Sermon, showing that Female Preaching is in accordance with, and sustained by the Holy Scriptures, and the usages of the Primitive Church, by Rev. Wm. Reeves."

This is a neat and handsome pamphlet of 72 pages, recently issued from the Western Recorder press. The Sermon has been published in parts in the columns of our paper, and has been extensively read. But its publication in more substantial form for preservation has been called for. We have heretofore spoken of the production as an elaborate one, exhibiting a surprising amount of argument, scripture and learned authorities, in support of the positions of the Author. We know a number of intelligent persons in various places who have been led by its perusal, to embrace fully the Author's views. A minister of high standing in a distant Conference, writes us as follows. "While the sermon might have been much more condensed, in my opinion it contains many strong arguments, and I am strongly inclined to think conclusive ones. If published in pamphlet, I would like to have a dollar's worth sent by mail." Br. Reeves offers the work for sale at 87½ cents per dozen, (which is a low price.) Retail, 10 cents. To be had on application to the author, Pittsburgh, Pa. We have also a supply at this office, and will be happy to furnish copies at wholesale or retail to brethren of surrounding circuits. Let the work be well circulated and read.

The following notice is from the Methodist Protestant of January 8th.

THE SPHERE OF WOMAN.

Rev. Wm. Reeves, of the Methodist Protestant Church, has published by request, in the late numbers of the "Western Recorder," a sermon on the subject of female preaching. Brother Reeves appears to have given the subject more than ordinary attention, and has discussed it quite at length. His sermon should, by all means, be published in pamphlet form, as we suppose it will be. Without professing agreement with all the views advocated by our respected Brother, we cannot refrain from expressing our admiration at the earnestness and ability with which he has defended his positions.

Maryland Conference.—This able body, at its recent session not only found means to supply its own extensive work, but spared one minister to supply the Church at Charleston, S. C., and two others to supply churches in Philadelphia. Besides the list of appointments, which we published last week, we have not yet met with further statistics, of the Conference, as its Minutes are to be published as usual in pamphlet form. The members, the visiters, the secular newspapers and the ladies, all agree that the recent session of the Conference in Georgetown was a remarkably agreeable and profitable one. It seems that "Phebe Mannerly," whose letter we republished by request from the Methodist Protestant, a few weeks ago, need not have been so apprehensive of unpleasantness from the members of Conference using tobacco, for the venerable President, Br. E. Henkle, had been for three years distributing Anti-Tobacco pamphlets throughout the District, and from time to time in his official communications through the church paper, reported the progress of reform in the use of the article referred to, amongst the members of the Conference. The following letter by one of the Georgetown sisters, which we also take from the Methodist Protestant will be read with interest.

Georgetown D. C., March 29, 1848.

Dear Bro. Reese: The Conference has closed its session, and by this time all the members have gone home, and I feel glad to inform you that it was as pleasant a Conference as ever was held in this place. I wish to inform Phœbe Mannerly that our preachers are first rate men. I had the pleasure of entertaining some of them myself, and had many visitors during the session: I never had to complain of any one of them, and I was sorry when they went away! It would have done your heart good, if you had stood on Bridge street on Tuesday, and seen our omnibuses rolling over from the cars with their full loads; not bearing the broad flag of Commodore Biddle Shubrick, but the noble heraldry of the Gospel, with their portmantua in hand, wending their way up to the parsonage, where there were brethren in waiting to conduct them to their places of abode. My heart was rejoiced as I looked on, and hastened home to see if my guests had come. I attended the Conference every day; and I declare, I doubt that any Conference ever produced a better looking set of men. But—as I am an old woman, there were a great many young men who were strangers to me.

I missed many that were with us when we first organized: and as I missed them, I felt a sigh escape from my breast, and then I looked at the young preachers, and thought it was well that there was so many new ones. May God make them faithful, and may they never weary in well-doing. I have seen several families since the close of Conference, and have heard their remarks; and can assure you, that if the people had had their choice, they could not have been better pleased; and if the preachers were as well pleased as they who entertained them, all is well. I was much gratified to see how pleasantly they received their appointments. And as our President said that he would not come to Conference next year without his pay, I hope the delegates whoever they may be, will not come up to the Conference with their fingers in their mouth, and say 'they did not know that it was necessary for them to collect preachers saleries.' If they will take the pains, they can get it. No society that has a preacher ought to expect him to work for nothing.

I hope, sir, you will excuse me for writing so much; but I wish sister Phœbe to know how we come on. We had no chewers or smokers here. Yours, truly, DOROTHY.

Bank Failures.—The Bank of Wooster, Ohio, has suspended payments on its notes.—The Courier of yesterday says that they sell for twenty-five cents only on the dollar in Cleveland. The stockholders however are individually liable, and it is thought that the institution will ultimately prove solvent.

The Mineral Bank, Cumberland, Md., has also suspended, as we learn by the Baltimore Sun. Holders of notes however are advised not to sacrifice them.

Please send us none of the above named paper at present, unless it is all we can get.

Our Paper Abroad.—We are gratified to find that our paper is gradually, but steadily extending its circulation in distant Conference Districts, both East and West. Our excellent Brother, E. A. Wheat, of the Genesee Conference sends us this week the sum of five dollars, and three new subscribers. He says: "Would that I had many more good, responsible names to send as subscribers for your excellent paper. Many have a strange notion, that they must look East for news, and are slow to perceive that Light may come from the West. I shall cheerfully do all I can to help you. Would be glad to do more than circumstances at present, allow." Our Br. has our thanks for the interest he takes in behalf of our paper. Please remind your neighbors, Brother W. that the West is sending the glorious Light of the Gospel all over the Eastern Indies, as well as to China, and other Asiatic and European climes, and the coasts of Africa, all of which are at the East! And then, do you not recollect that when Jesus was born in Bethlehem, even wise men came from the East in search of their promised Saviour? Was not that coming West to find the Light of the World?

Philadelphia Conference.—We are gratified to learn by the minutes, published in the last "Protestant," that this new Conference is attended with prosperity, and a very handsome increase. We intend publishing its Minutes next week.

Maine Conference.—By politeness of Rev. T. M. Hall the President, we have been furnished with statistics of this infant Conference. A small increase is reported. Br. H. writes, "we are few in number, but our prospects are promising at the present." We will publish the minutes.

John Jacob Astor.—This noted Millionaire of New York city, died on the 29th ult. in the 85th year of his age. He was a native of Baden, in Germany, and reached our shores a poor youth. He is said to have left property amounting to more than ten millions of dollars.

Mad River and Lake Erie Railroad.—The Urbana Gazette states that on Thursday last, the train of passenger cars, for the first time came to that place from Sandusky City. The distance only of fourteen miles, (from Springfield to Urbanna) now remains to be completed, when Cincinnati will be connected with the Lake coast by Railroad.

Difficulties of the Religious Press.

For some time, I have meditated addressing a few facts to the patrons of the True Wesleyan, and giving them some particulars, with which it is presumed they are not acquainted. We have an excellent chance to improve our knowledge of human nature, and perhaps 'slightly' our patience, hearing the various views and suggestions from our correspondents, as to the mode of managing the paper, both financially and editorially.—But the truth is, one month's experience at the real work of publishing a religious periodical, would be worth years of speculation. Here, theories would be tested most 'soundly,' and many of them would be found wholly impracticable.

A correspondent a few days since writes us, that his neighbors decline taking the Wesleyan because another paper is offered in the place for one dollar a year—is cheaper than ours is.—Well, this is a good 'financial' reason to be sure; and the comparatively high price of 'religious' periodicals, is often urged as a reason for not taking them. But what are the facts in the case now under consideration? Why these: A secular or political newspaper receives a large revenue from advertisements; whereas a 'religious' one derives a mere trifle from this source. We speak within bounds we presume, in saying that many of the secular papers receive twice the amount from their advertising department, in three months' time, that we are receiving for our whole paper in the year. Now, under these circumstances it is out of the power of religious journalists to compete with political ones for price, where the circulation is equal in both cases. Nor can those religious papers that have a circulation of but three or four thousand, compete with those that have fifteen and twenty thousand, which is the case with several published in this city. How can they? It costs us just as much to get the type set, and get prepared to publish a paper that has but 'three thousand' subscribers, as it would were we to circulate 'twenty thousand.' If, therefore, we make financial considerations the standard of our patronage, we shall ultimately drive from existence all publications that have but a limited circulation, many of which are the most useful and truth-telling in the land; and be forced to take those we cannot with a good conscience support, or leave our families without that kind of reading which is so necessary to give us the truth, however 'bitter' it may be to the taste, and to aid in the education of our families and ourselves. These are considerations of the most solemn moment. A religious journal, if it be at all what it should be, has an immense agency in the family, in all its branches. There is a potency in it infinitely beyond the rod, the threat, or the frown. It is a weekly messenger, coming to the door of every subscriber, telling what has been done in other and distant parts, bringing the condition and living acts of the wide world vividly before the eye, and making familiar, all the variety of events to the reader, most of which he would never know, but for the wonderful diffusive agency of the press.

In relation to our own paper, we work hard, financier the best we know how, and live on less than one third what some Editors and publishers are receiving for less labor than we are bestowing, and put the price of the paper as low as it will bear. Nor can we maintain ourselves, only by prompt payments on the part of our subscribers. The question, therefore, is 'prompt, generous payment' from all, and an extended circulation. We must not stop anything short of 5,000 paying subscribers; and then we shall make the price uniformly $1.50 per year. For the religious benefit of all, let us say, that if there is a family connected with us as members or hearers, who do not now take the paper, let the preachers and friends urge the importance of their taking it. And should any be too limited in their resources to pay for it, let some of our friends who have the means aid them to enjoy this weekly luxury. It will bless such families; beside it is "more blessed to give than to receive."—True Wesleyan.

From the Methodist Protestant.

☞ We give place to the following document as it will be of interest to our M. P. readers.

Report of Directors of the Book Concern.

To the President and Members of the Maryland Annual Conference, in Conference assembled.

Beloved Brethren.—The Directors of the Methodist Protestant Church Book Concern, take occasion, in obedience to the requirements of the Discipline, to present to the Maryland Annual Conference, now in session in Georgetown, D. C., a statement, &c., exhibiting the present condition of the institution, by which it will be seen that it is in a healthy state, and its prospects encouraging.

By reference to the Journal of the last session of the Conference, held in Easton, it will be perceived that the present Board of Directors made a report of proceedings up to March 1st, 1847; but as they had been in office only a few months, they could do no more than exhibit the assests and liabilities of the Concern, as shewn by a committee of examiners raised for the special purpose by the former board of directors, and also an account of a few financial transactions of the new board.

Having now been in office sixteen months, and believing it will be more satisfactory to the Conference, the present Directors have included that entire period, and now report from the time of their appointment up to March 1st, 1848. The Concern in October, 1846, was estimated by an impartial Committee to be worth only $63.18 over and above all its liabilities. It is now worth $4 129.75, which will be seen by the following estimate made out with great care, first by the Book Agent, and subsequently examined by a committee of directors, and finally approved by the board.

ASSETS.

Estimated value of plates (as per report of committee on Assets Oct. 27th. 1846.)	$5,150,00

LIABILITIES.

Outstanding scrip. (68 shares)	$3 400 00
Interest due on scrip.	1.354 00

RECAPITULATION.

Assets.	$14 350.00
Liabilities.	10.220,24
Worth of the Concern.	$4.129.76

Of the above, $1.086 84 were donations to the Concern, $1.000 of which is subject to an annual payment in books of $60 per annum, during the life time of the donor.

The amount of sales for 16 months ending March 1st. 1848, is $6 283 90. The surplus profits over what has accrued from these sales of Books is from the Methodist Protestant.

We have issued during the past 16 months 5,000 Hymn Books, of which 4300 have been sold.

2 500 Disciplines, of which 2.000 have been sold; and 500 copies of Clarke's Comentary. Of this work we have sold two hundred and ten copies; 90 of them in binding and 120 in sheets. We hold subscriptions for about 100 copies more, for which we are waiting orders. The Directory have also decided on stereotyping the Hymn Book, and it is now in a considerable state of forwardness. By this operation, the Concern will, in all future editions, save to the Church the expense of composition, which is always a heavy item in a printer's bill.

The condition of the Periodical is decidedly improving, 16 months ago the subscription list amounted to 2,400, and although we have been compelled to erase perhaps 400 names for delinquincy and other causes our list now numbers 2.800. With a very little exertion on the part of the brethren the list would number 3,000 in less than three months.

The profits from the 13th volume are already considerable. It has paid its expenses and yielded a surplus of $667,96. A considerable sum is yet due, which we hope will be forthcoming at an early date. There have been received from former volumes during the past 16 months, as follows:

From 5th volume,	-	$4,00
" 7th,	-	5 00
" 8th,	-	10,00
" 9th,	-	29,00

The present volume has as yet paid but $1,-661,93. Its expenses will be about $3,400. The receipts thus far are much below what we had a right to expect; but presuming on the good character of the subscribers, it will ultimately pay its expenses and yield a handsome profit, perhaps larger than any preceding volume.

Since the last session of the Annual Conference 30 shares of the outstanding scrip have been redeemed, amounting to $1.545, which has reduced the whole number of shares to 68. If those of our friends who are indebted to the Concern for books and the paper, were to pay up their dues the whole amount might be redeemed forthwith. This is very desirable. 1st, because of the length of time the scrip has been due; and 2d. because, while unredeemed, it imposes a heavy tax on the Concern in the form of interest. Every intelligent debtor will at once percieve that while he withholds our claim he compels us to pay interest on the very money he owes to the Concern. It is hoped that those brethren will make an extra effort to square up their accounts on our books: and if a kind Providence shall favor us as heretofore, we will, at the next period of reporting, give to them and the Church a still more cheering representation of the condition of the Methodist Protestant Book Concern.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

BR. LYMAN CORNISH

Died, February 19th, 1848, at the residence of his father in Delaware county, Ohio, after an illness of two weeks with winter fever, aged 23 years and ten months. From early youth he had a religious turn of mind and did not follow the fashions and vanities of the world. About five years since he became a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus and united with the Meth. Episcopal Church. Since that time he has been truly a pattern of piety. On the evening of the 18th inst. I called to see him. I was aware that his dissolution was fast approaching. His mind appeared to be partially deranged until about 11 o'clock, when reason resumed her empire and he broke out in raptures with a loud voice, although before he could only speak in a whisper. (I shall here give some of his own words.)—"Salvation, O salvation, glory, honor to God and the Lamb." He continued shouting, praying, exhorting, and trying to sing, "Salvation, O the Joyful Sound," and "How Vain Are All Things Here Below," &c. but could not govern his voice. It was his request to have a prayer meeting, in which he participated. He exhorted the family to faithfulness in duty, appeared anxious about an only brother who was sick, exhorted him to get religion and make his peace with God.—On seeing his sister weeping around his bed, he said, (calling her by name,) "Why are you weeping? There is nothing to weep for; all is salvation, salvation, glory to God." About 2 in the morning he said, I feel exhausted—I have made too much effort.

He lay silent for a short time and we supposed he was dying. But he soon revived and said, "Blessed Jesus, I am coming home." The brethren sung "A Home in Heaven." "O yes," he said, "that is it, a home in heaven." He clapped his hands and shouted. In a few moments his hands fell. He said, "I am exhausted, I have done." He again revived, and appeared anxious about some of his unconverted friends in the neighborhood—had them sent for. But before they came in he was nearly done speaking. He exhorted one young man, and in half an hour fell asleep in Jesus. How solemn and yet how glorious to stand by the death-bed of the christian.

Yours,
S. THOMPSON.

AMOS PAXTON,

Was born in Louden county, Virginia, in the year 1802. He emigrated from that place when small to Columbiana county, Ohio. In the year 1824 he became concerned for his salvation and sought earnestly and found the pearl of great price. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church and remained a member for several years, but like too many lost sight of the prize until the year 1841, when he moved to Crawford county, when he again sought the pardon of his sins, found the blessing and united with the M. Episcopal Church again. In the month of February, 1846, he cast his lot in with the Methodist Protestant Church. December 1847, he came to this place, there not being a society of the Methodist Protestants here he had not the privilege of meeting, consequently he grew cold in the cause of Christ until last November when Father Potter came here and commenced a series of meetings and he was among the first to cast in his mite again to unfurl the banner of the King of Glory and of Mutual Rights. From that time to the 22d of January he was very punctual in the attendance on the means of grace. When the appointed time for prayer or class meeting came, Brother Paxton was at his post. Jan. 22d he was taken with a pain in his right side—medical aid was procured, but to no avail.—He suffered very much during the 8 weeks of his sickness—but he bore all with christian patience until the 16th inst., when he exchanged earth for heaven.

During his sickness, the greater part of the time his spiritual sky was clear. He assured us that if it was the will of God to call him, that he was ready to depart and be with Christ which is far better. At one time when a brother prayed with him, after prayer he commenced and sung "My Home is Over Jordan," &c.

In the last stage of his illness he was so weak that we scarcely could hear what he said. But when dying he was heard to say, O Emma, farewell forever, O forever. Thus died one that was prepared to meet death with a smile.

The class feel their loss, but their loss is his infinite gain. Brother Paxton left a companion to mourn his loss.

O that we all might be prepared like this Brother to depart when called.

Works of Mr. Adams.—Mr. Charles Francis Adams is very shortly to publish the works of his illustrious father, in some fifteen or twenty large octavo volumes. The deceased statesman, who carefully revised them for publication, by his will appropriated a sum of money to defray the expense of printing. Among the unpublished writings of Mr. Adams is said to be a new version of The Psalms in Metre, a translation of Wieland's Oberon, and several minor poems; but the chief portion of his MSS. will probably prove to be historical and biographical works.

Correspondence.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Columbia, O., March 22, 1848.

Mr. Editor:

Will you allow a stranger to occupy a small space in your valuable paper, to offer a few thoughts on the state of the Methodist Protestant Church in Cincinnati circuit? — Being on a business tour, to the west, Providence directed my steps to the house of the Rev. Mr. Trumbo;—who was engaged in a protracted effort, for the salvation of souls, in his neighborhood, when I arrived. I soon found that a good work of God was progressing in the place. Sinners were enquiring "what must I do to be saved?" and saints were panting for a "deeper work of grace." The flattering prospects, together, with the hospitality of the people, and their pressing invitation, for me to remain with them for a season, induced me to tarry, and lend the aid of my feeble influence to help in the glorious work of saving souls.

During the meeting, some eighteen or twenty were hopefully converted, and I think I never saw more clear and satisfactory evidence of entire & eternal submission to God, than was given by the converts at that meeting. Some of them, immediately on surrendering to the claims of God, commenced to persuade their friends and neighbors to enlist in the good cause, and, I can assure you, sir, they were successful, and thus the circle of gracious influence, was enlarged, by the pious, and vigorous action of souls "warm in their first love." From the beginning, the converts were trained to work for God, by teaching them that they were consecrated property, and therefore were expected to use their talents and influence, to "swell the train of the Divine Conquerer," and acquire spiritual strength, by exercise, in the good work. The activity of the converts was encouraged, and increased to a great extent, by the exhortation and example of the old members of the church, two of whom, especially, (fathers Stagg and Hopper,) were very efficient, during the whole meeting. Brother Hopper, is an excellent specimen of an old fashioned Methodist, always alive, and ready to lend a helping hand to advauce the good work of God. During my stay in his excellent family I experienced many evidences of his warm attachment to the children of the Most High, and equally strong proof that he was bound for heaven. To him, and his excellent wife, I owe a debt of gratitude never to be forgotten. Whilst enjoying the hospitalities of Brother Stagg's family I felt that Jesus reigned under his hospitable roof, and as an evidence of it, two relatives of the dear old gentlemen were soundly converted to God. The other members of the church, at Bethesda, were disposed to do their duty, but I cannot speak so positively of their every day piety, not having had the same opportunity for observation, as in the cases specified above.

There was one other trait which I observed in those kind-hearted people; and which long observation has taught me to regard as a sign of spiritual health and prosperity. They respect and love their minister, and look after his temporal necessities. He is located in a comfortable parsonage, and has a competance of the good things of this life, if I am to judge from the abundance that was set before me, during my so-journ with their noble-hearted pastor. One reason why the friends think well of their minister, is, he is a faithful man of God, doing his whole duty, and is, withall, a "workman who needeth not to be ashamed," in the pulpit. I was glad to notice he was studious withal;—devoting every leisure moment to reading and writing, and preparing himself for his pulpit duties. In this particular he conscientiously regards the Divine admonition, "study to show thyself approved," &c.—Neither God nor man, can approve a minister who will not study and learn;—for the simple reason, he cannot teach others what he does not know himself. Study is essential to that kind of knowledge a minister needs to qualify him for his high and holy vocation. This, next to experimental godliness, cannot be dispensed with.—I found, on enquiry, that other parts of Brother T's. circuit, was in a healthy condition. In one appointment, a subscription is in circulation to build a meeting-house. I see on the paper Br. Langdon's name, for a handsome amount. This good Brother is a worthy Supernumerary minister on Cincinnati circuit. He is always ready to every good work. In his worthy family I was happy to find a great taste for useful knowledge on the part of his children. Books of the best kind, and periodicals of a religious and literary character, are found in piles in almost every part of this good Brother's house; and, as it might be expected, his children are pious and intelligent. How much better it is, Mr. Editor, to place before children useful, and entertaining books, to store the mind with solid, and profitable information, than to have them to spend their leisure hours in the persuit of vanity, and trivial amusements. If children cannot find entertaining employment at home, they will seek it abroad;—hence the reason why so many children of even pious parents, are "gadders about." Entertain them at home, and they will love home. The minds of youth are ever on the stretch for food of some kind; and if they cannot obtain that which is wholesome and nutricious, they will take up with that which will, in the end, prove poisonous. On the whole, I am pleased, and have been greatly profited, by my visit to Cincinnati circuit of the Ohio District of M. P. Church. I am rejoiced to see signs of growing interest, and great prosperity of the infant church in the far west, as we have been taught in the east, to call this section of the work.

I am further pleased to learn that those postering isms, which have long afflicted and disturbed the peace of our Zion, are on the wane; and a brighter day is dawning upon the cause of Protestant Methodism. May the great and good Being, continue to smile upon and bless us as a people, until the "kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." Amen.

A TRAVELLER.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the Baltimore Sun.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.

New York, March 28—1 A. M.

The steamer Caledonia arrived at Boston at half-past 9 o'clock last night, and the following summary of the important news received by her has just reached this city:

FRANCE.

The European Times, dated Liverpool, Sunday, March, 12, says:

It is said that the revolution has spread thro'out France. All the Departments have joined the Republic. Louis Phillippe and the Royal family, with Guizot, have arrived in England.

The revolution in France is now au fait accomple. The abdication of Louis Phillippe, the appointment and rejection of a regency, the complete triumph of the Parisians over the army, the establishment of a Provisional Government, the proclaim of a Republic the overthrow of the House of Peers and titles distinction, the precipitate and abject flight of all the members of the Orleans family and their misguided ministry to our own shores or other places of exile. The immediate recognition of the new Republic of France by Great Britain, Begium, Switzerland, and the United States, have all fallen in such rapid succession, that the events of every hour come teeming with some mighty occurrence affecting the doctrines of whole nations and dynasties. The speculation, respecting the causes incidents and probable results of this sudden, serious, and mighty social convulsion, are various and weighty.

The French are but in the first stage of transition. They must not only teach, but they must secure obedience from the masses, before the regular edifice which is to crown their hopes can be raised. If the foundations are laid in peace, the French people may erect a proud monument, to consecrate throughout all ages the glory and liberty of a gallant people. But if the elements of war insinuate their fatal agency into the fabric, the whole will assuredly crumble into dust, and perish.

The provisional government became constituted by an usurpation, or rather by the free choice of the mob. But, however that may be eleven members established a supreme authority at the Hotel D'Ville. Royalty and peerage have been swept away in a few brief hours; but hunger, gaunt hunger, and a hundred thousand mouths, yawning around the seat of government, and something was to be done immediately to appease the multitudes. A gigantic system of out-door relief was conceived and immediately executed. Formidable legions of National Guards were then formed at a stipend per day. These have been packed off to the frontiers. The compact between the employers and the employed was broken, & in a short time a decree was passed limiting the hours of labor.

The journals were also to be propitiated. Accordingly, the stamp duty was removed, but these and numerous other decrees will not satisfy the hungry, nor does the taxing of one large class who earn their bread by industry, in order that another class may carry a musket on the frontier in the garb of a National Guard, tend to carry out, to its legitimate end, the old received Jacobin dictrine of liberty, equality and fraternity.

Again another decree has gone forth that a new National Assembly is to be called on the 20th of April, when the Provisional Government will resign its power into the hands of the definitive government. Universal suffrage, and vote by ballot are to secure liberty, equality and fraternity to France.

Paris, March 9.

Our latest advices from Paris represent the city as tranquil, but the financial crisis still continues unabated, and some eminent houses are spoken of as being in difficulties, but no further failures have been announced. There was no tumult or agitation. All was sad and gloomy. Men came and offered their securities for money only, at whatever price they could get, but scarcely a buyer could be found.

The account of the revolution in Paris reached Vienna on the 1st instant, and produced a most profound impression. The consternation which prevailed there, says an article in the National, cannot be described. The five per cents. fell from 95f. to 82f.

The intelligence from Italy received in Vienna was anything but satisfactory. The Arch Bishop of Paris, accompanied by two vicars general, presented himself to the Provisional Government on Tuesday, and gave in his adhesion to the new order of things in the name of the entire clergy of the Diocese. M. Duchere has been appointed under Secretary of State of the Ministry of France.

Numerous diplomatic appointments announced, among which are M. Cidevant, to Constantinople; M. de Facas, to the United Srtes; M. de Beaumont Vasse, to Denmark; M. Cidevant Moskena to Spain.

The coming elections in France excite great attention. The Government, aware of the serious importance of this matter, were preparing for the crisis.

M. Arago, the Republican Minister of Marine, sent for the French Admirals in Paris. They all attended. He then addressed them and asked them if there were any of them willing to serve the Republic. They replied all. He then said he requested men of courage and steadiness,—that he knew them all to be so,—and he was ready to appoint to the cammand of the fleet of the Republic any one they might choose.

He therefore appointed, in accordance with their recommendation, Admiral Boudin, who left Paris for Noulon, to take command and to sail for Algiers. His instructions are to take possession of any ships he may find in the port of Algiers, integrals of the French Republic.

The Chatan of Nueville has been sacked and burnt to the ground.

PRUSSIA.

A correspondent at Colonge writes that the middle classes of Prussia, as in the Rhineish States, are determined to achieve political independence, and have a voice in government. They are peaceful and devotedly attacked to the government, but firmly assert their rights.

AUSTRIA.

The resignation of France Metternich is announced for a certainty in Paris. On the 8th the news of events in Paris caused consternation at Rheims. There was a grand council of all the ministers. The news of the event was despacched in all directions. The French Ambassador at Vienna is said to have fainted on hearing the news. He started on the next day for France. Thirty thousand troops are to advance to Italy without delay. At Munich a rising has taken place, and a constitution extorted from the king at the point of the bayonet itself.

ITALY.

The Jesuits alarmed by the demonstration made against them by the people have already quitted the city of Turin. The Journal of Turin fully appreciates the tendency of the French Revolution, encouraging the king to put himself at the head of the national forces to effect the salvation of Italy.

A malefactor, in Paris, released from prison by the recent revolution, and mistaking the enthusiasm in favor of liberty for lawlessness attempted, to commit a robbery—was pursued and after a chase took refuge in a private house, when he was killed on the spot by bayonet stabs. A salutary warning.

Nearly a million of francs were subscribed yesterday for the wounded. Many of the bankers put down each from 10,000 to 15,000 francs; Baron Rothschild 50,000 and the Bank 100,000.

The republic has adopted the children of those who were killed in the three days of the revolution; and the palaces vacated are to be converted into hospitals for the widows, wounded, &c., a much better purpose than the maintenance of a King and his household, and much less expensive.

The estate of Louis Philippe is represented as worth $45,000,000, and he is said to have cared as much about his estates as his kingdom. How suddenly he parted with both!

On the tri-colored flag is to be inscribed: "Republicque Francaise—liberte, equalite, fraternite." All the old flags are taken down, and new ones put in their places. The National Guards have new flags throughout.

All the money, plate, jewels and other valuables of the king and royal family, which were found in the palace, have been carefully preserved, as they were found by the laboring men, who first entered the palace; and all recompense for so doing has been refused.

The sums which have been carted to places for safe keeping amount to four or five millions, and when this operation had been completed and every dollar found secure, the two men who had watched over the deposit for the last twenty-four hours, said to the officer who had chargo of removing the property, "Sir, you have forgotten us—we have eaten nothing since yesterday noon." The officer was astonished—asked them what they would have—they answered "some bread,"

Upon his remonstrating with, and asking them to receive some compensation, they declined. He then asked for their names; they refused to give them; said they had not fought for money, and they were not in want of anything but some bread to appease their hunger.

At the Palias Royal, in the moment of victory, the masses rushed into the interior, and soon a man was discovered stealing spoons. They said, "you are not of us—you are a theif—kneel down," and instantly they shot five balls thro' his body, and labelled it "thief," and left it for other scenes.

The women fought bravely and in great numbers, and fifteen or twenty wounded have been carried to the hospitals; this may seem extraordinary, but in France the wives and sisters, and daughters of laboring men, work in the shops and streets, like men, according to circumstances.

News of the Week.

The Dead Sea Expedition.—The U. S. ship Supply arrived at Port Mahon the 6th of January, from Gibraltar, and would sail about the first of February for the East. Commander Lynch had been very seriously sick of the small pox, but was recovering. His son and one of the sailors had also been attacked with the same disease and had recovered. There were no other cases on board, and none apprehended. The ship had been thoroughly cleansed and fumigated.

Methodist Church South.—The authorities of the city of Charleston, S. C., have prohibited the sale of the "Discipline of the Methodist South," because it retains a section of the general discipline of the Church, which testifies to the "great evil of slavery," and inquires how it may be "extirpated."—The conference of the State does not acquiesce.

Anti-Gamblers.—There has been an order commenced in Cumberland, Md., called the Independent Order of Anti-Gamblers, for reforming persons addicted to the ruinous habit. The Mountaineer says that the Order now numbers a great many gentlemen of high standing and respectability in that community, and is designed to be Grand Lodge of the Order throughout the U. States.

Suspension Bridge.—At Niagara Falls, on Monday last, Mr, Ellet, the contractor, crossed to the Canadian side on the wires.

Death of an Editor.—N. Perviance, Esq., editor, of the Steubenville (Ohio) Herald, died at Cincinnati yesterday week, of consumption.

A Destructive Fire occurred at Pen Yan, Yates county, N. Y., which laid in ruins one-fourth of that flourishing village. It broke out in the jewelry store of D. S. Haimeek, which was not checked until the whole block, as far as Piefer & Sanford's shoe store, was consumed. The loss is roughly estimated at about thirty thousand dollars.

Fire in Enfield, Ct.—The woolen mill of the Minot Manufanturing Company, in Enfield, was burnt last Saturday noon. The fire took from the picker. Loss about $15,000. Insured at the Ætna office in Hartford, for $10,000.

Frozen to Death.—The Maryland Reformer, Rockville, reports the death of Mrs. Sage, an aged and worthy lady, who on returning home from a neighbor's house, on Monday night, fell into a stream of water, and was found frozen to death the next day.

Singular Death.—Dr. J. Stearns, one of the most distinguished and respected physicians, of New York, died on Sunday morning from the effects of virus, absorbed through a small puncture in one of his fingers, contracted by immediately afterwards probing a mortified limb in case of erysipelas.

"Murder Will Out."—A man has been arrested in Fitchburg, Mass., and is now undergoing examination on a charge of poisoning his wife to death, 14 years ago. It appears that the woman died after eight hours illness, her body being placed in a tomb; and that the sexton of the town at various intervals since, when having occasion to open the vault, has observed that the stomach of the deceased retained a remarkable state of preservation. This fact led to suspicions that she had been poisoned, and the stomach was sent to Professor Webster, of Harvard College who on analyzing it, detected a considerable quantity or arsenic. The affair has caused great excitement in Fitchburg.

Steamboat Burnt.—The steamboat Raritan, which was burnt coming to New York from N. Brunswick, N. J., on Monday, (as announced by telegraph) was run ashore, some of the passengers jumping off and wading to land, while the others were taken off by another steamer. The Raritan belonged to Messrs. Stevens and Capt. Fisher, and was valued at $70,000. One of the firemen of the Raritan is missing, it is feared he has perished in the flames.

Dreadful Accident.

On Tuesday the 21st. of March, Mrs. Elizabeth James, wife of Mr. Martin J. James, was suddenly killed in Mr. Wollard's Steam Mill in Bond County, Illinois. The particulars we think may be given correctly, though no person was present at the time her clothes were caught by the machinery. As Mrs. J. came into the Mill she passed by Mr. James, Mr. Wollard, and myself. Mr. J. went with her up to the scales, weighed her, and as she stepped off of the scales, said with her usual cheerfulness, "now I will go home and get your supper," (it being but a few rods.) She went up stairs, intending to go out through the saw mill. Mr. J. went down to the engine where we had been talking, when a most frightful screaming was heard, and the mill was checked about half its speed. We stopped the mill and ran to see where the trouble was. We found her lying apparently dead on the Saw Mill floor, near an upright shaft of 60 revolutions per minute, that had a key driven into it about a foot above the floor, which had caught the skirt of her dress, and drew her between the shaft and carriage, which are 6 or 7 inches a part. Her clothes were much torn, and wound around the shaft. Her body was not much mangled, no bones discovered to be broken. Medical aid was present in about 30 minutes, but to no effect, the work of death was done. She died in about an hour, leaving an affectionate husband in a state of affliction, which we shall not attempt to describe.

Mrs. James was 32 years old the 21st. day of last February. She embraced religion when quite young, and that alone has supported her through the severe affliction which she has passed; having burried eight children—all that she had. It is a source of great satisfaction to her friends to know that she had been reading her Bible the last thing she did before leaving her room. Sister James has left a large circle of connections and friends to mourn with her bereaved husband the loss of one they loved; but they do not mourn as those that have no hope.—Greenville Journal.

JAMES A. HUBBARD.

Spirit of Improvement.—Various efforts are making in the counties of Western Virginia, immediately interested, to carry out the improvement of the Shenandoah river, under the auspices of the new company. Books of subscription to increase the capital stock are to be opened April 25th, at different points in nine counties; also in the city of Alexandria, and in Georgetown, D. C., where a market will be formed for the teeming products of those counties. Books of subscription to the capital stock of the Maryland and Virginia Bridge Company, for the erection of a bridge across the Potomac at Shepherdstown; are to be opened in all the interested counties of Virginia on the 10th of April.—Bat. Sun.

Pedler's Licences.—An act of the Legislature, passed on the 7th February, provides that the Clerks of the Courts of Common Pleas, shall grant licences to Pedlers, upon the following terms: He shall file with said Clerk, a written application for such licence, with the receipt of the Treasurer for the amount of money paid, and shall pay the Clerk 50 cents for granting such licence.

The license shall authorise pedling throughout the State, goods, wares merchandize, for 3 or 6 months, or one year. The license for one year, if the applicant intend to travel on foot, shall cost $12; if on horse back, or in a one horse wagon or other vehicle, twenty dollars; if in a boat, or other water craft, sixty dollars—and for three or six months, proportionably.

A license to peddle, does not authorize the person named therein to sell goods, &c., at auction, vendue or public outcry, nor to sell goods in any way by the agency of any other person.

Any one selling goods, &c., except such as are manufactured in the State, without licence, is subject to a fine of $50, to be recovered before a justice of the peace, where the offender may be found, and paid into the Treasury of the township School fund.

If any peddler shall on demand refuse or neglect to show his license to any one, whom he may offer to sell goods, is subjected to a like fine to be recovered and appropriated as above.—Z. Courier.

DIED, at Freetown, Sierra Leone, West Africa, of yellow fever, November 26th, 1847, Rev. William Raymond, of the Mendi Mission, aged 33, greatly lamented. Mr. R. has been in Africa six years. He was a most courageous and devoted missionary, and has preached with great zeal and fidelity. He had upwards of a hundred native scholars in his school, many of them redeemed from slavery or death by his instrumentality. He has been a warm advocate of Peace, Temperance, and Freedom. Owing to his exertions, writes a distinguished English missionary, the slave trade is almost entirely abolished thro'out the Sherbro country. He has prevented a destructive war between a British squadron and the native chiefs, and received the thanks of the Commodore and the head King. Mr. R. was a native of Massachusetts, and accompanied the Amistad Africans to their native country. He was temporarily at Sierra Leone on business of the Mission, when he was arrested by sickness. The Committee of the American Missionary Association propose to send a reinforcement to Kawmendi without delay.

A Revolutionary Matron Gone.—Died in New Prospect, Bergen county, N. J., on the 24th instant, Mrs. Charity Berry, at the extraordinary age of one hundred and ten years! She was married during the Revolutionary war, and was the mother of thirteen children, all of whom still survive! Her husband was Captain of a militia company in active service, and who aided in driving the British troops from Hoppertown. Generals Washington and Lafayette together, dined with her one day under the shade of a stately elm tree near her door, a circumstance she was fond of relating. Her eyesight never failed in the least until her death, and she was able to go about until about five years back, since which she had lain in bed the greater part of the time, though entirely free from disease. She was remarkable for one thing—which may account in a great measure for her prolonged life—she was noted for her opposition to tight lacing.—N. Y. Commercial.

A Ship for Boston.—The idea of a ship receiving freight and passengers at Cincinnati for Boston direct, would have been laughed at a year ago. The fine new brig Gilmore was advertised to sail yesterday for the Metropolis of the Bay State. There is doubtless a new commercial era about to dawn upon us, and the timber of the Ohio shores will, ere many a year, float upon every sea. Already, a ship yard for the exclusive construction of sea vessels has been established at Marietta, and several have been built in this city. Timber here is more abundant than at the East, and, as we learn, of a better quality, rendering it therefore, a matter of interest, on the score of economy, on the part of eastern merchants to seek the rivers of the West. The freight always to be obtained at the ports on the Ohio, will more than overbalance the expense of the distance from the sea-board.—Cincinnati Com.

American Demonstration.—The response & congratulatory meeting of Americans, to the French Revolution, which took place at Lafayette Hall, N. York, on Tuesday evening, was numerous and enthusiastic. The venerable M. M. Noah presided, and among those of the address and resolution committee, were Messrs. Greely, Sedgwick, and Bryant. The address is a model for brevity and sentiment. France, it says, has now no king but the Lord of Hosts and the sovereign people governing in his great name. The aid of France to America in her early struggles is alluded to, as inciting us to hail with joy our sister Republic. France, once the most powerful of monarchies in Europe, has now become the most powerful of Republics—we are to show her by our example that the foundation of a Republic is Law and Liberty—Liberty and Law—one & indivisible; may tranquilly succeed, as we have done, in establishing a Free Government, the admiration of the world, and which the world in arms cannot subdue. The address, with the resolutions, was of course unanimously adopted. The representatives of seven different nations were introduced to the meeting, amidst cheers, three times three. After stirring speeches by several gentlemen, the meeting adjourned to reasemble on Monday evening next, in the Park.

The Earliest.—Cucumbers, of the largest size, made their appearance in the Fifth Street Market yesterday, and sold at twenty-five cents a piece! They were raised by Mrs. Fifer, at her gardens near the city.—Cin. Com.

Bro. Case, most cheerfully we do as you say. Our supply of Hymn Books is just exausted—we will have more soon. We have Disciplines plenty.

Br. H. Reger, you will observe that we credit your subscribers for one volume and a quarter each for the $2,50 sent.

The P M at Cincinnati again notifies us that W Lawson, B. A. Hill, and J. Hudson do not take their papers from the office. As our respected agents have not time to do it, will some private friend please inform us whether those subscribers have left the city or not, and if not whether they wish to discontinue?

The P M at Belmont, Ohio, advises us to discontinue the paper sent to [illegible]. Mayhugh, as it is not taken from the office. He owes for one volume and a half. Our agent will please not fail to obtain our dues from him.

The P M at Steubenville notifies us that W Thompson does not take his paper from the office. That subscriber owes for 3¾ volumes of our paper. Can we not be so favored as to have what is due collected for us?

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are heldt responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

WAR.

Behold the fruits which vain ambition yields!
Carnage and blood o'erspread its battle-fields;
O'er heaps of slain exulting victors ride,
And dye their garments in the crimson tide:
While loud the martial trumpet sounds afar,
And all the horrid minstrelsy of war.
With fiendish shouts the welkin rings again,
And Earth, convulsed with groans of dying men,
Reels, like a drunkard, surfeited with blood,
And inwardly forebodes the wrath of God.
The voice of blood for vengeance cries aloud,
And soon will burst on all the gathering cloud,
And blood to those who thirst for blood, be given,
In measure meted out by righteous Heaven,
When God will sweep the friends of war from Earth,
And bless all nature with a second birth;
The sword undrawn shall in its scabbard rust
And fortresses shall crumble into dust:
Dismounted guns shall cease their angry roar,
And drums shall beat to waken strife no more.
The nations then shall peaceful arts pursue,
And Earth redeemed, her Eden state renew:
The wolf and lamb within one fold shall rest,
The kid lie down upon the Leopard's breast,
The calf with the young lion fearless play,
Or yoked together shall a child obey:
The cow and bear shall pasture side by side.
The lion with the ox too shall divide;
The sucking child no venomous bite shall dread,
But lay his hand upon the serpent's head;
The powers of evil shall molest no more,
But peace her banner plant on every shore;
For through the Earth shall Truth her heralds send,
And over all Messiah's reign extend. [J. C. W.

Itinerancy.

MY DR. BR. BASSETT: I have just finished an examination of the third No. on that interesting subject—Itinerancy, by Prudentia. And respectfully solicit a place in your paper, for the following views upon that subject. I will in the first place observe, that I am pleased that your columns are opened to all, for a discussion pro, and con; of that peculiar feature of Methodism, as connected with our Church. And for doing so, you deserve; and I hope will receive the respect and love of the frends of the Church. For several years I have been persuaded to give my views and feelings upon the above subject, but from various considerations I postponed doing so. And probably, I should never have executed my wish, if the way had not been opened by your correspondent, Prudentia. The numbers, from his pen, have been highly gratifying to myself, and doubtless to all your readers. It is well known to all, versed with the history of the Methodist Protestant Church, that the first advocates for reform in the Government of the Methodist Epis. Church, were principally Local Preachers, and who were once regular Itinerants. To that system of ministerial operation they were indissolubly wedded. This spirit—love for Itinerancy, they manifested unequivocally during the contest for reform, with the champions for Episcopacy. They were frequently charged by their opponents, of having in view, the establishment of Congregationalism, but this was again, denied from the press, the sacred desk; and every where, that the accusation was circulated, nothing was left undone to give it contradiction, and thus disabuse the public mind. True to their oft' reiterated professions, and intentions touching Itinerancy, when necessity prompted the establishment of a distinct organization, for the securement of their objects; They sent forth unmistakable evidence abroad from the Convention of 1830, in the shape of a Constitution and Discipline. And definitely to secure their principles; and forever to silence all attempts of their enemies to induce the belief of their opposition to Itinerancy, they—the Convention, adopted the Restrictive Rule. Thus establishing a perpetual Itinerancy to the Methodist Protestant Church. And they, by the adoption of this rule, not only secured to the Church an Itinerant Ministry: but placed it beyond the power of the General Conference to revoke, or amend this Rule of the Constitution.

An inquiry now presents itself doubtless to the reader's mind, and the examining world, has long since propounded tangibly the enquiry: And yet the question is unanswered; and but for unconquerable love for the principles of a Representative Church Government, would never have been noticed. The enquiry Sir, is this. Did the Convention of 1830 adopt the Restrictive Rule unanimously? And did it reflect the views, and feelings of all reformers in the adoption of that rule? And was there consequently no reasons to induce the friends of Episcopacy, to believe, that there were persons, of the Ministry and Laity opposed to Itinerancy? To the first member of the enquiry, I answer, No. To the second, I answer unequivocally, No. To the third and last member of the enquiry, I answer, emphatically, Yes. For proof in the first reply, I appeal to the members of the Convention themselves. To substantiate the second reply: I refer the reader to the following facts. Many professed reformers of the Ministry and Laity, after the organization of the Church, drew back, or remained where they were; giving as a reason, for seeming inconsistency, "That if they must have Itinerancy, they preferred it with Episcopacy." Whilst others more resolute, and determined, took refuge in other branches of the Church, where they could secure their object—a settled pastorate. And more evidence still, I will adduce, that must be obvious to all acquainted with the past, and present history of the Ch. It is this. From Maine to Florida, there has and still is, objections; and a want of uniform, comformity, to this Rule. This opposition has from the beginning (and is increasing) manifested itself, in the deversified modes of operation, and various schemes, to "get over" or "pass around" this objectionable 'Rule,' in every Annual Conference District, in the United States. In some of the Northern and Eastern Conferences, Itinerancy is known by letter only. Sentimentally, & practically, they are uncompromisingly opposed to the rule if not to Itinerancy itself. In the South, West, and middle Conferences; there is a variety of modes of operation. A little Local, or nominal Itinerancy. A little of the genuine Itinerancy. And some Missionaries, or virtually Congregationalism. And again, have not some of our best men and women, gone into Congregational branches of the Church? All must admit from the above reasons, given in proof of the correctness of the reply to the second member of the inquiry; that I am correct in the position taken upon that subject. The third, or last part of the enquiry, it is unnecessary for me to notice, as it is tacitly proved, in reasons for the support of the second. I will only here remark, that in the Methodist Episcopal Church, there always has been more, or less, opposition to their Restrictive Itinerancy. And during the struggle for reform, these opposers, then in the Methodist Epis. Church, (or who had been members) aided all they could in the cause of reform; and when they ascertained that a majority of reformers were in favor, and determined to carry Itinerancy with them: they forsook them, and obtained shelter in other quarters. And therefore we are compelled to admit that there were reasons, sufficient to justify reformers in believing, and the old-side party in saying, that some reformers were opposed to Itinerancy. And finally, I give it as my impression, yea, as my sincere opinion, that the Discipline of the Church is pure Itinerancy, as a law, and directory. But utterly deny the Methodist Church being sentimentally, or practically, thorough Itinerant, according to primitive Methodism. And sincerely believe, that the Methodist Protestant Church, as a body, are not only opposed to the Restrictive Rule: but to Itinerancy, as understood and practiced by Methodists.

Now what does the above prove? Undoubtedly that with the reformers, from the commencement of the controversy about Government; there were some in the ranks of reformors opposed to Itinerancy. And since the establishment of the Methodist Protestant Church, there have been, and continued to be, persons in the Church, who are opposed to the Restrictive Rule. Also, that many friends to the doctrines, usages, &c., (Itinerancy excepted,) of Methodism, with representative form of government, refuse to unite with us, because, of the existence in the Constitution of the Church, of that Restrictive Rule. And lastly, that the party, or opposers of Itinerancy are increasing in every Annual Conference, and their true sentiments and feelings, are upon the eve of being made known to the world: and as a natural consequence, the church will soon be deeply engaged, controverting this, now important subject to the church,—the Restrictive Rule. And finally, the time has fully arrived, when something must be done, to harmonize, and give tone to all parts of the church, or a Secession will be the result. The dissatisfied, Anti Itinerants, in various sections of the church, are going off as independant congregations. What shall be done to save the church? But it is a serious subject, and deserves our prayers, and serious, and impartial thoughts and actions. The only expedient, that I know of, is a Convention, or the clothing of the next General Conference with Conventional powers. This may save the church, by removing or mending, or modifying the objectionable rule. May this be the result, is my earnest prayer to Almighty God, the cornerstone, and shepherd of the church.

Oconee, March 6th, 1848.

Written for the Western Recorder.

A Word of Explanation.

MR. EDITOR,—I have this day read the first number of "Strictures" &c., by Br. Palemon. And as he has consented to speak out, and expects to do so in future numbers, I wish, at the earliest opportunity, to correct him in relation to the true question at issue between us. He says, speaking of me; "under the pretext of exposing the imaginary evils of this article, (the Restrictive Rule) he attacks the entire system of itinerancy, which has been productive of so much good, for so many years, and urges the absolute necessity of abolishing the system, and substituting settled pastorates." This, I deny to be the fact. I deny it upon the authority of all that I have written; and were it necessary I might deny it upon the authority of my private sentiments—if they be yet private. And I defy Br. Palemon, to produce a single sentence in which I "urge the absolute necessity of abolishing the system, and substituting settled pastorates."—Where have I asked for the abolition of the system of itinerancy? Where have I urged the necessity of adopting a settled pastorate? This statement is entirely without foundation, as all who will take the trouble of examining, may know. He admits, in it, that the Restrictive Rule, may be attacked without making the attack upon the system of itinerancy; and, of course, that the Restrictive Rule, may be removed, and the system of itinerancy remain. I hope this will be remembered by his readers.

My position, one would suppose, was rendered sufficiently clear. In my first number, I started out by stating that the best mode for giving efficiency to the gospel ministry ought to be adopted. If that is decided to be "An Itinerancy, it should be adopted.

If a settled pastorate, it should be adopted.
If an Itinerancy, untrammeled, and narrowed not down by restrictive rules, it should be adopted."

Of these three methods, I proceed to state in relation to the first, that it is now becoming a question whether it is the best method. The second I leave unexamined, as it is out of the question among Methodists. I adopt the third as the object at which I aim; and in the latter part of my first number, my position is thus clearly set forth;—"I see no reason whatever, why the Conference, the minister, and the people whom he serves, would not be competent judges of the length of time that he should continue in the service of that people," and to the support of this position, I apply all of my arguments. The only question which I have considered, is, Shall the Restrictive Rule be taken off from the itinerancy? THIS IS THE ONLY QUESTION AT ISSUE.

But it appears that Palemon wished to have more ground upon which to build his reply, and like the Bostonians, in view of having room for their city, he will make it. But look a little a his effort. He quotes,—"itinerancy is a creature of circumstances, and the circumstances which introduced it have now ceased" &c. leaving out, in the commencement of this sentence, the definite article, "The," which shows, when viewed in connection with what follows, that I speak of the present form of itinerancy. And so this quotation, when viewed in its proper place, will prove nothing at all to his purpose, as you may see by reading. He gives another quotation, from my argument upon this proposition;—that the so frequent change of ministers, required by the Restrictive Rule, renders them less interesting to the people of a community than they otherwise would be; in which I state that, "other churches have their settled pastors in almost every neighborhood, and the attention of the greater portion of community, is directed to them, to the neglect of such transient visiters as Methodist Itinerants." If this proves that I go for a settled pastorate, then you can prove a thing without evidence, as it is attempted to be done in this case, but I understake too much, lest you fail altogether.—Says P.—"he quotes largely from Lord King to prove that settled pastorates was the primitive plan, and consequently, "itinerancy is in direct apposition to primitive usage, and therefore, ought to be abolished forthwith."—what, then, is the application of all of my argument from primitive usage? Please read—"So that in the primitive church, there was no thought of limiting the period of ministerial service to any place, but by the work which the minister had in that place to do, and this was left to be determiued by the openings of Divine Providence." Perhaps, Br. Palemon, others will be more "at a loss to decide" that Prudentia is in favor of establishing a settled pastorate, than you, from your valuable powers of discrimination, have happened to be.

As to the charge of dishonesty, and other misrepresentations, made through mistake, or designedly, to make a little ground to enrich with irony, they may receive proper attention in due time.

Narrative.

From Green's Arts and Miseries of Gambling.

An Affecting Account

Of a Young Man brought to Ruin and an Untimely Death by Gambling.

Concluded.

Time passed on, and young Mr. C. could not be heard from. Finally Mr. T. called on them and told them that he had jnst come from the post-office, and that he found a letter there, and as he felt a deep anxiety to hear from their son, had brought them the letter. He then felt in his pocket for the letter, as he had put it in his pocket-book; but his pocket-book was gone. He said he had lost it, and immediately started back in search of it, but did not succeed in finding it. Some two or three days passed, but no trace of the pocket-book or letter. Mr. T. finally advertised the pocket book and contents; but could hear nothing of them. Mr. T. said it contained some two or three hundred dollars, besides a number of valuable papers. Some two or three months passed away without any news from young Mr. C., when old Mr. C. visited the post-office, and upon inquiry, the same letter that Mr. T. had taken out was handed him. He took the letter and hastened to opened it; and upon doing so, found its contents as follows:—

"NEW ORLEANS, March 7, 1836.

"My Beloved Parents—

You will doubtless feel a momentary joy at the reception of this letter from the child of your bosom, on whom you have lavished all the favors of your declining years, and have loved with a parental ardor only to be felt, but never to be told by mortal tongue. Oh! should a feeling of joy for a moment spring up in your hearts when you shall have received this from me, cherish it not, it is the deceptive calm which would allure the mariner to repose while the hurricane which follows in its path, shall come upon him in the plenitude of its fury, and hurl with irresistible might his frail bark to sudden destruction. Oh! my dear parents will forgive this language, which I doubt not will grate harshly upon a parent's ear; but it is forcibly wrung from the lips of your erring son, whose mind is almost frantic by reason of events unforseen to me; which have had their fulfillment during my absence from home, and have rendered me the most miserable of mortals, and utterly ruined you. Early on my return to your mansion, was I singled out by the destroyer as his victim, who, Judas-like, kissed as he betrayed, and hurled to destruction when he pretended to save. Had your parental admonitions been heeded at all times, and had due deference been given to your mature wisdom and judgement; had I the moral strength and virtue of a Paul to bear up against the seductions of the whole world, I might have stood: but I am one of the weakest of the weak, and have fallen deep! deep!—never more to rise. Oh! the unutterably keen and bitter remorse, which preys with giant fury on my inmost soul, and fills my brain with madness at the thought of the wrong I have done you.

Those gray hairs which I should have honored and protected, I shall bring with sorrow down to the grave. No kindly hand will you have in that home of anguish to smooth and brush away the clouds which will rest upon your aged brows. All will desert you and leave you to the tender mercies of the vile destroyer of our earthly happiness. Here, in this city of iniquity, has my ruin been accomplished. I will not curse my destroyer, but oh! may God avenge the wrongs and impositions practiced upon the unwary, in a way that shall best please Him! He whom I took for my best friend proved my enemy and destroyer. This my beloved parents, is the last you will receive from me, I humbly pray your forgiveness of the evils I shall have brought upon you. It is my dying prayer. Never more in this life shall I see or hear from you. Long before you shall have received this letter from me, the cold grave will have closed upon me forever. Life is to me insupportable. I cannot, nay, I will not, survived the shame of having ruined you. Forget and forgive me, is the dying prayer of your unfortunate son!"

As soon as the old man had read this letter, he showed it to his wife; and surely it were utterly vain to attempt to describe the feelings that must have agonized their aged bosoms. To think that their only child, who had always been one of the most affectionate and obedient of children, should have been hunted down like a fawn in the forest, and to think that this vile man should watch, pursue and take him as he would a lamb! They could scarcely realize that such was the case,—that it could be their child, their only child, the expected solace of their declining years, whom they had taken every care to preserve from the contaminating influence of vicious habits and associations! It was only about nine months before the receipt of this distressing intelligence, that he had received honorable testimonials of his mental acquirements, and of his being one of the most exemplary young men belonging to the institution in which his education was completed. And from that time, his fiend like destroyer had been haunting him, and finally proved his ruin. Mr. C. thought he would call and see what this monster had to say in relation to the destruction of his dear boy. On his arrival at the house of Mr. T. he was met and invited in. He inquired if Mr. T. was at home, and was told that he had gone South with the intention of spending the sickly season at the warm springs of Arkansas, and that he would probably not return under six or seven months; but that he had left his attorney to attend to his business. Mr. C. inquired if the attorney was in; and being told that he was, he soon entered the setting room, and upon his introduction to the old gentleman, he exclaimed, "Ah, indeed! I am happy to see you; I was just thinking of paying you a visit, as I have some business to settle with you that has been placed in my hands by Mr. T., who said he felt a delicacy in calling upon you; but, sir, as it is, it becomes my duty to attend to this matter." 'Well, really,' said the old gentleman with great surprise, 'you talk like one who is insane.' 'Well,' replied the attorney, 'Mr. C. perhaps you will know something more about it when you examine this document.' He then pulled out a deed wherein young Mr. C. had sold all his possessions to this man, T., and the conditions of the sale were such as brought T. in full possession of the entire estate. He discovered that the conveyance had been recorded some six months before, and found that the obligation was for slaves and borrowed money. This was something strange indeed. Mr. C. made no reply, but immediately mounted his horse and returned home. He sat down and reflected on what he had seen and heard, and tried, if possible to unravel the mystery of it. He saw plainly that this man T., had most grossly defrauded his son, that the notes he had taken up were the same money spoken of in the deed, but saw, also that he had no resource.

In reflecting on the whole matter, he thought it would be useless to make any resistance, feeling that it was out of his power to get any advantage over this unprincipled man; and concluded that by living upon the income of what little they possessed, they might be able to sustain themselves the rest of their days. He accordingly made a sale, and disposed of his stock, and other movable property.—While he was preparing to leave the mansion, which for several years he had hoped would be a shelter for him in his old age, he concluded to return to one of the Eastern States, and spend the balance of their days, if possible, on the scanty pittance that was left.

A few days after this, the old gentleman went to the post-office with the hope of hearing something more in regard to his dear, unfortunate boy. He was much surprised at finding a letter directed to him and post marked New Orleans. He opened it, and then it was that he learned with unutterable anguish that his son was no more; that he had committed suicide by blowing out his brains with a pistol. The letter was signed "Amelia." She gave a strict and correct disclosure of all the facts, as she had a perfect knowledge of them. She stated that she had been to Texas some time, and that on her return, she made inquiry for young Mr. C., & they had told her that some months before he had blown out his brasns in his chamber, and that no one had any knowledge where he was from, or who he was. She asked forgiveness of his parents for the part she had taken in the destruction of their son; for she acknowledged, that she had been one of his destroyers. Upon the reception of this dreadful letter, the old parents hastened to take their leave of a place, the very sight of which filled and harrowed up their souls with the bitterest recollections. They removed to some small village not far from the city of New York, to spend their few remaining days, bowed down with decreptitude, indigence and sorrow, yea, untold sorrow; while the despoiler, and the heartless murderer of their beloved boy, was revelling and wallowing in his ill-gotten wealth, and plotting new schemes of infamous villiany against his fellow-men. But Heaven is, just, and such miscreants, will, sooner or later, most assuredly meet their appropriate reward.

LESSON TO NEWSPAPER BORROWERS.

Time: Saturday morning, eight o'clock.—Scene: The breakfast table.

A rap is heard at the door, and the newspaper is for a few moments opened before the fire.—"Come, John, it wont do to dry it long, for I see neighbor Snooks is sending his son after it."—Another rap at the door. "Father wants to know if you will just lend him the newspaper five minutes; if you aint done with it he will send it right back. He only wants to see if the brig Star has been heard from, what our Tom went in."—"Tell your father the brig is not reported."—Home he trips, and as speedily returns. "Mother wants to know who was buried yesterday, can't you lend it to her just two minutes?"—"Tell your mother that all the deaths this week are Mr. ———, and a child of Mr. ———." In a few moments another tap—"Sister Sarah wants to know if anybody's married this week, and uncle Josh wants to know if there is any auction to-day, and father wants to know what the news is from Virginia, and aunt Snooks wants to know if there is any more pretty stories about that Jarvis woman; if you can't spare the paper, why can't you just write down what there is, just cause I don't want to keep running back and forward so——." "Here my lad, here take this paper to your father, and around to all your uncles and aunts, and have it back, whatever is left of it, next Saturday morning, at eight o'clock, precisely, when you come to borrow the next." Ten applications on Saturday by borrowers, all sent to neighbor Snooks, with a particular caution to return it there when done with it. Monday morning, a rap at the door, and the boy with the paper is ushered in:—"Mother says it is too much plague to keep the paper all the week, people keep coming arter it so."

A large number of deaths have occurred the past winter from venturing upon unsafe ice. At least twenty have perished in this way in this region, says the Boston Traveler.

Yankey Ingenuity.

"The place of my birth was about two miles from the mouth of the Sasco, in Connecticut, where it pours its humble tribute into the Long Island Sound. My grandfather's grandfather, whose name was Richard Osborn, resided in the town of Fairfield; and from him, I believe, descended the numerous families of that name still residing in Fairfield and the adjacent towns. He was the owner of one of the 'long lots,' as they were termed, which were from twenty to fifty rods in width, and eleven or twelve miles in length. The curious reader may wish to know the cause of fields being laid out in such a singular form. As it gives a specimen of Yankee ingenuity, counteracting royal oppression, I will give the account which has been handed down from our ancestors:—

"In the reign of King James II., Sir Edmund Andros was sent over to abridge the liberties of the New England colonies, and take away the power of electing Governors from the people. Public property was to be seized in the name of the King. The inhabitants of this part of the coast of Connecticut were anxious to have as much land as possible surveyed and recognized as private property. Hence, they laid out these fields, 'lots,' as they called them, extending northward from a road running parallel with the shore, eleven or twelve miles, into the unsettled part of the country. Each of the inhabitants, I suppose had a lot running thus far back; and hence a large tract became private property, which would otherwise have fallen into the hands of the crown, if King James' abdication had not led to the removal of his creature, Andros, from the government of New England."

POWER OF MOTHERS.

On one occasion, out of one hundred and twenty candidates for the ministry gathered under one roof, more than one hundred had been carried by a mother's prayers, and directed by a mother's counsels to the Savior. The pious watchfulness and earnest prayers of parents may seem for a time to be fruitless; but, in the education of children, experience tells us, "that whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—The holy impressions made in childhood are seldom erased in manhood.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE.—A prudent and well-disposed member of the "Society of Friends" once gave the following friendly advice—'John,' said he, "I hear thou art going to be married."

"Yes," replied John, "I am."

"Well," rejoined the man of drab, "I have one little piece of advice to give thee, and that is, never to marry a woman worth more than thou art. When I married my wife, I was worth just fifty cents, and she was worth sixty-two cents; and whenever any difference has occurred between us since, she has always thrown up the odd shilling."

COPIOUS FUND.—There are in the English language 20,500 nouns, 40 pronouns, 9,200 adjectives, 8,000 verbs, 2,000 adverbs, 69 prepositions, 19 conjunctions, 68 interjections, and 2 articles; in all, above 40,000.

DRINK.—At the license election in New Jersey 110 townships voted for license, and 60 no license. The aggregate number of votes polled was 41, 276—of these 21,660 were for, and 19-616 against license.

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS —The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year, for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for$5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,,. The volume begins with January.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. ALL those afflicted with that most distressing disease the PILES, can obtain certain relief, and in nineteen out of twenty cases a positive and permanent cure, by calling at S. B. Johnson's Agency, Putnam, and obtaining a box of Johnson's Vegitable Pile Ointment. This remedy has been in use in this vicinity for several years. And it is admitted by all who have tested its virtues to be superior to anything of the kind ever before offered to the public. GENERAL CONFERENCE PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

Substantial Joys in Heaven.

BY J. B. P.

All life's honors pass away,
And its noblest treasures rust;
Flowers of beauty soon decay—
Mortals mingle with the dust.

Soon the wealthy and the great,
Gay and sprightly, vain and proud,
Shall recline in lowly state,
Wrapt in funereal shroud,

All the honors of the brave,
Wreaths adorning all the wise,
Sink beneath dark Lethe's wave,
Never from its depths to rise.

All the luminaries bright,
Gemming the etherial arch,
Shedding beams of silv'ry light,
As in joyous song they march:

All below the gorgeous sky,
Things that mortals hold most dear,
Scenes of ev'ry lovely dye,
Crowning each revolving year:

These shall change or pass away,
Great convulsions earth shall see;
Time is hast'ning on his way,
Verging near eternity.

Friends that twine around the heart,
Bound with friendship's holy chain,
To an unknown world depart,
Far beyond death's dark domain.

Then, oh mortal! not below
Springs true riches, perfect bliss;
From the Fount of Life they flow—
Never Found in worlds like this.

There are treasures, pure and bright;
Beauty that shall ne'er decay;
Scenes of ever living light;
Glory passing not away.

Wreaths adorn the conq'rer's brow,
Fadeless as that brilliant land;
Strains melodious ever flow,
Swelling from angelic band.

There the tear-drops never start,
But the werry soul finds rest;
Sighs no more the broken heart—
All with rapture there are blest.

And the soul expands her gaze—
Contemplates eternal things;
Basks in wisdom's golden rays,
Bows before the King of kings.

Then, oh mortal! now be wise,
Soon will earthly things be o'er;
Seek for riches in the skies,
Joys that live for evermore.

Materials for Thought.

[Furnished by our Philadelphia Correspondent.]

WHAT HAS SIN DONE?—Take these plain answers: Sin has poisoned matter as well as mind. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake."—The sentence was executed. The earth groans through all her borders. Pestilential vapors arise from many a shore. The desert simoom kills the pilgrim hordes. The avalanche rushes on its human prey. The burning mountain covers cities with torrents of fire. The lightning smites the way-side passenger. The tumultuous ocean swallows navies. The earthquake locks its victims in its granite jaws. The winged storm scatters the food of man, and rives the forest oak.—Blight and mildew prepare the way of death. Add to these those less noted, and far more destructive agents from earth, air, and water, which are ever infusing poison into the human frame, and reminding man that the material world is full of enemies, scattered there on account of his sins. What then? Let us see: He who walked upon the sea, and commanded the waves to be still, shall reconcile all things. Before he deliver up the kingdom to His Father, the material creation shall cease to contain a noxious vapor, or a poison plant, or a pestilential influence.—The thousand messengers of death shall die. The curse shall leave the ground. The boiling fires of earth shall rend its crust no more. The enemies of man shall cease, for man shall cease to be the enemy of God. The heaving ocean shall no longer terrify; and the rushing hurricane shall cease to alarm; for he who in the days of His humiliation rebuked the winds and the waves of Tiberias, shall stand upon the throne of his glory, and issue His command to a listening universe, "Peace be still!" Footsteps of Messiah. W. Leask.

He is unwise and unhappy,—extremely so,—who never forgets the injuries he may have received. They come across his heart, like dark shadows, when the sunshine of happiness would bless him, and throw him into a tumult, that not easily subsides. The demon of hate reigns in his bosom, and makes him, of all accountable beings, the most miserable. No one need wish for his enemy greater agony than the remembrance of the injuries he has received. An unforgiving man is his own tormentor and executioner.—Such an one chooses the death of the gibbet.

Happy is the man who fears the Lord, and delights in His commandments; who sets God always before him, and acts under tee constraining influence of redeeming love. He is the real friend and the best champion of his country, who makes not the vague notions of human wisdom and honor, but the precepts and example of the blessed Jesus, the model and the motive of his conduct. He inculcates, as occasion offers, the great truths of religion in his conversation, and demonstrates them by his practice; yet the best part of his life is known only to God and himself. His time is divided between serving his country in public, and wrestling for it in private. Nor shall his labors or his prayers be lost. Either he shall have the desire of his heart, and shall see the religion and liberty he so highly values transmitted to posterity, or, if he should live when wrath is decreed, and there is no remedy, the promise and the providence of God shall seal him as the peculiar charge of angels, in the midst of public calamity. And when all things are involved in confusion, when the hearts of the wicked shall shake like the leaves of the forest, he shall be kept in perfect peace trusting in the Lord.—Newton.

RIGHT IS MIGHT.—Right is might. As sure as God liveth, as sure as the Holy One of Israel is the Lord of Hosts, the Almighty, right is might, and ever was and ever shall be so. Holiness is might; meekness is might; humility is might, self-denial and self-sacrifice is might; faith is might; love is might; every gift of the Spirit is might. The cross was two pieces of dead wood, and a helpless unresisting man was nailed to it; yet it was mightier than the world, and triumphed and will ever triumph over it. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but no pure holy deed, or word, or thought. On the other hand, might, that which the children of earth call so, the strong wind, the earthquake, the fire, perishes through its own violence, self-exhausted and self-consumed; as our age of the world has been allowed to witness in the most signal example.—For many of us remember, and they who do not, have heard from their fathers, or read,—how the mightiest man on earth, he who had girt himself with all might except that of right, burst like a tempest-cloud, burnt himself out like a conflagration, and only left the scars of his ravages to mark where he had been. Who can look into a good man's face and not see in it a power mightier than all the armies of Attilla or Napoleon?—Hare.

BROOSA.

LETTER FROM MR. SCHNEIDER.

A Journey in Asia Minor.

Our first stopping place was Magnesia, eight hours from Smyrna. It is a respectable Turkish city of 7,000 Mussulman houses, 3,000 Greek, and 700 Armenian. It is finely situated on the lower acclivities of Mount Sipylus, and has an extensive and beautiful plain spread out before it. It appears to be a place of considerable trade and activity for a Turkish city.

Much interest in the truth has not yet been awakened among the Armenian population, tho' a commencement has been made. There has been one decided and interesting case of conversion. The individual is a head of a family and a person of considerable standing and influence in the place. He was formerly noted for his wickedness, there being hardly any iniquity in which he did not participate. He now appears like a humble and sincere Christian, and the change wrought in him is very striking; especially does it appear so to his wife. One mark of the genuineness of his conversion is manifest in the solicitude he feels for the spiritual welfare of his family. He has long since established family prayer, and has continued the practice to the present day. So deep was his anxiety for his children, that with some aid, he has procured a pious teacher from Constantinople to instruct them, in connection with a few of the children of the neighbors.

From Magnesia we proceeded to Thyatira, the site of one of the Apocalyptic churches, now called Akhissar. The population consists of about 700 Musselman houses, 250 Greek, and 50 Armenian. The town is located in a plain of considerable size, and is hardly visible on being approached, by reason of the profusion of foliage. The plain itself is bounded on all sides by mountains, and cotton and a kind of reddish root [madder,] used for dying red, are raised abundantly. I observed that this root is extensively cultivated in all that region, and forms an important article of export to England, where it is used for dying purposes. In Acts xvi. 14, we read of Lydia, a seller of purple of the city of Thyatira. May not this root be the very article with which her purple was colored, which she was selling at Philippi, when the Lord opened her heart to attend to the things spoken of by Paul? It seems to me probable. But if it was so, this art of coloring appears to have been lost, for I could not find that it is now at all practised in that place or that region.

The Christian traveller and missionary naturally looks for something interesting in a place where once existed a true church of Christ.—But alas! how sadly is he disappointed! The place presents an appearance in nothing different from other Turkish towns. Every thing wears a Mussulman aspect. The houses, streets, dress, occupation and language of the inhabitants all indicate a predominating Turkish influence.—Christianity exists there in name, but it is the bare name. Its spirit has long since fled. The Greeks, especially, seem to be peculiarly superstitious. I visited their church, and found it full of pictures and other marks of degenerate Christianity.

Our next stopping place was Kurkagatch, containing about 1,000 or more Turkish houses, 250 Greek, and 150 Armenian. It is a place of more importance and business than I had supposed.—The shortness of the time at our command did not permit us to form any particular acquaintance. We were told, however, that formerly our books were read by quite a number of Armenians, and that considerable inquiry and interest then existed. Opposition was made by the ecclesiastics, and our books prohibited, and I think, an order issued to have them gathered up. Since that period there has been much less open interest in the truth, though a few still possess and read our books. We met and conversed with two of these, and from their appearance and conversation it was evident, that a beginning of better things had been made.

We next proceeded to Balikhessar. Its population consists of about 25,000 Turks, 150 Greeks, and nearly 2.000 Armenians. Here the annual fair is held, and here were the books which, you remember, were seized by the Armenian vartebed, about a year ago, and which he refused to deliver up. To recover these was our business here, and one main object of this tour.

On my first visit to the Pasha, I did not see him, as he was otherwise engaged, but stated the object of my call to his deputy. He answered me rather shortly, and implied that the books could not be delivered up without an express order from Constantinople, which I did not possess. But he told me to call again, and the case should be presented to the Pasha himself. I accordingly went accompanied by the pious native, and we were very politely and pleasantly received. After the usual salutations, he alluded to the subjects of the books, and said, if we had time to spare, he should like to converse with us a while on this whole matter. He had evidently a very imperfect knowledge of the recent movements of Protestantism in this empire, and he thought this a favorable opportunity to inform himself; and such an occasion was precisely what he desired. He first inquired as to the nature of these books. I told him they were most of them the Old and New Testament, which the Armenian nation received as their sacred books, and had them read in their churches; and that all the others were derived from them, and had all their sentiments conformed thereto. And I further told him, that if he wished to know the reason of the opposition of the Armenian nation to these evangelical men among them, it was simply this; viz. that these latter strived to live according to the gospel, rejecting the worship of pictures, the adoration of Mary and other saints, the worship of the cross, auricular confession and absolution by a priest, the numerous facts and feasts of these eastern churches, and other superstitions and human inventions, all of which were condemned by the gospel. Hereupon he inquired, with some surprise, whether there was really no authority for such things in the Bible; as though he conceived it impossible for any Christian nation to introduce and practice them without such countenance. We then gave him, in a few words, an account of the principles of Protestantism, of its unflinching integrity and honesty, and its universal truthfulness; and that no man who indulged in falsehoods, as by common consent the Greeks and Armenians do, and even the Patriarch himself, could be received into the number of true Protestants. Here he instantly remarked, in a manner wholly unsolicited, as though it was a matter he perfectly understood, "Yes, the Patriarch tells lies." Whatever some friends of this church dignitary may say or think, this Pasha, from his knowledge of his character through his political relations to Porte, believes him capable of falsifying. On his inquiry, we informed him of the spread of these evangelical principles in their empire.—He also inquired for our views of Christ, and wished to know how, if he was divine, it was possible for him to suffer and die. We told him, that he only suffered in his human nature, and not the divine. Then he wished to know how it was supposable, that a being who created the human race, could suffer himself to be put to death by them. I told him his death and sufferings were wholly voluntary. Mankind had all become sinners, and as such were exposed to perdition. But Christ, to save them from merited ruin, of his own free will, suffered and died in their stead, and as he was so exalted a being, his sufferings and death constituted an atonement sufficient for all the world. Our interview continued three quarters of an hour, and was very satisfactory. We had a fair opportunity of giving him a general view of this new religion, as he called it, though we assured him it was as old as Christ and his apostles. He several times, in most decided terms, expressed his pleasure at what he heard, and we could but be grateful for the opportunity we had of defending and explaining the truth under such circumstances.

When we took our leave, he said he would call for the primates of the Armenians, to see what they had to say for themselves. The vertabed was not in the place. When we called again, he sent for one of them the second time, so that we might have an opportunity of confronting each other. It would take too much room to repeat the conversation which took place. Suffice it to say, that after various shifts on the part of this primate, to escape the necessity of delivering up the books, as I held up the injustice of taking by force the property of another, and insisted on recovering what lawfully and of right was my own, and as the letter to the Pasha from our Consul, with which I was provided, and in which the property was demanded in strong, yet respectful terms, was read and he decided that they be surrendered. And accordingly, in two hours afterwards, I obtained possession of them. Thus, through the gracious intervention of Providence, were these books delivered from their confinement in the Armenian church premises, and are now ready to go abroad and enlighten the benighted.

The last place we visited was Kermasti, twelve hours distant from Broosa. Its Armenian population is small, being only about 500 souls. The Turkish inhabitants are nearly twice as numerous. Here are two or three native brethren, with whom we have had an acquaintance for several years past. Others, too, are in more or less of an inquiring state of mind. We left them a good supply of tracts and books. A few, at least, will read them with interest and care. The beginning which the truth has there made, encourages the hope, that it will spread and bring others under its influence.

At Balikhessar we also met with a man of standing and influence in another village, an interview with whom afforded me much satisfaction. He is a person of clear and strong mind, and retentive memory, and seems to have a love for the truth. I had seen him before; but what gave me peculiar pleasure was the fact, that he had evidently made much progress, since our last meeting, in his views of truth, and duty.—He discovers a disposition to yield to the force of truth, as soon as he perceives it: and this gives me hope that the Lord is gradually teaching him, and will yet bring him into his kingdom, and make him an instrument of spreading the gospel in his village. In fact, he has already collected a few around him, into whom he is infusing his own views and feelings.

EDUCATION.

New York, Feb. 23, 1848.

Amid the political excitement of the week, a crowded and interesting meeting in behalf of the general missionary operations of the American Sunday-school Union, was held in the Central Presbyterian Church. An interesting report from one of the Society's missionaries in the West was read, and an eloquent address made by the Rev. Mr. Chidlaw, who was followed by Hiram Ketchum, Esq., of the Episcopal Church, who said:

That he had never attended one of the meetings of this society before, and he hoped every person had been as much gratified with what he had heard to-night, as he had.

After all, it might be said that we had come here to hear reports from the battle field, to devise measures and supply means to carry on the controversy which had been maintained since the morning of creation, between holiness and sin, morality and immorality, purity and impurity, justice and fraud, order and confusion, eternal life and eternal death. This war, he remarked, was perpetual; there would be no peace in our day, and when peace did come, it would be the result of conquest—we should conquer peace—the CAPTAIN of our salvation would "put all enemies under his feet."

We who have entered into covenant relations with this Divine Commander, are the enlisted solders in this war, and wo unto us if we turn our backs upon the enemy, or fail to acquit ourselves valiantly in the fight.

We do not lack encouragements, he said, to make the most strenuous efforts, and to submit to all the privations and hardships, which the exigencies of the war demand. It was said by one of the Kentucky volunteers, who bore himself very gallantly in the Battle of Buena Vista,—in answer to the question how he felt on that occasion—"It seemed to me," he remarked, "that all Kentucky was looking at me." Are we not, too, my friends, encompassed about "by a great cloud of witnesses?" Ought we not, therefore, to acquit ourselves like men, looking constantly to the "Author and finisher of our faith?" We have learned from the reports and statements we have heard on this occasion, what is our line of duty in relation to the immediate object before us.

This society is composed of a union of persons of different denominations of Christians to accomplish objects upon which they all agree, and the accomplishment of which they all desire. No member of this society is required to surrender or compromise his own distinctive opinions or belief. As far as we agree, and no further, we pledge united action. This is all right—who can object to it? The American people fully understand the true principles of union—the people of the different States of this Republic formed a union for distinct and definite purposes—so far as these purposes require, they act together, yet each State, in other important particulars of government, acts for itself individually—wholly independent of any other State.

So with the different denominations of Christians; they unite in certain articles of belief, deduced from their common standard of faith,—the Bible; and these articles they are willing to inculcate upon the minds of the people, and they especially agree in this sentiment, that this common standard of faith shall be put into the hands of every man for his own examination.

The object of this union, as has been well remarked, IS TO TAKE CARE OF THE CHILDREN.—What object can be more useful or interesting? The children! the future men and women of the country,—those who, in a very short time, are to take our places, in the church and in the State. Put right sentiments into the minds and hearts of children, and you may be sure that they will make their way to the minds and hearts of their parents, and they will come, too, in a manner most likely to secure for them acceptance and approbation.

The time selected for imparting this information is the Sabbath day, or the Lord's day, the one day in the seven which, by general consent, is a day of cessation from ordinary avocations. In any community where this day is practically regarded as sacred, there is peace and order, and safety, and progress in right things. There is, said Mr. K., no better evidence of a sound and improving state of society than the due observance of the Sabbath day. It has, said he, been well remarked by the reverend gentlemrn who has preceded me, that children will find employment on that day, and if they are not furnished with employment which improves them, they will fall into that which will prove injurious. The Sunday-school supplies the desideratum; here they may learn their duty toward God, and their duty toward their neighbor.

When needful, the society supplies them with books. The first and most important of these books is the Bible. Then there are other books, comprising a library of one hundrend small volumes. It is the object of the society to furnish each of the Sunday-schools it establishes with one or more of these libraries. The cost of one of these libraries is ten dollars—that ts to say, ten cents a volume. We have seen that several hundreds of these libraries have been subscribed here to-night.

Now, my friends, said Mr. K., do you know what this library contains? I ask this question, continued he, for until a few days I confess that I have known very little about it; but now I am able to say, and I do say it to every person who hears it,—and I should like to say it to the head of every family in the land,—that this Sunday-school library contains some of the choicest reading to be found any where; matter which will be found to interest deeply, judging from my own case, not only children but their parents. I know that one more at least, no longer a child in years, has found the pulsations of his heart quickened, and his eye moistened, in the perusal of some of these little volumes. Why, said Mr. K., I know not the author of these books, but I honor the author of "Frank Harper," and some others that I have perused, more than I honor General Scott, and General Taylor, without meaning to detract from the consideration due to each of these distinguished military commanders.

Now, said Mr. K., I have made up my mind to buy one of these libraries, first, for my own reading, and that of my family, and then it shall go to a Sunday-school, in the West or some where else. I recommend to every father of a family who hears me to-night, to follow my example. Be sure to get one for your own use, and then you will be convinced, in reading the books yourselves, by an argument more powerful than any man can employ, of the importance of furnishing them to those who cannot buy.

Said Mr. K., a reverend gentleman near me, who asked me a few days since to make a speech on this occasion, was so good as to send me a few copies of the books published by the society.—They were carried to my house, and we all fell to reading them—wife, children, servants and all.—The books were devoured, and a rare treat it was. My little son, just beginning to read, asked me where these beautiful and interesting books came from. I told him, I was going to make a speech, and these books were presented to me because I was going to make a speech. Well, said he, "father, I wish you would make a speech every night, if you can get such books as these for it.

Now, Mr. President, said Mr. Ketchum, if my speech has any effect at all—that effect will be manifest in applications within a week, at the American Sunday-school Depository in Nassau street, for the purchase of a number of these libraries. The books contained in them will be read more than they had been read before.

Mr. Ketchum continued his remarks in commenting upon a passage in the circular of the Rev. R. H. Bourne, one of the agents of the Society, connected with the Episcopal church.

The passage was this: "What higher, holier, nobler charity can be bestowed on any part of the globe? And what portions of its 800.000,000 of inhabitants should share more largely in our sympathies, than those who speak our language, live under the same government, and breathe the same air with ourselves, and "who are invested with ample powers to sustain or subvert, to save or destroy, the cherished institutions of our country."

Narrative.

Cassius M. Clay's account of his imprisonment and Captivity. His views of Mexico.

FROM HIS SPEECH AT RICHMOND, KY.

That seventy-one men and officers, should hold three thousand regular Mexican Cavalry at bay from light till noon; and finally make terms of the most honorable treatment; presents a spectacle of the moral sublime, unsurpassed by the heroism of the bloodiest battles. In sending back Captain Henry, through eighty armed lancers, one hundred and fifty miles from camp, with three thousand enemies in the rear was displayed a rare feat of individual daring, and the object of our mission accomplished. Your allusion to my action on that occasion; and the testimony of my fellow prisoners generally, as well as the previous comments of some others, induce me here to relate the exact particulars of that adventure. The soldiers, with Captain Danley, and the subordinate officers, were on foot marching by twos. Major Gaines and Borland, Captain Henry and myself, were on horse-back, at the head of the column. The Mexican lancers mounted, were in open files on both sides of the soldiers, with a van and rear guard. Captain H. having been taken prisoner at Mier, and having escaped from the castle of Perote and being recognized by the Mexicans, feared that he would be put to death, as the expedition to Mier was disavowed by Texas. Major Gaines thought there was no danger of his life; but permitted Henry to exchange horses with him; as the two Majors only had been allowed to retain their American horses. Henry also asked my advice; I agreed with him that his life was in imminent peril; told him I should be glad for our friends to know of the advance of the army: but declined urging him one way or the other in an affair of so much danger. Henry agreed at length to run. I told Captain H. to speak low, as the Mexican Lieutenant, I was convinced, understood English; although he denied all knowledge of the language. This the Lieutenant overheard, and reported it to Col. Sambranino the commanding officer of the guard. He immediately ordered Messrs. Gaines and Borland, under a strong guard, ahead; uncovered his pistols and commanded the guard to open the ranks, so as to be out of arms reach of our men. seeing their preparations, we supposed the time had come for Capt. H.'s death, and he riding down the ranks under pretence of arranging the men by twos, according to order, gave spurs to his horse and escaped. The Colonel supposed that we were plotting to rise upon the guard; and Henry's running, confirmed him in the opinion. He ordered the lancers to charge, which they promptly obeyed, having retired before far enough to allow some momentum in the advance. I was alone and about twenty yards ahead. I rode back and ordered the men to lie down, which they promptly did; told the Colonel they were innocent—that I only was responsible. He then told three lancers to lance me! One at each side and one in the rear; he with his postol at my breast, and the Lieutenant with his sabre also drawn, placed me in no very agreeable attitude. Seeing that the soldiers were safe, as they began to tie them, I assure you that I was not slow in talking in my own defence; I avowed that I knew of H.'s design to escape—that I had not advised him one way or the other—that he had a right to act independently, and by the laws of war, I could not be responsible for another's act—that there was no intention to rise upon the guard—that to kill me would be murder—that I was of noble family at home—and that my death would be amply avenged by my countrymen. Believing no doubt, from my manner, that I told the truth, they spared my life. They tied me for a few moments—then released me, when the Colonel embraced me, and asked my pardon for the indignity. They released the officers that were on foot, and also tied that night; but kept the soldiers tied for two days longer. That the lives of my command were saved by my presence of mind, and frank confession, I honesty believe; I admit, to use the language of my friend Col. C——bs, that if "I was not sacred, I stood in great bodily apprehension." But to be serious: whatever fears of death I might have had, I am proud to say, never out-weighed my sense of truth and justice. Whatever then my enemies shall deduct from my courage, they must place to the credit of my superior moral power; and become unconsciously my loftiest eulogists. Our long and painful march to San Luis Potosi and thence to Mexico; our imprisonment and final release are well known. It is but just to the Mexicans, to say that in allowing our soldiers eighteen cents a day—they gave them the same that they give their own soldiers, who do not require half as much food as our own men; whilst our being strangers prevented us from buying as much food, with the same money. The hardships of the route through the desert were shared by their own soldiers. In a word, there were many instances of Spanish generosity during our captivity; and our hardships were not unreasonable, when we remember that their own men were starving, in the defense of their homes and their religion.

That Santa Anna was sincerely courteous and full of fair promises as he was going on "to drive Taylor over the Sabine," seems natural; that he should have broken all his engagements with us afterwards, can only be accounted for upon the supposition that he wished to hold us as hostages for his safety, in case he fell into our hands. The Governor of Mexico, at Toluca, is entitled to our lasting gratitude for sending us to Gen. Scott, on parole: the man who could thus trust others, is himself, of necessity, of a great and noble soul.

It is no doubt expected of me to give some ideas of Mexico and the present war. Mexico extends from about latitude 16 north, to 42 deg. from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific; and was in extent, before the loss of Texas, about as large as the U. States. It embraces all the climates of the world, & rises in temperature, from the tropical plains of Vera Cruz and Acapulco to the regions of perpetual snow. The rocky Mountains which separate us from Oregon extend through all Mexico, and her whole surface is composed of table lands and mountains, which rise in steps from the Gulf and the Rio Grande to the highest level, and then descend in regular gradations once more to the Pacific. She has no navigable streams, and the mountains and arid plains compose, I should imagine, seven-eighths, of the whole territory. It is now three hundred years since the Spanish conquest and her population has long since reached that barrier, where nature imposes eternal obstacles to further progress, where the whole products of the earth, are economically consumed by the people. No doubt, better modes of agriculture would increase her population, but at present, to use the language of Malthus, she has reached the point of subsistence. It is true that the remote provinces of California and New Mexico, and those bordering on the Rio Grande, and subject to Indian invasion, contain some uncultivated lands; but the proposition as above stated applies to the mass of Mexico. For in the greater portion of the whole republic, women and children may be seen picking up grains of corn in the highways, and the rinds of fruit thrown in the streets are immediately seized and consumed. So soon as you cross the Rio Grande you feel yourselves in a foreign land. Mexico has no forests. It is true that along the streams and on mountain-tops there are trees, but you are struck with this great characteristic, that the land is bare of trees. The numerous varieties of the Cactus of all sizes, intermixed with Palmetto, stunted or long grass cover the whole land. You are among a people of a novel color, and a strange language. The very birds and beasts, and dogs seems different. The patridge, the lark, the crow, the black-bird, differ in size and plumage, and sing differently from ours. The buildings are of Moorish and Spanish style. The Goat and the Sheep feed together. The bricks are of clay and sun-dried. The women go with earthen vessels to the well, just as Rachæl was sent of old in the time of the Patriarchs of Judea. The roofs of the houses are flat and places of recreation, and the people wear sandals as in the East, in olden time.—Wheat, Indian-corn, and herds of cattle, sheep and goats, the Banana and red-pepper, and garlic and onions, are the principal sources of subsistence. The products of the mines are the principal articles of foreign exchange, added to woods, besides tallow and cochineal.

The extreme dryness of Mexico makes irrigation necessary in most of the country, and the scarcity of water, and the habits of the people, collect the inhabitants into cities or villages.—The land itself, is owned by a few large proprietors, not the least of whom are the priests. The great mass of the people are serfs with but few more rights than American slaves. It is true that the children of serfs, are not of necessity also serfs, but debt brings slavery, and the wages allowed by law almost always perpetuate it. Here then is the secret of the success of our arms. I conversed freely with the tenantry and soldiers in all Mexico, and where they are not filled with religious enthusiasm against us, they say they care not who rules them. American or Mexican masters. If all the Mexican soldiers were freeholders and freemen, not one of all the American army could escape from her borders. The soldiers are caught up in the Haciendas and the streets of the towns, by force confined in some prison or convent, there drilled, clothed, armed, and then sent on to the regular army. Such men avow their resolution to desert, or run, on the first occasion. Of near one thousand soldiers sent from Toluca, to the aid of Santa Anna at Mexico, not one hundred stood the battle.

The whole people do not exceed eight millions, of these about two millions are whites and mixed bloods, the remainder are native Indians: I never, in all Mexico, with the exception of Foreigners in the Capital saw a single white man at work. Wherever there is slavery, there, is labor dishonorable—it is more creditable to rob than to work! Yet Mexico surpasses the slave States of America in Manufactures! As Rome was overrun by the Barbarians so is Mexico now by the Americans, the slaves will not fight, the masters are too few to defend the country. Bigotry in Religion has abased the mind—the corruptions of the Church have destroyed the morals of the people; the oppressions of the masters have exhausted the lands. Mexico is decreasing in population and resources. Since her independence, her revenues are falling off, her villages are decaying, her public works falling to ruin. She has lived by the sword, she must perish by the sword. The time for her to die has come! Yet, like South Carolina, she talks large.—Louisville Examiner.

A good library, a good temper, a good wife, and a good friend, are four of the choicest blessings of life.

Conference Proceedings.

From the Methodist Protestant.

Philadelphia Conference.

Abstract of proceedings of the third session of the Philadelphia Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The Conference commenced its session on 22d March, and continued it for three full days.

Brother Wilson informed the Conference that a Methodist Protestant Church had been duly constituted in the city of Reading, county of Berks, Pa.; and that that church consists at present of fifty-two members. Its representation was received by the conference. In that part of the State, as also in other parts, the right sort of thorough going itinerant Methodist Protestant preachers, are greatly needed.

Brother John E. Barnes was admitted as a preacher to itinerate within the district, as he may be directed by the President.

A church in Kensington, (a precint of Philadelphia,) called Mount Zion, having one hundred and sixty members, one minister and two unstationed preachers, applied for recognition by the conference, as a Methodist Protestant Church; and as it had been duly recognized by the most adjacent quarterly conference, according to the provision of the constitution, the said church was received into our fellowship, and its delegate fell into the ranks of lay representatives as naturally as any other American citizen could have done, in any other representative body.

A resolution commendatory of "The Methodist Protestant," as the church organ, and of the "Western Recorder," as its Western adjunct, was unanimously passed.

Temperance was unanimously commended; and intemperance, and all traffic in intoxicating drinks, were unanimously condemned.

A committee reported that there are nine hundred and fifty-two members (952) in the churches of this district; one hundred and thirteen (113) sunday school teachers; and nine hundred and sixty-four (964) sunday school scholars. Five houses of worship, valued at thirty-seven thousand dollars ($37,000) and that present intentions are to erect three more houses of worship in the district this year. [Hope no debts may be contracted.]

This conference has been in existence one year, and there is surely no language sufficiently expressive of the reasons for gratitude and confidence, on the part of the conference,—the number of members of the churches have been nearly doubled, since its organization. You pray that we may make a similar record next year? And for how many succeeding years? May the little one become thousands. What shall prevent? What wretches shall we be, should it ever be truly said of us, "Oh Israel thou hast destroyed thyself." Let us be persuaded there is no danger—rather no possibility of our overthrow, if we are faithful to Him who has called us.

The following resolution was adopted:—"That ——— be a committee to prepare and publish a Pastoral Address to the churches represented in this conference; and that they state in that address the Scripture doctrines most surely believed and taught by our connexion, and the distinctive characteristics of our church purity.

The following are the appointments:

John G. Wilson, President, and to be pastor of the Ebenezer Church, Kensington. The President will visit the churches as occasion may require.

James Thomas Ward, pastor of the Frst M. P. Church, Philadelphia. Note.—Bro. Ward has been only a short time the pastor of that church. Some accessions have been had. The prospects are cheering.

John R. Nichols, Brickmakers', Philadelphia. There have been many members added to that church recently.

A. S. Eversole, Superintendent; Dr. P. Price, super'y assistant, Aston mission.

S. Gardner, Bethlehem; Peter Light Wilson, bro. Wilson is a member of the Md. District, & has been very kindly transferred to this district for a year. Doubtless, if faithful—and of this there is no doubt, he will be enabled by the Divine blessing, to make a good report at the end of the year. All who know him, will add 'Amen.'

Southwark to be supplied.

J. E. Barnes, left without an appointment at his own request.

Jacob H. Nickels, Conference Misionary.

As has been often said of conferences, so we say of this: "A better state of feeling, and a more harmonious session—one more indicative of good to come, we never knew."

The conference adjourned with this resolution on every tongue, and we hope in every heart:—"We will endeavor by the grace of God to improve ourselves and our work the ensuing year."

The next conference is to be held in Ebenezer Church, Kensington, on the third day of March, 1849.

In making this communication, I claim the immunity of rather an old man.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Huntersville ct., March 21st, 1848.

Br. Bassett: By your permission I would say through your excellent paper, that we still enjoy a degree of prosperity. Since my last a number have experienced the religion of Jesus. We have organized one new class of nine members, of good materials, with fair prospect for a number more. O that the Lord may increase them in number and in piety, there seems to be an improvement in the congregations generally, while the members seem to be seeking a deeper work of grace. So upon the whole we are making, I think, a slow but steady advancement. It is our desire and prayer, day and night, that the good Lord would revive his work more abundantly until the last enemy might be subdued, and the triumphs of the Redeemer's might prevail over this entire community, yea, over the entire world. O, pray for us.

We expect to hold our third quarterly meeting at Harper's School House, seven miles east o. Huntersville to commence on the 20th of May next, to which we invite Brs. J. Clark, R. Walker, and J. Pricket. Come brethren and help us for we need help.

Yours in gospel bonds,

D. D. HUGHES.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Lyme, O., March 30th, 1848.

Mr. Editor,—I wish to inform Br. Clancy and my Ministerial Brethren for their encouragement and also all such as delight in good news that the Lord has visited Bellview circuit in mercy. Our second Quarterly Meeting was held in Br. Rowcliffe's neighborhood, Lyme township, Huron county, commencing on the 12th of February 1848, and continued until the 20th at which meeting the Great Head of the Church manifested his presence in the conviction and conversion of sinners, it was a precious time indeed and resulted in the organizing of a society of thirteen members, all heads of families except two and permanent settlers in the neighborhood. we had the help of Br. Freece, from the Sandusky circuit, who labored to great acceptability and profit. I would say dear brethren we are getting along very pleasantly with this dear people, and our prospects for the future are quite flattering, my health is better. We are all in peace with one little exception. I would say for this circuit, I find some good Brethren, and the people kind & attentive to the wants of my family, and without some alteration for the worse I could ask no better field to labor. All classes receive me with friendship, I cannot help feeling a tender regard for them. As for finance no circuit I ever traveled took greater interest in it than Bellview.—We have received twenty-seven members this year, and when our principles are fully known, they are heartily embraced, and be assured, Br. Clancy, Bellview circuit is worth contending for. And what ever may have been said about it I find Protestant Methodists here who stand firm to our cause. So we pray for prosperity and the presence of the good Lord to be with us.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel.

A. S. ROBISON.

Fredericktown, O., April 6th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Through the blessing of God I am yet alive and enjoy tolerably good health; and have been for more than two weeks, enjoying a precious season of God's reviving and converting grace; on the N. West of this circuit five more were added to the Church, and some ten or a dozen professed an evidence of sins forgiven; I am not able to state—definitely the number of conversions (as some do.)

Yours,

J. S. THRAP.

Columbia Circuit, April 5th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Through the medium of the Recorder, I wish to state to Br. Clancy the President, a few things relative to Columbia circuit. We cannot report such prosperity, as some of our brethren; but will try to state things as they are. We have held two quarterly meetings, both of which, passed off without any thing special, but rather discouraging. There was barely enough of the officiary present, to do business. The officiary, and membership, generally, have been discouraged, and many of them have let go all holds, to let the ship sink or swim. The ch. here has been sinking for the last two years, and is now almost gone. Perhaps the reader is ready to enquire for the cause of this declension: well, there has been a cause, or rather a complication of causes. There is such a diversity of conflicting views, and principles here, they operate much against the interests of the church. And there is a great amount of Infidelity in disguise; clothed in the garb of some popular subjects of the day; thereby endeavoring to insinuate itself into churches, as the serpent managed with our first parents in Eden. But there is another, and a more direct cause. For the last two years, the circuit has had a superintendent, that did not meet their wishes; but more especially the present year. Almost universal dissatisfaction prevailed at the commencement of this year: and it has been increased, by his tinkering at a new organization, which declares the Methodist Protestant Church to be Anti-Christ. But this cause is now removed. For recently, there happened to pass this way, a small new vessel, called "The True Wesleyan," with Father Woodruff at the helm. Br. Elliott embraced the opportunity, steped aboard, and is sailing off. Br. Clancy will discover that I am left on Columbia circuit, without a superintendent. Though prospects are gloomy, we intend to do the best we can till the close of the year; the Lord being our helper. Pray for us, brethren, that darkness may give way, and light burst in, and prosperity yet come to Zion here.

Yours in Christ,

G. M. SCOTT.

P. S. I wish to make an inquiry of the president, Br. Clancy. Where a class is in a confused state, so that it can scarcely be told who is on the Lord's side, and who is not. Would there be any impropriety in it, or would it be a violation of discipline, to commit the class-book to the flames, and organize anew?

OHIO DISTRICT.

Middletown, Campaign co., O., April 5th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: For five days past we have been holding meeting in this place, and notwithstanding the discouragements under which we commenced, we now have the buddings of a glorious revival. Last night three were brought from darkness to light, and this morning they rose in succession and told what God, the Lord had done for them. There are more, who are mourning on the account of their sins, and it is expected that they will be at the altar of prayer to night. O how my heart has rejoiced in seeing the commencement of this work here. for up to the time of this meeting, Middletown was one of our most discouraging points. We have had some glorious meetings in the bounds of Union Circuit this winter. About seventy have united with us in church fellowship since Conference. To God be all the glory.

As ever yours, &c.,

O. P. STEPHENS.

MICHIGAN DISTRICT.

Laporte, Ia., April 1st, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Knowing that good news is always desirable, I thought I would give you and your readers a short account of my missionary operations, for the last three months. I commenced on Lagrange circuit, on New Year's eve, held four meetings at different points on the circuit, which resulted in the conversion and reclaiming of over one hundred and thirty souls, embracing some of the most wealthy and influential men in the community: about ninety of the above number, had given in their names to the Methodist Protestant Church before I left. I was assisted in the above meetings by Br. Ard. Sutton, who is the superintendent of the circuit. He is well received, and well liked: and I think will be well sustained. This circuit has had many trials, but I hope that God will give them prosperity in future. I went from Lagrange to Prairie Round, circuit; assisted Br. Mack, in a meeting at the Meeting-house, nine or ten evenings,—no great interest,—ten or twelve conversions. Held another meeting some three miles west of the Meeting-house,—a considerable interest but no conversions.

D. G. OAKS, C. M., M. District.

Br. Bassett, is there not some ministers in the Muskingum District that could be prevailed upon to come over into Michigan, and help us, you do not know how we are suffering for the want of efficient Itinerants.? O that God would raise up and send more laborers into the field.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, April 13, 1848.

☞ New subscribers this week, 9. Discontinuance, none.

To Correspondents.—We have, respectfully to decline several articles lately received which we do not think it necessary to speak of by name, as their non-appearance in our columns, will sufficiently indicate that for reasons which might be named, we think best not to publish them. Our friends will excuse us.

The article in reply to "T. P. Armstrong," is not accepted, because it would introduce a controversy on the merits of Masonry, a controversy from which our columns have been happily relieved. We believe that the great mass of our readers, both anti and pro, on this question, think it best that our columns should not be occupied with it.

We would like to accommodate our brother of Palermo, New York, in the publication of his article. But he will pardon us, that we find portions of it too unintelligible. Even the principal name spoken of, we cannot decidedly make out. If our brother will get some competent friend to prepare the article for the press, we will publish it for him at once.

The correspondent last alluded to, is by no means alone, in the matter of sending us articles not prepared for the press. Not a few who can write at least passibly well, & in some instances very well, do up a hasty piece of manuscript, and send it off with "written in haste,"—or "please correct errors, if you find any." &c. Now if a brother should ask us to black his boots or curry his horse, we would do it with more pleasure and less discomfort than this other thing required. How many times in such case do we find errors in every line! Many a writer would be surprised with his own productions, would he but look them over critically, as we have to do.

Whilst on this point, we will for once volunteer this much advice to such writers as are not older than ourself. No private letter much less one intended for the press, should be sent off till the writer has carefully read it entirely over, to see if it distinctly expresses what he intends, and for the purpose of supplying words which may have been omitted, crossing the T's., dotting the I's., erasing superfluous words, and improving such as have been indistinctly written. If we ever fail to do this, we hope we shall be made to pay our fine.

We here wish to guard one point. Brethren who send us religious intelligence, may feel assured that we are always happy to receive their letters, and if not prepared for the press, we take pleasure in doing the best we can for them, without any criticism, or reflection upon the writers. But when brethren wish to communicate their views to the public, upon any subject, general or particular, we insist that they should take pains to have their articles prepared for the press.

☞ The Publisher of the "Sacred Melodeon," requests us to give a gentle hint to those who received copies of his work from the Editor of this paper, at Conference time last fall, and did not settle for them then, that they would greatly oblige him by attending to it soon as practicable. Remit to the Editor of the Recorder, and it will be right.

Earthquake.—On Thursday last, (6th inst.) at about 8 o'clock, a shock of an earthquake was very sensibly felt by most persons in this vicinity. We happened to be at the house of a friend in Zanesville at the time, and observed quite a prolonged vibration of the building attended with a rumbling sound. At the same time, the sensation was felt by our family in Putnam, and many neighbors. The shock however was most distinctly observed in stores of queens-ware, tin-ware, &c. It seemed to us that there was a slight repetition of the shock, a few moments after the first. We learn by the Zanesville Courier, that at the same hour two shocks were experienced at Newark, O. We apprehend that we shall soon hear of some violent convulsion at some point, probably at the South.

Br. Joseph Newlove.—By private letter from Br. R. Rose of Springfield circuit, we are informed of the death of this aged brother, residing near Harmony, Clark County, Ohio. Few persons we think have given evidence of deeper piety, or more amiable qualities, than our old friend who has so lately been called away. We have greatly enjoyed his society in days and years gone by, but we doubt not he has now joined the happy society above. May the consolations of the Gospel sustain those who most sensibly realize the loss of Father Newlove.

Good News from Bainbridge, O.—We take the the liberty of inserting below an extract of a private letter from Br. C. H. Williams, dated Bournville, April 4.

"We are still gaining ground slowly in this place as a church. Some three names have been received since my last communication and the new organization promises much fruit. We have just closed a meeting in Bainbridge which lasted two weeks and resulted in the addition of 45 names to the church. These with some 6 or 7 members who belonged to Cove Spring class, will constitute an organization of about 50. Brother Kezerta and I have much cause of gratitude to God for favors enjoyed on our circuits. Brother K. will write soon for the Recorder and give you the particulars."

We want that letter from Brother Kezerta.—It will bring us some subscribers, we warrant, almost.

Sears' Magazine.—The April number is received. It is filled with interesting and instructive articles. Strange that any one should want fiction or light reading, who can get such a Magazine for their entertainment. The engravings are numerous, well chosen, and well devised. $2 per annum in advance. Address, R. Sears, N. York.

Sad Calamity.—The publisher of the Oberlin Evangelist, has our sincere sympathies in the misfortune which has befallen him, in the loss by fire of his book store, dwelling and printing office; but especially his subscription list. If we can render any aid, in the way of renewing or extending the subscription list of so excellent and useful a religious paper as the "Evangelist," we will cheerfully do it. Subscribers in this place and vicinity can if they see proper, report to us, and we will communicate to the publisher at Oberlin. See account in another column from the "Watchman of the Valley."

"Anglo-Saxon."—We direct attention to the following card from the publishers of this paper, which is the organ of the Phonographic and Phonotypic enterprise. We sincerely sympathise with them in the loss they have sustained, and hope that the mystery will yet be unravelled. If it is in our power to aid in renewing or extending their subscription list, we will cheerfully do it. Subscribers for the Anglo-Saxon, in this place, or elsewhere, can, if they choose, report themselves to us, and we will give notice to the publishers.

A CARD,

From the Proprietors of the "Anglo Saxon"

TO THEIR PATRONS.

MALICIOUS ROBBERY!!!!

Between 11 o'clock on Saturday night, 25th ult., and 6 o'clock on the morning of the following Monday, our Office was entered by some person or persons unknown, who carried off three new MAIL-BOOKS, into which the names of our Subscribers had been lately transferred. The envelopes already written for the next number of our paper, our old mail-books, and every thing tending to give us the slightest clue to the residences of our Subscribers, were also carried off! These were the only articles taken, although there were many valuable books, articles of wearing apparel, printers' materials, &c., &c., in the room where the robbery was perpetrated, as well as in the other rooms of our establishment. We do not therefore attribute the theft to a professional thief, but to some villian who was envious of our success, or who, fancying himself aggrieved by us, took this unlawful and malicious means of revenging himself—rightly imagining, that to cut us off from all means of communication with our Subscribers, would be the next thing to a death-blow to us, and to the immediate progress of the literary reform advocated by us.

Under the circumstances, we have done all that can be done. We have sent a copy of this "CARD" to every editor in the United States and B. North America, requesting them to copy it. Our Subscribers are requested to write to us immediately, informing us to what number, or about what number, their subscriptions extend.—We will immediately enter their names in a new mail-book already prepared for that purpose.—We will continue receiving these names until May 1st. Until then, we will not publish the next regular number of the "Anglo-Saxon." By this arrangement, none of the articles on "Phonetics," by Zabdiel Hauritz, nor any other matter relating to the immediate object of the paper, will be lost to our Subscribers. In the mean time, we shall strike off several thousand copies, containing interesting matter to beginners, and circulate them gratuitously among teachers, all over the country.

We trust that it is unnecessary to request our Subscribers, that as this misfortune has placed us entirely at their mercy, they will, if they do not remember the exact number at which their subscription expires, rather give us, than themselves, the benefit of their doubts. It will be necessary for them, at any rate, to state definitely, up to what number they are entitled to the best of their belief—as it will be useless for them to leave us to decide upon the merits of their respective cases—we having lost all memoranda of our transactions with them. May we not also ask them, under these circumstances, to pay their own postage?

The Anti-Tobacco Enterprise.—An esteemed minister of the Pittsburgh Conference, several weeks ago prompted us "not to forget the Anti-Tobacco enterprise." We confess that we have latterly devoted less attention to this subject, than formerly, as we not wish to be considered a "one idea man," and especially as another Br. of the same Conference, no less esteemed and longer known, had done us the kindness to admonish us that our publication of articles on that subject had given offence to many of our patrons, and assigning it as one reason why he could not procure new subscribers for us. We appreciate the motives of each of the brethren, above referred to, and are sincerely thankful to them both. Just now we have received a letter from another minister of the same Conference, prompting us in reference to this matter. It is not unlikely that our readers will hear from him next week through our columns. He is opposed to the common use of the article. Now, it has been our endeavor to use caution, not to use terms calculated to give offence, or to injure the feelings of our friends or patrons, who think it right or needful to use the article. But the minds of some are sensitive, on this subject, as ours may be at times on other points. And indeed allowance must be made, as it is so difficult to sacrafice an idol. Whilst we regret, however, that some have been displeased with us for publishing articles in reference to the use of tobacca, we rejoice, yea, and will rejoice, that information has been communicated to us, that thro'. the influence of our paper, not a few in various circuits and places, have abandoned we trust forever, the practice, and are now rejoicing in the escape they have made. We see that a very considerable portion of the press, aye, the religious press, is beginning to speak out decidedly against the practice. So, our respected friends, who are also friends of the "weed" will please bear with us, we shall get behind the times in an important moral enterprise, unless we too, take part in the same.

Just as we were engaged in penning the above, the "Methodist Protestant" of Saturday last come to hand. Glancing over the Minutes of the New York Conference, recently held, we find the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we earnestly recommend that the ministers and preachers of this Annual Conference, refrain from the use of Tobacco in all its forms, especially when in the house of God."

That's a good one, and perhaps that will do for this time.

American Pulpit.—The publisher of this excellent work, after some interruptions for a few months past, has now made up lost time. The numbers for January, February and March have come to hand—quite a treat of religious reading. The first contains a Sermon by Rev. Dr. Peck, Principal of the Troy Conference Academy, and three sketches of sermons by the Editor, as we suppose. The second contains a Thanksgiving Sermon by Rev. Miles Sanford, Pastor of the Baptist Church, East Boston, Massachusetts. Another, by Rev. J. E. Cobb, of Washington Arkansas. The third contains a Sermon by Rev. W. N. Shoel, Pastor of the Lutheran Church, Cannjoharie, New York. Another by the late Rev. Daniel Poe, of the Texas Conference. It pleases us well to see that this work is kept free from denominational bearings, ministers of the various evangelical churches being represented in its pages. Terms, $1 per year in advance. Address, Samuel Chism, Worcester, Massachusetts.

Evangelical Preacher.—We have received the March number of this useful publication. It contains a sermon by Rev. Dr. Fuller, Pastor of the Seventh Baptist Church, Baltimore, Md. It is a Funeral Discourse, preached on the death of Rev. Dr. Brantly, from the words of St. Paul, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I may finish my course with joy." The subject is dicussed in an able, interestiug and forcible manner. An Obituary Address, in reference to the deceased, also accompanies. The Editor, Rev. N. N. Wood, promises that the "Preacher" shall conflict with no kindred interest or enterprise, and designs that it shall be read with interest and profit by all denominations of Evangelical Christians. The present number is decidedly improved in appearance. We trust that the work will be sustained by a good patronage. Published at the Aurora office, Zanesville, Ohio. $1 per year.

Biographical.

From the Methodist Protestant.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

REV. DANIEL IRELAND,

Departed this life on Sunday, the 20th day of February, 1848, in the 68th year of his age, in hope of a blissful immortality.

The subject of this brief notice was born Aug. 10th, 1780, in Westchester county, State of New York. Of his youthful history it is not in the power of the writer to say anything until he was about 18 years of age, when he was awakened to a sense of his situation while out of Christ; and being possessed naturally of an inquiring mind, he investigated the sublime truths of the Gospel, saw himself a sinner, undone, and condemned. When Jesus was presented as "the only Saviour," he embraced Him with full purpose of heart, and found! How often have we heard him tell of the conviction, contrition and godly sorrow he experienced for sin; and while engaged as an apprentice, at beaming hides in a tan-yard, the rich display of saving grace then and there experienced. How true it is, that the young convert anxiously desires others to enjoy the same blessing he participates in; so it was in this instance: he lays aside his leather apron and leaves for his father's house, informing those he saw of the change wrought in his mind. About midnight he arrived at his father's house—he entered, and the first salutation was, "I am happy!" which aroused the sleeping inmates "I am happy!" still shouted the truly happy Daniel. Father, mother, brothers and sisters are all aroused; none of them understand the meaning of Daniel, until grandmother unravelled the mystery. She had been among the Moravians, and had heard and experienced a similar sensation to the one now manifested by her grand-son. A revival immediately ensued, and several of his father's family became the subjects of converting grace.

He soon after united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, filled the office of Class leader, and enjoyed the confidence of his brethren, to whom he was ardently attached. It appears that some of his MSS. are lost, or he traveled [for I think I distinctly recollect hearing him say that he travelled under the P. E. before he was 21 years of age] under the Elder, with an Exhorter's license: for the oldest I have in my possession bears date "Kingsborough, July the 11th, 1801." It may be, this relic of other years will interest the reader, therefore I insert a copy of it, viz:

"Whereas, Daniel Ireland has applied to us for liberty to exhort on our Circuit. After due examination of his gifts, grace, and usefulness, we judge him a proper person; and, therefore, authorize him to exhort.

Signed,

WM. McLENAHAN,

Saratoga Circuit."

It appears he used his Exhorter's license, for in June following he received the following:

"To whom it may concern: This certifies that Daniel Ireland is authorised to exercise the office of a Preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Signed in behalf of Quarterly Conference held at Banker's, in Sancon dogo, by Saratoga Ct., June 12, 1802."

WM. COLLENT.

His license continued till 1807, when he received Deacon's orders, on the 3d day of April, at Philadelphia, his parchment bearing the seal and signature of Francis Asbury; and two years after was ordained Elder by Bishop McKendree, at the same place. At what time he entered the Itinerant ranks, does not positively appear; but it is probable about the year 1801 or '2; he was appointed by his P. Elder to serve the Church as a preacher, for he says in a letter addressed to Bishop George, dated Camden, June 16, 1818, that he had served the Church nearly four years a single man, and thirteen years since he was married, having filled three Stations in Maryland, three in Pennsylvania, and eight in New Jersey, while belonging to the Philadelphia Conference; and expressed a desire to live and die in the work of the ministry. His whole heart was in the work even till his death: no news seemed so pleasing to him as that of the revival of religion. He was while in his prime not only deeply engaged and very pious, but possessed a good share of originality; and in his pulpit productions there was a commingled fervency and pathos that carried conviction to many of his hearers and comfort to the mourning soul.

In a short diary left, he speaks of filling his appointments, of the manifestations of divine power, and often expressed himself as longing for all the fullness of God. In his family, he presided with that patriarchal dignity that should dictate a man of God, and this continued until death. His family sought with avidity the counsel of their father, and that which was his will, was their pleasure.

His mind became agitated upon the subject of Church reform, and with a prayerful heart did he seek the Divine direction, and, after mature deliberation, he withdrew from the M. Episcopal Church. His withdrawal is dated April 19th, 1821; 'without many words,' he says, 'to obey his Supreme Master and answer for himself, he thus acts, respectfully addressing the Conference he had formerly been a member of.' After his withdrawal from the Conference, he continued his labors in connexion with the ministry of the M. Episcopal Church, until the excitement arose in Baltimore and other places; and at the first State Conference of New York, which met at Sullivan Street Church, June 27th, 1827, father Ireland was a member, and appointed to Pitt st. as minister in charge. It is presumable that he joined the M. Society earlier, perhaps as early as 1826. When the Methodist Protestant Church was formed he became a member thereof, by virtue of his connexion with the M. Society.—The subsequent history is not in my hands until June 8th, 1832, when he was received into the Vermont Annual Conference, by their President, Rev. J. Byington, and appointed to a Mission, embraced in that section of country lying between Lansinburgh and Greenville Circuit, and between the Hudsen river and the Green mountains. He was afterwards President of the Vermont District, and labored as Conference Missionary, &c.. until 1837. He was received into the Genessee Conference by Rev. N. Bort, President, and appointed Assistant on Onondaga Ct., where he labored till Conference in 1838, when he was recommended to the Conference held at Honeoye. I suppose he was here received.

It may be, the last of the above statistics is incorrect, but in the main I have papers to the above effect. It was in 1840 that the writer first saw our father in the Gospel, at the Conference at Pine Hill, Genessee Co., New York; and he has ever attended the sessions of the Conference, excepting the last, when he was prevented by sickness. For one year in the above time he served as President, and has acted as Conference Missionary; since, with the infirmities of age and pressing duties at home, he could not attend to ministerial duties as he wished: but still that undying desire to travel and preach continued until the hour of his death.

A while before our last Conference he was taken with a bilious attack, from which he never fully recovered; although for a time he gained, and we fondly hoped he might be again restored to health, but it has otherwise proved. His disease assumed an acute type, and baffled the skill of those physicians that attend upon him. Nature gradually gave way, till Sunday morning, the 20th ult., when he calmly breated his last; without a struggle or a groan he closed his own eyes and folded his own hands, and passed to a land of rest. He bade all an affectionate farewell, nor was he ever heard to complain of his lot: and now he sleeps with his fathers.

REFLECTIONS.

In the life and death of father Ireland, we see manifested most beautifully those characteristics of a soul entirely devoted to the work and worship of God. Deeply did he feel for a world of sinners: deeply did he sympathise with the afflicted; ardently was he attached to the cause of equal and mutual rights. Oh, may the mantle of that dear father in Israel fall upon some young servant of Christ! Let me die the death of the righteous! Even "so mote it be!"

His funeral sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Nutting, of the M. E. C. His remains are deposited in Greenwood Cemetery, at Lyons, New York, to await the shrill trump that shall call the world to judgment. May we be prepared.

O. C. PAYNE.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By Telegraphic Dispatch, our neighbor of the Zanesville Courier has intelligence that the steamer Hibernia arrived at Boston on Monday last, having left Liverpool on the 25th ult. The following is an abstract of the news by this arrival:

Lombardy.

The people of Lombardy, putting little faith in the Emperor's promises, have revolted at Milan. A combat took place between the citizens and the military. The citizens erected barricades. Under the lead of the Viceroy, the Austrian troops attacked them, but were entirely defeated.

Bavaria.

The old King has abdicated his throne. A fatal tumult occurred at Munich, in which the students and tradesmen joined the police.

Ireland.

At Dublin, the monster meeting on the 20th passed off quietly. It adopted an address to France, and a petiton to the Queen for a Repeal of the Union. On the 21st Smith O'Brien, Mitchell and Meagher were arrested by Government on the charge of sedition, and were put under heavy bonds to abide their trial in April. This affair caused great excitement.

France.

The financial measures of Garnier Pages were generally approved. The Bank of Rouen had suspended. A permanent guard was offered to the Rothschilds, but they declined it. All Russian and English workmen have been ordered out of France. The French Bank discounts were operating well, and rendering great commercial assistance. The price of bread was reduced at Paris.

Germany.

There is great excitement throughout Poland. If this nation rises, France will interfere. A Republic has been declared at Cracow. Four hundred political prisoners were released, and fifteen hundred insurgents were armed. Republican principles were steadily advancing throughout Germany, Holland, and Denmark. Great military preparations were making in Russia, but no outbreaks had occurred. The movement in Germany relieves Europe from the apprehension generally felt, of War, since no despot remains powerful enough to crush France for presenting a dangerous example. In Hungary, a ministry had been granted to rule over the whole country. A state of great enthusiasm existed, the people showing a great sense of forbearance. There was an uninterrupted fulfilment of monetary mercantile operations.

Prussia.

All was quiet at Berlin, up to the 22d. The King's concessions were received with universal enthusiasm. A general amnesty had been granted for political offences. Camphausen, a celebrated liberal Deputy had been appointed one of the Ministers.

Miscellaneous.

Scotland and England were quiet. The Pope has published a constitution for his States. Portugal and Spain were quiet. At Havre every house was suspended, and no business was doing.

Liverpool March, 24th.—In the corn market business was limited and prices unchanged. For Flour, 28s was the extreme price. For Corn the demand was limited; White was easier for buyers at 26s@27s, and Yellow 28s@480lbs. Political causes were occasioning an universal interruption of trade, creating distrust, and, during the last week, causing a limited demand. To-day the Cotton market has improved, and spinners bought at full prices. American qualities had declined during the week 1-8d. 600 bales American were taken on speculation and for export, and 1960 do. for export.

In manufactures matters looked gloomy. At Manchester, good yarns were offered at prices lower than were ever known before. Hundreds were out of employment, with no prospect for relief.

London.—American Provisions were in good demand. Bacon had advanced one or two shillings, and even more for a prime article. There were large arrivals of American.

News of the Week.

Terrible Accident.

A man, named Roberts, residing in Anderson township, met with a serious accident, yesterday morning, on the Madisonville road. The horse which he was riding, took fright, and in an attempt to check the animal up, the bridle reins broke, close to the bit, when the horse plunged over a bank, and rolled over and over, several yards, down into a ravine, one of Mr. R.'s feet being fast in the stirrup. The horse's fore legs were broken, (rendering it afterwards necessary to kill him) and Mr. R. received injuries from which it is feared he will never recover. One of his arms and a thigh bone were broken, his head fractured, and his ribs on the left side crushed in. When taken up, the thigh bone was protruding two or three inches, having forced its way through both the flesh and clothing.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A considerable portion of Little Miami Railroad track, leading from the city, has been already laid with T rail. It is to be extended on a double track to springfield.

The dead bodies of George and Jonathan Archer—father and son—were lately found in a field in Monmouth county, N. Y. Beside them were found two jugs, partly filled with whisky.—The verdict of the coroner's jury held over them was death from exposure while in a state of intoxication. This is another awful warning of the evil effects of intemperance.

A man named Crawford was a few days ago murdered in Harrison county, Ky., by one Buzzard, who, together with his wife, was arrested.

The death at the age of 72, of Capt. James Snake, an Indian Chief, and nephew of Tecumseh, is noticed in a letter of Rev. Richard Flood, Indian Missionary.

A western preacher observing one Sunday, that a considerable number of his congregation were crowding the outside seats, where a better opportunity afforded to stare, whisper, and disregard the solemn services, while the front seats were vacant—addressed them in the following eccentric style: "You have no doubt heard it remarked by farmers that the outside rows of corn in their fields was of but little value, the squirrels generally destroying them—so it may be with you on the outskirts there—the devil may come along when you are not aware, and grab some of you in the outer rows and destroy you, as the squirrels do the corn. Some of the young ladies are good looking, and wish to be considered respectable—and young men like to have a good name—therefore let me kindly invite you to come up among the good corn in the front rows, and you will be much more respected." The young ladies rushed to the front seats, and the young men soon followed. And the preacher had no difficulty afterwards.

Awful Accident.

On Friday afternoon last, three young men, of Fulton, above the city, lost their lives in the gale, while sailing on the river, by the capsizing of the boat. The boat was light and delicately built, and was ballasted with iron blooms, which were fastened down to the keel. When the boat capsized in the gust, it went immediately to the bottom, carried down by the weight of the iron which could not be displaced, in consequence of the fastenings, taking with it two of the young men, who, doubtless became entangled in the rigging. The other came to the surface, but perished before assistance could reach him. All three were drowned! Their names were Bell, Anderson and McKenzie.—Cin. Com.

Fatal Casualty.

A Mr. L. C. Wallace, a stranger in the city, was thrown from his horse, about 8 o'clock last evening, on East Front street, below Deer Creek bridge, and recived injuries which caused death a short time after the accident. He was returning from a visit to Newton, in company with two other persons. He is to be buried this afternoon from the residence of his brother on Catharine st.—Cin Com.

At a Loss for Society.—"Would you believe it, aunt?" exclaimed a pale-faced young lady of the "upper ten," "would you believe it? Uncle Solomon here, tells me that the young ladies out west actually speaks to the tradesmen and retail storekeepers! They must be badly in want of society, mustn't they?" "Humph! yes," interrupted Uncle Solomon. "They are as badly off for society, my dear, as your father was when he pulled radishes and asparagus for a living, and your mother sold them in the old Fly Market—ha, ha!—society, humph!" Miss Polly Dolly Adeline fainted.

Melancholy Accident.—By the fall of an arch on the 18th, at Wall's Bridge, near Columbus Geo., one man, Wesley Smith, was instantly killed, and ten others more or less wounded, two of whom are feared to be dangerously.

New French Minister.—As already corrected from the telegraph report, Mons. de Tracy is the new Minister appointed by the French Republic to the United States. He is a prominent member of the Chamber of Deputies, connected by marriage with the Lafayette family, and has always treated the Americans with marked civility particularly those bearing his name.

Morse's Electro-Magnetic Telegraph.—Posts all up!—We are now happy to announce that the posts are all erected from here to Nashville—thanks to the energy and enterprise of Mr. Watterson. Down Main street, the posts are 35 feet long, sawed out of cypress timber, and present a beautiful appearance. In the course of a few weeks, the wires will be put up and the line completed. Huzza for the Telegraph.—Memphis Appeal, 16th.

White Lead Factory.

We remarked some time ago that a company in Zanesville were about to engage in the manufacture of White Lead. We are able now to state that they are advancing rapidly in the work, and expect to have a thousand kegs in market by the middle of May.

The location of the establishment is adjoining the corporation line, in what is familiarly called 'The Northern Liberties,' where they have bought a lot of an acre and a half, very convenient to coal banks.

They have contracted with a citizen of Springfield township for 3000 stone ware pots of about six quart size, and their lead is expected in a few days, when the corroding process, with the first stack of 4000 crocks, will commence; and by the time that is completed, the steam machinery for grinding will be ready for operation. They design as soon as possible, to prepare fixtures also for the manufacture of Read Lead and Litharge. The name of this firm is Cooper & Case.

It might be a matter of curiosity to many of our readers to state the process by which the pure metal is converted to White Lead, Red Lead, &c. The story in its detail would be too long, but we may state in general terms that in order to produce the White Lead, the lead in its metalic state is procured in "pigs" as it is cast at the mines, and being melted, is cast into exceedingly thin plates or sheets, which are then rolled up and rolls placed in crocks, within which is an offset that prevents the roll from sinking to the bottom; and into the bottom, is poured a quantity of vinegar. The crocks are then piled in stacks of several thousands each, the layers or tiers of crocks being covered with boards and they again with manure. The whole pile being ultimately covered with manure, and left to heat by the natural process of fermentation. After several weeks the lead is found to be eaten up or corroded by the action of the acid. It is then taken out, purified, and ground for use.

What is usually called "No. 1" White Lead is adulterated with an earth called Barytes, which increases the bulk and weight, without adding to the value. Pure lead costs more, but will cover greater surface, and is really cheaper than the lower priced article.

Red Lead is prepared by melting the metal in ovens, and keeping it exposed in a melted state to the action of the atmosphere. It gradually absorbs the oxygen of the atmospere, loses its metalic lustre, and changes its color. Notwithstanding the waste in the process of the manufacture, the quantity of oxygen absorbed is so great, that the manufactured article weighs several per cent more than the raw lead used. While being oxydised the lead is kept constantly stirred. We shall take up the different preparations of lead on some future occasion, and enter into more full details. It is a subject of curious investigation.—Zanes. Gaz.

Alleviation from Cough.—Persons using stoves for warming apartments, will find that a small piece of common resin, slipped in the water which is placed in a vessel on the stove, will add a peculiar property to the asmosphere of the room, which will great relief to persons troubled with a cough, who breath the atmosphere of the apartment. The heat of the water is sufficient to throw off the aroma of the resin, and gives the same relief as is afforded by a combustion of the resin. It is preferable to combustion because the evaporation is more durable. The same resin may be used for weeks.—Journal of Commerce.

Commerce of Baltimore.—The arrivals at the port of Baltimore, during the month of March, have been as follows:—From foreign ports, 3 ships, 4 barques, 22 brigs, and 13 schooners—from coastwise ports, 3 brigs, 20 barques, 19 brigs and 51 schooners. Whole number 115—42 from foreign ports, and 73 coastwise; of this number 2 were Bremen, 2 British, and the balance, 111, American. During the Month of March there cleared at the Baltimore custom-house, for foreign ports, 60 vessels, viz:—9 ships, 12 barques, 21 brigs, and 18 schooners; of this number 5 were Bremen, 4 British, 1 French, and the balance, 50, Americans.

The Abolition of Slavery in the French Colonies.—The decree of the Provisional Govment abolishing slavery in all the colonies, is of great importance, not only in a moral but in a commercial point of view. It will have a great influence upon the supply of sugar, particularly from the French West Indies. Mr. Kettell gives some statistics on this point. The present French West Indies are the following:—

	Free population.	Slaves.	Total.
Martinique. -	40.000 -	117.502 -	157.502
Guadaloupe, -	32.059 - -	95 609 -	127 663
Guiana. - - - -	5,056 - -	16,592 - - -	6,643
Total, - - - - -	77,115 -	229,703 -	291,818

A law was passed in 1831 for the gradual emancipation of the slaves, and the number has reduced about 1 590 per annum. The productions of these Islands are as follows:

	Sugar and Molasses, lbs.	Coffee, lbs.
Martinique, - -	56,052.263 - - -	1.142.915
Guadaloupe, -	85 650.338 - - -	2,013,779
Guiana, - - - - -	5,939,321 - - - - -	41,064
Total lbs.	157,692,022 - - -	3,198,458

This produce all goes to France, and the government derived last year 37,122,000 francs, say $7,000,000, from the duty on the sugar. The consumption of Great Britain in 1847, as compared with 1844, was as follows:

	1844.	1847.	Increase.
Sugar, lbs	496,571,512.	732,452,962.	235,881,450

The influence of this measure must be great.

Fire and Loss of Life.—The family of Mr. Franklin Gallup, of Poquannoc, (Conn.,) were aroused on the night of Friday last, by discovering that their dwelling was on fire. Such as escaped did so through the windows of the upper story. A little girl about six years, old, perished in the flames, and two others were badly burned.

Immigrants.—2,968 immigrants arrived in N. York on Monday. The whole number in March was 4,396.

The old Cotton Mill of the Amoskeag Company at Goffstown, N. H., was burned on Thursday last, loss $50,000.

Navigation open to Buffalo.—We learn by telegraph that the steamer United States arrived safely at Buffalo on Saturday night from Cleveland.

Three Faults of Nurses.—1. To lisp in a baby style, when the same words, in an endearing tone would please as well; the reverse should be—the voice clear, emphatic, and each syllable distinctly articulated for imitation.

2, To tell of witches, ghosts and goblins; such superstitions, impressed upon young minds, are rarely got rid of.

3. To direct a child to act like a man; whereas it is not often becoming for a little boy to ape the man, but only to conform his demeanor to his age: every age has its own peculiar decorousness.

Reminiscence of J. Q. Adams.

May it please your Honors: On the 7th of February, 1804, now more than thirty-seven years past, my name was entered, and yet stands recorded on both the rolls, as one of the attorneys and counsellors of this Court. Five years later, in February and March, 1809, I appeared for the last time before this Court, in defence of the cause of justice, and of imporant rights, in which many of my fellow-citizens had property to a large amount at stake. Very shortly afterwards, I was called to the discharge of other duties; first in distant lands, and in later years, within our own country, but in different departments of her Government. Little did I imagine that I should ever be required to claim the right of appearing in the capacity of an officer of this Court. Yet such has been the dictate of my destiny; and I appear again to plead the cause of justice, and now of liberty and life, in behalf of many of my fellow-men, before that same Court, which, in a former age, I had addressed in support of rights of property. I stand again, I trust for the last time, before the same Court, "hic cæstus artemque repono." I stand before the same Court, but not before the same judges, nor aided by the same associates, nor resisted by the same opponents. As I cast my eye along those seats of honor and of public trust, now occupied by you, they seek in vain for one of those honored and honorable persons whose indulgence listened then to my voice. Marshall, Cushing, Case, Washington, Johnson, Livingston, Todd; where are they? Where is that eloquent statesman and learned lawyer who was my associate counsel in the management of that cause—Robert Goodloe Harper? Where is that brilliant luminary, so long the pride of Maryland and of the American bar, then my opposing counsel—Luther Martin? Where is the excellent clerk of that day, whose name has been inscribed on the shores of Africa, as a monument of his abhorrence to the slave trade—Elias B. Caldwell? Where is the marshal? Where are the criers of the Court? Alas! where is one of the very judges of the Court, arbiters of life or death, before whom I commenced this anxious argument?—Gone!—gone from a world of sin and sorrow, I trust—to that blest abode, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest." And it is my ardent wish, and fervent prayer, that each and every one of you, may go to his final account with as little of earthly frailty to answer for, as those illustrious dead; and that you may every one, after the close of a long and virtuous career in this world, be received at the portals of the next with the approving sentence: "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of thy Lord."

The Governor of Vermont has appointed the 7th of April to be observed as a day of public humiliation fasting and prayer.

Sudden Death.—Isaac Baugher, Esq., aged sixty two, lately a merchant at Emmetsburg, Md died very suddenly at Frederick, Md., on Sunday of apoplexy.

Fatal Accident.—The son of Mr Smith, residing about four miles from Smithburg, Md., was killed by the falling of a tree on Wednesday of last week.

Emigrants.—The tide of emigration has commenced flowing into Philadelphia. The ship Helen McGaw, with 164 passengers, and ship Caledonia Brander, with 115 passengers, have arrived. The ship John Dunlap, from Liverpool, and the barque Creole, from Londonderry, both passenger ships, are on their way up to the city.

Fire at Madison, (Ind.)—The steam flouring mill belonging to Messrs. I. White & Co., at Madison, Indiana, was destroyed by fire on Saturday night, recently. Eight hundred barrels of flour, four hundred bushels of wheat, and three hundred barrels of kiln-dried corn meal were destroyed. Loss $28,000, of which $18,000 is covered by insurance.

Powder Mill Explosion.—The powder mill of Laffin & Smith, in the town of Saugerties, Ulster county, was blown up, on Monday last.—One man, John Frederick, was instantly killed, and another severely injured. Loss about four hundred dollars.

Explosion.—The boiler of the locomotive Dr. R. Porter, fearfully exploded at the depot at Gaysport, Pa., on Saturday, dangerously scalding the engineer, John Wagner.

Explosion at Cumberland.—The Cumberland Mountaineer gives the following particulars of the explosion of the powder mill at that place on Sunday night last:

"Some villain or villains set fire to the powder house belonging to Thomas Shriver, Esq., which caused a tremendous explosion and great damage of property in this place on Sunday night last.—The Methodist and Catholic churches received great injury in the way of window sash and glass; the dwelling house of Mrs. M. C. Sprigg was much damaged; the Presbyterian church had six large glass globes, belonging to the chandeliers, broken to atoms; and we have learned that a number of other buildings suffered considerably from the explosion.

"The mayor and council have offered two hundred and fifty dollars reward for the apprehension of the incendiaries."

Destructive Fire at N. York.—Two Lives Lost.—There was a very large fire in New York City on Sunday morning, which originated about 4½ oclock, in the upper stories of the extensive sugar-refinery of Dennis Harris, No. 144 Duane street. It made very rapid progress, and before it could be extinguished, entirely destroyed the sugar-refinery, with its contents.

The flames communicated to the foundery and machine shop of Charles Lewis, in the rear of Nos. 106 and 108 Reade street, which was almost entirely destroyed, together with its contents.

The fire also communicated to the dwelling-house, No. 136 Duane street, occupied by Mrs. Myers, the roof and upper story of which were destroyed. Her loss is estimated at from $800 to $1,000, upon which there was no insurance.

The safe was found yesterday evening, with all the books and $300, in a state of preservation.

About an hour after the fire commenced, a portion of the front wall of the sugar-refinery gave way and fell outwards, falling upon and causing the death of two firemen—Assistant Engineer George Kerr and Henry T. Fargis, who was Assistant Foreman of Engine Company No. 33.—Fargis had his skull fractured, besides receiving other injuries, and was insensible when taken up, and died in half an hour after being taken to the City Hospital. Kerr had his legs and his shoulders both fractured, besides receiving severe internal injuries, and lived but a short time after being conveyed to the Hospital.

The Oberlin Evangelist.

An Extra from the "Executive Committee of the Evangelist Association," issued from Cleveland, appeals earnestly to the friends of this paper, and of Mr. Fitch, the publisher, for pecuniary aid to relieve both it and him from the distressing destitution in which the late conflagration at Oberlin has left them. Mr. Fitch's loss is very severe—his printing office, book store and dwelling house, with all their contents, entirely consumed, and his family narrowly escaping (barefoot and half-clad) with their lives.—With the exception of a few articles of furniture snatched from the flames, it was a clear sweep. Such a perfect destitution, produced in one sad hour,—the family stripped of house, furniture, bedding, and even covering for their bodies—the printer left without type, fixtures or a ream of paper—the bookseller's stock all annihilated—is a calamity which must be experienced to be adequately understood.

Mr. Fitch's insurance, which was very partial ($2,660) will be more than exhausted by his debts, which amount to $2,700, leaving him literally penniless. His case has strong claims on Christian benevolence. From personal acquaintance, we know the man to be eminently worthy of aid in such an exigency. Whatever enterprize and energy can effect, he will accomplish. But enterprise and energy, like the lever of Archimedes, want a solid fulcrum to base their efforts upon. The needful, we are sure, will not be denied him in this case. His friends and the friends of his paper are numerous and extensive. Let them come up promptly and unitedly to his aid, and they can easily make good his loss.—Something can and will be done in this city and vicinity. Mr. Fitch is now in the city, nothing daunted by his severe loss, to provide the necessaries for resuming business.

The above remarks are entirely spontaneous on our part, without any suggestion or request from the sufferer or his friends.—Watchman of the Valley.

Mission to Mexico.—Mr. Clifford, with Mr. Walsh, the Secretary of the Commission, reached New Orleans on the 26th ult., and started to Vera Cruz the following day in the propeller Massachusetts.

Mr. Sevier passed through Montgomery, Ala., on the 28th ult.

Government Finances.—It is said that the Secretary of the Treasury will advertise for the $16,000,000 loan, just authorized by Congress, in Europe as well as at home. Reports are current that offers have been made for the whole of the sum wanted, by foreign capitalists or bankers.

Formation of Coal.—The Richmond Va. Enquirer notices an interesting circumstance of the conversion of wood into coal, it may be said under the eye of the observer. In the excavations made some time since on Council Chamber Hill, a large piece of wood in a state of decay was dug up. It was very soft, yet the bark and textures and the perforation of worms were distinctly visible. It was presented to the Medical College, and while lying upon the table in the cabinet of the Institute, it has been converted by a natural process into coal. It gradually becomes hard, unyielding, and brittle, having a "fracture" and lustre like that of coal. It cannot be easily distinguished from the ordinary coal of the mines, and burns with a brilliant flame like the famous canal coal.

The Railroad in the north of Holland is now in the progress of construction.

Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad:—A letter by telegraph from J. A. Harris, Esq., editor of the Cleveland Herald, informs us that the city of Cleveland has voted one hundred thousand dollars subscription to the Cleveland & Pittsburgh railroad with hardly a dissenting voice.

The Ohio Cultivator of the 15th, says that the Wheat crop in the middle and northern portions of the State continues to appear healthy. The dry weather has thus far prevented the "heaving out" so common at this season of the year.

Lithotomy.—Dr. Dickson, of this city, last week performed this operation upon a child four years old. The stone removed was 3⅜ inches, by 2⅝ in. in circumference. The youthful patient was bro't from Iowa, and, by the last accounts is doing well. The operation occupied about three minutes.—Pitts. Gaz.

Canal Lettings.—Forty miles of the Wabash and Erie Canal, in Indiana, are advertised to be let at Terre Haute, on the 24th of May next, in sections of half a mile in length. The work well deserves the attention of contractors and laborers The Commissioners who advertise these lettings, have about 800,000 acres of land for sale near the line of the Canal, at low rates. Emigrants and laborers, by forming associations, might safely contract for sections of the Canal, and place their families at once on tracts of good land, to be opened as their labor is paying for it We are not aware of so good an opportnity, for an industrious man to seule himself upon land of his own, as this affords. Canal boats now leave this city daily for Lafayette, and the line of Canal, labor is much needed on the Canal, and those seeking employment on canals, with certain pay, may find it at Lafayette, without loss of time.—Cincinnati Atlas.

There has been a land-slide on Mount Adams, a hill which overlooks Cincinnati. In excavating the side of the hill for the purpose of procuring stone, the earth and refuse stone were thrown aside. It was this portion of the hill which gave way, breaking into a few houses and causing a good deal of consternation. The Cincinnati Gazette, of the 8th, says—

"The slip was very gradual. Its commencement was first observed on Wednesday evening last, but it was so light as to cause no alarm. It continued a little on Thursday, and Friday evening had moved about forty feet. It then received greater impulse, and on Saturday is represented to us by the persons who lived in the house endangered, as moving at the rate of about a foot an hour. The width of the surface that slid is about seventy-five feet at the bottom, and one hundred at the top, and narrow in the middle."

The Telegraph Wires.—The public will be gratified to learn there is a prospect that the wires will be brought across the river this week. Two tall masts have been erected, each about 175 feet high, one on the bank of the river, in the water work- lot, and the other on Bloody Island, opposite. The span at this place is considerably less than where the original attept was made to carry it over the river. During this week, it is expect the operator will be at work on this side.—Mo. Rep.

An old Jersey matron—the widow of Joseph Newman, of revolutionary memory—died the other day in Monmouth county, leaving 9 children, 91 grand children, and 93 great grand children—making 173 decendants.

Br. J. Nichols, all right. Much obliged.

We are informed that N. Nunnamaker, Vienna, Ja., long ago paid $2, for us to B. Wilson. Wonder if Br. W. has not had our money long enough.

Br. W. M Edwards, we have sent the looking numbers as requested to your present address, Hebron, Ga., tho'. they had all been sent before as you previously desired us.

Br. J. Jack; we have sent the missing numbers to G. R.

Our List.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of these brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encourging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	17
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chaneyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	8

Rev. R. M. Dalbey, Bethel, O.	5
Rev. O. P. Stephens, Catawba, O.	6
Rev. C. H. Williams, Bournville, O.	5

☞ We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

The Christian Wreath

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS.—The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year, for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,00. The volume begins with January.

☞ All orders must be accompanied by the MONEY, post paid, to insure attention.

The Christian Soldier's Song.

The war in which the soldier fights,
Is not the war for me;
By it are crushed all fond delights,
And sadness there I see:
But there's a war of holy strife,
By which is gained a blissful life,
Through all eternity;
O, that's the war for me.

The sword the crested warrior wields
Is not the sword for me—
While marching over tended fields,
To death or victory:
But there's a sword that pierces deep,
That often makes the sinner weep,
And to the Savior flee;
O, that's the sword for me.

The fame that's gained by men of blood
Is not the fame for me—
By drenching earth in gory flood
Of friend and enemy:
But O, the fame—the glory bright
The Christian soldier has in sight,
As onward marches he!
O, that's the fame for me.

The wreath that binds the victor's brow,
Is not the wreath for me;
For, to receive it who would bow,
Save that through pride it be?
But there's a wreath—a shining crown—
For him who gains—O, great renown!—
O'er sin the victory:
O, that's the wreath for me. R. N. M.

The Restrictive Rule--Per Contra.

NO. II.

We propose, Mr. Editor, in the first place to pay our particular respects to "Prudentia." And as we think it rather unfair to be required to fight men in the bushes, we shall bring our friend from his concealment. We have good reasons for believing that "Prudentia" is the Rev. Washington Maynard. We will not, however, positively say this is the fact; but if mistaken he will be so good as to correct us; and, if he do not we shall take it for granted that we are right in this matter.

Before we proceed, a word as to his signature. "Prudentia" is a Latin term, and means "wisdom applied to practice." "Prudentce, French—Prudens, Latin; practically wise. Foreseeing by natural instinct." See Todd's Johnson, Boston Ed. 1830. When a man uses a title he generally means something by it. What our friend means by styling himself "Prudentia," if he mean any thing at all, may be seen in the above definitions. He certainly would have his readers understand that he is "practically a wise man"—that he "foresees by natural instinct" that the "Restrictive Rule" is a "senseless" thing. Pretty high assumption this for a beardless boy, yet, no doubt, a very fair exponent of the emotions strugling within.

Now for the argument: Speaking of the duty of man to carry into effect the spread of the gospel. he says:

"That the same direction will at all times be the most efficient may not be true. Different times and different countries may afford a field for a variety of methods. Therefore, the church, in this particular, may be left to be governed by circumstances."

This sentence contains a striking truth, and is a very important admission in this controversy. It will save the trouble of proving there is no scriptural barrier in the way of the "Restrictive Rule." Indeed, it is not likely that, that God who generally makes use of the instrumentality of natural causes, to carry on his great purposes in relation to man's redemption, would tie down the ministry to any set of rules, in spreading the truths of religion, without reference to their utility; consequently the gospel contains but a very few fundamental laws, and where these do not bind, the church is left to vary her modus operandi to suit the usages, tastes and peculiarities of those nations, languages and people whither the word of life may be sent.

Our author proceeds:—"Modern churches have adopted various methods by which to give success to the ministry. What method is best adapted to this end should be a matter of constant inquiry, until discovered, and then be at once adopted. If an itinerant ministry it should be adopted. If a settled pastoral, it should be adopted. If an itinerancy, untrammeled and narrowed not down by Restrictive Rules, but left free to move on according to the openings of Divine Providence, it should be adopted."

Here we are brought directly into the heart of this controversy. The above admission, with this quotation places the whole question, on the ground of expediency; precisely where it ought to be placed. If, then, we can prove that the itinerancy with its "Restrictive Rule," is the most efficient method of spreading the gospel, this puts the question at once to rest; after which it will be unavailing to appeal to Apostolic usage. There is no one knows but Paul, who pursued one course at Rome, owing to different circumstances, would have adopted a different practice in America. He who became all things to all men, where no fundamental principle is concerned, would, no doubt, have went for itinerancy, with all its "restrictions," if that would but have promoted the cause of the Redeemer.

It now becomes a consideration of some importance, to know, by what mode of argument this question is to be settled. There are two methods which can be employed in this investigation. The first is abstract or speculative reasoning; the second, is, reasonings drawn from matters of fact. By the former method the world has been greatly humbugged in all its generations. And abstract speculations are pecaliarly adapted to the taste of young, inexperienced and undisciplined minds. Such delight to revel in the wild regions of fancy, and to gather those airy arguments which are more attractive to them than the very pillars in the temple of truth itself. And when the mind once becomes attached to the speculative, or hypothetical mode of investigation—in other words to castle building, it is very little use to reason with it. The only method left to sober and regulate it, is blistering. If, therefore, this question is to be determined by this kind of reasoning we will yield the plan to the boys, because, like Goldsmith's School Master;

Even tho' vanquished they can argue still.

But, if sober experience, or matters of fact are to settle the controversy, we have no fears as to the issue.

We then call attention to the English Wesleyan Methodists, and the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States. These have itinerancies more "restricted" and rigid than our own. Well, have they prospered, with their "restrictions?" Ah! boys look at that question. The Methodists, with their itinerant operations, have made a greater impression upon this generation, than all the churches in the land put together. They have not only been instrumental in calling thousands, and hundreds of thousands from the "gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity," but they have been the means of reforming every religious fellowship in the country. If the boys were only old enough to look back upon the state of the churches, on the rise of Methodism, and to contrast the past with the present, they would be astounded at the change. Then, one class of Parsons could get intoxicated, occasionally, without any prejudice to their standing; another class could look on, with approbation, while the youth of their congregations were fidling and dancing, while the whole treated the effects of practical religion upon the mind as the rankest enthusiasm. But, O! how changed! And changed too mainly by the instrumentality of a church, who, without an itineracy would have made but a feeble essay upon the world. "Prudentia" says it should be matter of "constant inquiry" as to the "best mode of giving success to the gospel ministry." Now if he be not capable of determining this from the facts around him, he has lived to very little purpose, and betrays a mind incapable of improving from the history of his age. The subject does not need "inquiry," all it wants is to open your eyes and see.

But it will be responded to all this, we do not wish the itinerancy destroyed, we only want it modified, by removing the restrictive rule, so that it may be "left free to move on according to the openings of Providence;" or in other words that a preacher may be permitted to stay in a place just as long as he and the people can strike a bargain.

We reply to this in general terms, first; that the old "restrictive" system has worked admirably well, and any man of practical good sense is generally disposed to let well enough alone. Secondly, this new proposition has in no instance been acted on. It is all theory; just such as is calculated to strike with force a speculative and visionary mind. In our next we shall endeavor to shew some of the evil bearings of this new scheme.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

Meadow Farm, O., March 21st, 1848.

P. S. Since writing the above we see another able pen, employed, in defence of the "Restrictive Rule." Had we seen this, first, we might not have troubled the reader with our remarks. But, we thought, as the boys could not obtain popularity, and were in consequence endeavoring to seek notoriety, we would try and gratify them a litule. But, as it is, we shall endeavor to close in our next.

N. B.—Several typographical errors occurred in the publication of our previous number. In the first paragraph read "stand on the background," instead of staid, &c. In second paragraph read "ecclesiastical economy," instead of accuracy. In the third paragraph read, "the declaration of Paul," instead of "the rule." A little below, for "their cause," read "their course." In the fifth paragraph read "map of the Universe,' instead of "mass," &c. In the last par. but one, read, "But whether the pleasantry," &c., instead of "pleasantly."

God's Promise to Provide for his Ministers.

But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.—MAT. vi: 33.

1st. What is meant by "Seek ye the kingdom of God?" It is to rely on the "promise of God, "Seek and ye shall find" an entrance into the kingdom of grace, by the "door Christ," thro' faith in him, in order to justification; and repentance for conversion. "Ask"—is to pray; seek—by faith; knock—implies earnestness.—Mat. vii: 7. Kingdom of God is at hand.—Mark, i: 15. "Come."—Mat. xii: 28. Except a man be born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John, iii: 5. "I am the door."—John, x: 9. Justified by faith.—Rom. v: 1. "Repent and be converted."—Acts, iii: 19. This is the first and all-important step that the minister be a truly converted man, for how can he teach others unless himself be in the light? For if the blind lead the blind they both will fall into the ditch.

2d. And what is meant by seeking God's righteousness? It is to seek to know all that God would have him to do. And then strive with all his might to do it; even to the cutting off a "right hand or eye." His righteousness.—Rom. iii: 26. Worketh righteousness.—Acts, x: 35. He that doeth righteousness is righteous even as God is righteous.—1 John, iii: 7. Good works or right works. After conversion, living in the filial fear of God and discharging every Christian duty, is God's righteousness. And as a minister he must forsake all and follow Christ.

3d. And in the third place, All these things shall be added unto him. 1st. God's promise to provide such as food, drink, and raiment. Even taught to take no thought for these things.—v. 31. Because your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.—32. For the Almighty has promised "All these things shall be added unto you." And even take no thought for to-morrow.—verse 34. "O ye of litule faith."—verse 30. The Disciple is forbidden to lay up treasures upon the earth.—20. Is the minister satisfied to be as was his Master who had not where to lay his head? Oh no, many wish to have a farm or treasure laid up for time to come, for the morrow. And instead of praying "Give us this day our daily bread," many say "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry."

2d. The primitive church had all their property in common. No one lacked on this score, for they sold their possessions and imparted to every one as they had need.—Acts, ii: 44—47. They were truly religious and honest-hearted then. They went from house to house breaking bread, praising God, giving thanks to God continually. What love, union, spirit, life and brotherly fellowship there was among them.—Acts, iv: 32—35. This state of things might have remained until this day had not some walked disorderly, working not all, but were busybodies. For this was commanded among them if they would not work, neither should they eat.—2 Thess. iii: 10—12.

3d. Let us see what the Scriptures say.—Christ taught that the laborer is worthy of his hire.—Luke, x: 7. Paul the same. The laborer is worthy of his reward.—1 Tim. v: 18.—And even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.—1 Cor. ix: 14. Here lies one grand difficulty, some are not willing to preach and only have their living—but wish more. Food and raiment are promised—but "Gold and silver Peter said have I none."—Acts, iii: 6, &c. The preacher's salary is not fixed in number of dollars and cents, but a living is promised. He is promised now an hundred-fold in this time or world—and in the world to come eternal life.—Mark, x: 29—30. This may mean all the comforts of life temporal and spiritual or with a soul full of glory and of God, joy and power in the Holy Ghost.

4th. How this living was to be obtained.—The Lord Jesus said it is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts, xx: 34—35. God loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Cor. ix: 7. See Phil. iv: 15, concerning giving and receiving. "Alms in secret."—Mat. vi: 4. Widow's mite.—Mark, xii: 41—44. When I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel without charge.—1 Cor. ix: 18. The conclusion we most readily arrive at is that the gospel was to be supported by the free gifts of the people and that without charge. The natural conclusion is that if the minister fulfils on his part God will put it in the hearts of the people to obey on their part. So may it be. Let it so be then that the stewards and leaders see punctually to it, that each one may have opportunities presented to them especially to those whose duty it is to minister in carnal things.—Rom. xv: 27. That have received spiritual food from the word.—1 Cor. xvi: 1. Subscriptions, or by calling or visiting from house to house for that purpose, and many more will give than now do, and the ministry will be sustained and more able laborers would enter the itinerant field, the work would be enlarged, and Christianity revived.

5th. The reward of the giver should not be lost sight of here. For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you he shall not lose his reward—Mark. ix: 41. Jesus said "it was blessed to give." And that God loveth the cheerful giver. God loves and blesses men more or less in this life for acts of charity and kindness toward each other. Blessed with a consciousness of having done good, the things will not merit heaven, but will often lead the wicked to thoughtfulness on the great subject of religion.

Yours, in the bonds of a peaceful gospel,

J. B. FRISBIE.

BR. BASSETT:

I think it very cruel in my friend "Homo" (alias Mr. Kemble) who professes to be a regular built Doctor, to deal out his doses in just sufficient quantities to protract my disease, and accomplish nothing in the way of either killing or curing. Now if I must die, and am allowed a choice as to the manner, I say, let me die at once. And if this said Doctor had examined the condition of his patient a little more scientifically, he might have discovered, that one dose which he had at command would have been sufficient to have destroyed my name and influence and arguments so effectively, that neither he nor any of his craft would ever have desired my mortal remains for anatomical investigation. To accomplish this it would have been necessary only to have published in his first article, in connexion with the names of Brown, Reeves, and Springer, the name of Doctor Kemble, with an epitome of his renowned Biography.

As counsel is necessary in desperate cases. The above is generously tendered by

JOSEPH BURNS.

THE DEAD OF 1848.—The year which closed yesterday, and which with the Ancients was regarded as the end of the natural year, the Sun having entered its vernal equinox, equalizing the duration of the day and night, has been rendered memorable by the death of an unusual number of eminent Americans, among whom the names of Silas Wright, James Kent, John Quincy Adams, Ambrose Spencer, and Henry Wheaton, occur to all. Judge Wilde, of Georgia, a ripe scholar and distinguished Classical Poet; and Cole, the beautiful Landscape Painter, with several distinguished Divines, Jurists Physicians, &c. might be added.—Albany Evening Journal of the 22nd.

A cotton factory has just gone into operation at Fredericksburg, Va., with 1,054 spindles, which will give employment to thirty operatives.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Single Eye.

I was driving a spirited team in a new road. It was on the bank a beautiful river. On the opposite shore was a young settlement and a stirring population. I heard the rattling of machinery, and the roar of the waterfall. In a nearly opposite direction was a large cottage which a wealthy Englishman had erected just on the margin of the forest. The beautiful and the useful in art were side by side with the wild and grand in nature. I stood up in my waggon and gazed with delight in these different directions, forgetting that I was in a wood side road, until a sudden bound of a wheel that had struck a stump, threw me forward under the horses' feet. A sleepless and merciful Providence saved me from imminent danger. There could have been no harm in viewing and admiring the things of interest around me, in proper circumstances and a proper time. But at this time I had other things in hand—horses to drive and stumps and trees to shun. I needed to have my eyes singly on my business.

It is often so in the pilgrim's journey through life. There are unnumbered things to admire by the way, and at a suitable time and place he may enjoy them. But much of his journey is in a new road, where there is constant need of watchfulness, lest he should be cast down and suffer spiritual detriment. Many fail of making good and safe progress in the way of life because they do not keep their eye steadily on it. They gaze listlessly on indifferent objects, or with unholy desire upon objects of worldly good to the neglect of the great object which should ever be distinctly before the eye of the believer. In seeking their own pleasure or worldly interest, they forget their spiritual affairs and the glory of God.

I have seen a young person set forward with a professed determination to follow Christ. But she did not keep her eye steadily fixed on him. The way was new to her. Instead of looking to see what dangers might be in it, she allowed her eye to wander among the gay and thoughtless companions of her impenitent life. Perhaps she desired to participate in their pleasures, and at the same time to go on toward heaven. She was one evening in the prayer-room, and the next evening at the dance. At one time you would find her reading the Bible, and at another weeping over a romance. I will not say—I need not how things terminated with her. There are many going the same way.

On every side of us, we see men who profess to be walking in the strait and narrow way, who at the same time have their attention on the world far more than any other object. Occasionally they glance at the cross, and seem to have a momentary relenting for their wanderings. But soon their eyes rove again in quest of some earthly good. They are not satisfied with having all in Christ. They do not look perseveringly and steadily unto Jesus.—They are double minded and unstable in all their ways. They waver, and like a wave of the sea are driven and tossed, and therefore they cannot receive anything of the Lord. It is all vain. Christ is not to be so served. They who would be his servants indeed, must have a fixed and unalterable purpose of heart to make his glory ever supreme. Wavering and wandering, hesitating and halting, are departures from this purpose. Christ-serving and world-serving cannot go together. He who would so run, in the heavenly race, as to obtain, must keep his eye steadily on the prize set before him. The value of that prize must be so great in his estimation that nothing earthly can divert attention from it. It must be more precious to him than silver and gold, or he can never obtain it.—N. Y. Evangelist.

The Secret of Dying Gladly.

Believers, behold here the secret of dying gladly! "These all died in faith," Heb. xi. 13. Bad men die reluctantly: life is extorted from them as if by main force. The believer dies willingly: his will is sweetly submitted to his Father's will: he makes it a religious act to die. Just as Jesus himself commended his human soul to his Father, saying, "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit," Luke xxiii. 46; so his believing disciple commends his soul to Jesus, and through him to the Father. Here I repeat, is the secret how to die happily. To those who know not that secret, it is a fearful thing to die. It is a serious matter to any. But to the worldly minded and ungodly, if not past feeling, to die must be as one of the heathen philosophers (Aristotle) confessed it, "of all formidable things the most formidable." Only mention a neighbor's death in a gay circle: lo! you have thrown a gloom over the whole assembly; all are evidently sorry that the topic was introduced. The ancient Romans would not mention death in plain words, if they could avoid it, but only by circumlocution and implication. The heathens, at this day, in like manner, "shun all conversation on death, as most repugnant to their feelings;" I quote the words of an eye witness: "they account it the height of cruelty to speak of the probability of a sick friend's death even to his relatives."—Even serious christians are often in bondage thro' fear of death.

It is such a venture; a mistake may be so fatal; to go before God is so awful; judgment will bring to light such secrets; that many think, How can I die? Yet you all must. Be persuaded, give your soul to Jesus now; do it again from day to day: and then, when your dying day is come, again approach the Saviour, and say, "Lord I hear thee calling for my spirit; I see the wagons sent to fetch me home to thee; in the hand of death I recognise thy hand of love; thou askest for my soul; take it, for it is thine. Do with it what thou wilt, I have given it to thee to be washed in thy blood, and sanctified by the spirit; I am sure thou wilt do it no harm."

Does a thought here arise, and what shall become of my poor body? Why, even if like Stephen's, it were battered and bruised with stones murderously hurled, even though it were burned at a stake, or tortured on a rack, you need not mind; look but that the soul be safe: and then, whatever may become of the body, Jesus will take care of thy dust and ashes. The remains of his faithful servants are to him the most precious parts of this material earth. They form a pledge of his final coming. For if your souls are truly his, he will hereafter raise up your bodies glorious, incorruptible, immortal like unto his own. Phil. iii. 21.—Hambleton.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—We learn from the New Orleans papers that, on the 17th instant, an unfortunate accident occured on the lake on Thursday, by which Mr. R. J. Lines, the chief operator, and Major Willard, of New Orleans, met their deaths. It appears that they were visiting in the neighborhood of Fort Pike, on business connected with the telegraph lines, & took a boat to cross the lake near that point, which accidentally overturned whilst in the middle of the stream, and both were drowned, the boatman only escaping. Major Willard we regret to add, leaves a widow and young family to bewail their loss. Mr. Lines was a most efficient officer on the telegraph line, and was a native of Utica, N. Y.

Romish and Protestant Missionaries.

Dr. House, a missionary of the Presbyterian Board writing from Siam, says:

As to our neighbors, the French missionaries of the Romish faith, of whom there are eight resident in Bangkok, we come seldom or never in contact with them. The opinion that is held of their labors by the more thinking men in the kingdom, may perhaps, be learned from a conversation the Roman Catholic Bishop had not long ago with the Pra Nai Wai, one of the most intelligent and influential noblemen in Siam.—The Bishop had been urging him to become a Roman Christian. "Why should I?" replied the Prai Nai Wai. "Your people have been two hundred years in our country, and what have you done for us? You have taught nothing; you have given us no books; all we have learned from you is to drink lou [spirits.] But these American missionaries, they have been here only a litule while, and they have taught us their language: taught us science; they have given us books; and if we want [to know] any thing we go to them."

HANGING UP THE STOCKING.—Major Jones of the Western Continent, says, in reference to the good old custom for children of hanging up the stocking on Christmas eve:

"But ther's more hangin up of stockins in this world than goes by the name. Older people who laughs at the children's innocent superstition, don't forgit to hang up their stockins, though they don't always go to bed with as quiet, trustin harts nor as clean hands and faces,—and of course don't always git their stockins as well filled.

The Politician hangs up his stockins for Buncomb, and waits to see 'em swell with popularity. Ther's four or five pair of stockins hung up now for the next Presidency.—Sum bran new ones and sum that's been darned up for the occasion before: and there'll be more old stockins hung up this winter at Washington, than would hold all the offices of the government for half a century to come. I'd jest like to be old Uncle Sam instead of old Santa Claus for a litule while,—sum of 'em would find empty stockins, I'll be bound.

The Lawyer & the Doctor hangs up ther stockins when they stick up ther shingles. Sometimes they're a long time a gettin 'em full of clients and patients, but if they do succeed they're very apt to keep up the practice.

The Merchant hangs up his stockins over his door, and sum times you'll see 'em hangin in the winder and all around the door. So if they don't always git fortin enuff in 'em, it ain't because they don't have a fair show in the world.

Editors hangs up their stockins, and if any people deserves to have 'em well filled it's them.—But pore fellers, most of 'em is no strangers to hope deferred. They know what it is to give their lives to labor of love, and are contented to see the stockins of others filled with the good things of this world, though ther own swings empty in the chill winds of adversity."

IGNORANCE AND SUPERSTITION.—The Springfield Republican says:—Tuesday, 1st, was Candlemas, which the Irish call "St, Bridget's day." On it the Catholic Church blesses candles, which are thereby endowed with many virtues. Thus, if any one has a stitch in the side, light one of these candles and sit down beside it, and it will soon pass off. A great many of these blessed candles were sold by the priest at Cabotville, at ninepence a piece. Probably priests elsewhere did likewise. A pretty good profit that on candles.

WE find the following excellent advice in the Richmond Christain Advocate:

GIVE NO PAIN.—Breathe no sentiment—say not a word—give not an expression of the countenance that will offend another, or send a thrill of pain to his bosom. We are surrounded by sensitive hearts, which a word, a look, might even fill to the brim with sorrow. If you are careless of the opinions of others, remember that they are differently constituted from yourself; and never, by word or sign, cast a shadows on a happy heart, or throw aside the smiles of joy that linger on a pleasant countenance.

POPULAR ENTERPRISE.—Two or three new steamers, says the American Messenger, have begun to run on the Mississippi, stopping on Saturday evening, and resuming their trips again on Monday morning. Their captains are men of principle, and so popular are these boats, and so commodious, that they are eagerly sought by travellers. No gaming is permitted, and as the bars are closed, drunkards, gamblers, and pickpockets seldom travel on these boats.

THEY lie, says Seneca, who say they believe there is no God. Though they may profess this somewhat confidently in the day time, when they are in company; yet in the night, and alone, they have doubtful thoughts about it

THE MEXICAN MINES.—The Philadelphia Ledger says, it is settled that the Mexican Mines at San Luis and Zacatecas, are to be taken possession of by the United States troops, and the next arrival from Mexico will probably bring the news of their capture. Their annual produce is estimated at twenty millions of dollars, yielding to the government six hundred thousand dollars.

It is said that under the instructions sent from Washington to General Scott, the Mint at the city of Mexico, and the Mints of Guanaxuato, Zacatecas, Guadalaxara, Durango, &c., will be put in operation, for the coinage of United States dollars and half dollars. The average annual coinage at these Mints is about twelve millions of dollars.

DISAPPEARANCE OF THE CHOLERA IN EUROPE.—A letter from St. Petersburg, of the 7th February, states that the cholera had disappeared from the provinces of Pensa, Woronesch, Toula, and Taurida, and from Cherson and the neighborhood. In the provinces Nenij-Novorgorod, Koursk, and Kiew, the malady had not made any fresh progress; whilst in those of Podolia, Volhynia, and Minst, it had become more intense.

NEW RAILROAD ARRANGEMENT.—In order more fully to accommodate the very large and constantly increasing travel on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, it will be seen that the company to-day commence running a second passenger train of cars between Baltimore and Cumberland, leaving each city in the afternoon. Of course, the departure of the stages from Cumberland and Wheeling will be regulated to meet this new arrangement.—Balt. Sun.

JEWISH CONGRESS.—A congress of reforming Israelites were to meet in the course of the last month at Berlin, Prussia, to discuss questions relative to the reforms of which Judaism may be susceptible, in accordance with the wants of the age.

LOTTERIES IN VIRGINIA.—In the Virginia Legislature, the select committee on the subject of lotteries has reported a bill to suppress the sale of foreign lottery tickets after May next, and of domestic lottery tickets after the year 1852.

Professor Morse, the inventor of the magnetic telegraph, has recently given the American Tract Society $500 to support colporteurs in Mexico.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miracu lous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. GENERAL CONFERENCE PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

THE PRAIRIE—GOD'S GARDEN.

"The most beautiful of all the great natural objects is one of the gerat Western prairies in blossom. It is a sea of flowers, and so entrancing as to dazzle the senses. Well may it be called God's Garden."—Notes of a Traveller.

God formed the world for beauty,
And hung it in the air,
Then clothed it in its loveliness,
And called it "good" and fair.
His, are the burnished heavens,
With all their orbs of light;
He gave the stars the lustre
That they shed upon the night.

He made the mighty ocean,
Its grandeur and its grace,
And gave its mystic splendor,
As a mirror for his face.
No nobler emblem hath He,
None greater, none more free,
No symbol half so touching,
As the bounding mighty sea.

The mountains in sublimity,
As monuments shall stand,
To teach us wandering morals,
The worship of his hand.
Upon the mighty hillsides,
Around their summits high,
His name is writ in glory,
In power and majesty.

But, oh! the blooming prairies,
Here are God's floral bowers!
Of all that he hath made on earth,
The loveliest are the flowers.
This is the Almighty's garden.
And the mountain, stars and sea,
Are nought compared in beauty,
With God's garden prairie free.

Materials for Thought.

[Furnished by our Philadelphia Correspondent.]

Duty and Usefulness.—There are two things which ought to exert great influence on man.—The first is a thought of duty; and, the second the thought of usefulness. The influence of these motives has always been irresistable to noble minds; either of them ought of itself to be enough. If we think it our duty to undertake any enterprize, we ought to do so, even though we may not see all the good that will result from it; and, likewise, if we perceive its beneficial consequences, we ought immediately to turn our whole attention to it, even though, in our peculiar position, we may not suppose that it is a duty binding upon us. If these two great principles were united, how powerful would they be!—D'Aubigne.

Paul.—To a certain extent, the Epistles of Paul form a sort of autobiography, and in addition to their divine instructions, are invaluable as exhibiting an example worthy, next to that of our Lord himself, of being studied as a model.—The singleness of purpose and self-devotion, the entire disinterestedness and enlarged benevolence, the moral courage and fortitude, the combination of a lofty spirit with a most entire resignation of will, which are the prominent features of the moral portrait, attest the power of Divine Grace, that, in an instant, transformed the proud, impetuous, malign, fanatical Pharisee into the very image of Christ, an ardent zeal for whose glory became henceforth the all-absorbing passion of his soul. Such was the character of the great Apostle of the Gentile world.

Education.—The World wrong side up.—The world is wrong side up in this matter of education when it administers its own medicines only, its own beggarly elements, its own food, and nothing higher, its own smatterings of knowledge without the celestial life of knowledge. Power it gives without guidance, without principles.—It is just as if the art of ship building should be conducted without helms, and all ships should be set afloat to be guided by the winds only.—For such are immortal ships afloat on the sea of life without the Bible; its knowledge, its principles, ought from the first to be a part of the educated intelligent constitution, as the keel or rudder is part and parcel of a well built ship. Religious instruction, therefore, and the breath of the sacred Scriptures ought to be breathed into the child's daily life of knowledge, not put off to the Sabbath, when your children only are addressed from the pulpit, or left to parents at home, who perhaps themselves, in too many cases never open the Bible. If in their daily schools children were educated for eternity as well as time, there would be more good citizens, a deeper piety in life, a more sacred order and heavenlike, beauty in the republic, a better understanding of law, a more patient obedience to it, and an assimilation with its spirit beforehand. "It is by celestial observations alone," said Coleridge, (and it was a great and profound remark,) "that terrestrial charts can be constructed. If our education would be one that states can live by and flourish, it must be ordered in the Scriptures."—Dr. Cheever."

What do I looking to second hands? This man; that beast; this fever; that tempest, this fire; that inundation;—are but His rods. The hand is His that wields them; their malignity is their own; nothing but goodness proceeds from Him that uses them to my advantage: "It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good." 1 Sam. iii. 18.—Bishop Hall.

REMARKS

On a communication in the Recorder, headed "Defence of Tobacco," over the signature of "A. S. R."

"Each pleasure hath its poison too,
And every sweet a snare."

Confessedly, that is an amusing article; and withal, not without some shew of argument.—But I am an unbeliever still in the doctrine it teaches. Hence I desire to offer a few remarks upon the triple prop, by which your correspondent endeavors to sustain his tobacco building.

"First," he says, "I consider my brethren who have called it obnoxious, have slandered its character as given by the Maker of herbs," &c. So then, it seems, anti-tobacco men are called slanderers!" Serious charge. Yet the author of it appears not to be ashamed to call us "brethren!" That is friendly, sure. But the prophet Jeremiah does not speak very commendably of those "brethren" who "who walk with slanderers."

But how does this fast friend of this "much slandered herb," attempt to support this grave charge? Why forsooth, we "have called it obnoxious," and so "have slandered its character as given by the Maker of herbs." What is the meaning of this defamatory epithet? According to high lexicographic authority, it signifies "offensive." Admitting this definition to be correct, I must plead guilty, to the charge. And so, I opine, must millions more. Indeed, naturally, it would seem, it is offensive to all our race. So that the whole world must become guilty before this tobacco god! Truly we are in a woful predicament. And how can we look for remission? Must we all come bending, and penitent, to supplicate mercy at the idolatrous shrine of the smoker and chewer of tobacco? If so, some of us, it is to be feared, never will be forgiven.

But it may be possible that the same doctrine is deemed orthodox in the temple of this herbal deity, that is still current in this commonwealth, viz: "The greater the truth the greater the libel." And that chewing this villified herb is a filthy practice, many of the devotees confess!—And the slander consists, doubtless, in giving utterance to this unwelcome t-r-u-t-h!

Silence and seriousness are, however, enjoined, for we are summoned before our Maker.—And what do we learn now? Why that tobacco is by unerring lips pronounced "good—very good." And, of course, those who call it "obnoxious," slander the character of this nice plant, or delicious herb! So says A. S. R. But if our zealous defender of the "misrepresented plant," had condescended to prove that tobacco was among the delicious herbs, which the Creator pronounced "good—very good," his argument would at least have appeared more specious. But this he rather assumed—without proof.—Have not the alleged villifiers of this vile weed as good a right to assume that tobacco was not among the precious plants, and delicious herbs, which received the benediction of the Almighty; but was found afterwards, among the thorns and thistles, the result of the malediction of God, in consequence of the sin of man!—Found among the curses and not among the blessings of our Maker? And would it not be a little more modest and prudent for those who denounce us as slanderers, to support such grave charges with something better than arrant assumption?

Again, our author and pleader for the precious plant, says: "He [God] knew well its character and made it for our use. To deny this is to deny the word of eternal truth." And did He not also make the deadly nightshade, thistles, &c., for our use? "To deny this," then, "is to deny the word of eternal truth." And "I have given every green herb for meat," says our friend A. S. R., from the Bible. And then asks triumphantly, "Is not tobacco a green herb?" And we may ask, Why do you not eat it then? Meat need be eaten—masticated and swallowed, to nourish the system. Why do you not experiment upon your own doctrine? Nay, verily, delicious "meat" as you declare it, after "chewing it awhile, you spit it out, as a vile, "obnoxious" weed! So that your practice falsifies your profession; and in deed, if not in word, you slander this precious gift of God!! And even the broth or soup of "good meat" is delicious, nutrimental. But how would even the abused stomach of a tobacco chewer endure the soup of this delicious dish of blessed herbal meat? Now notice the triumphant conclusion of our tobacco logician. He says, "We might as well call the staff of life obnoxious." Does the author himself believe this inferential declaration? If he does, it should seem, his brain must be marvellously addled with the fumes of this filthy weed, or delirious with some other artificial and pernicious stimulant. I will pause for him to take that back. For surely if his conscience is not dried-up in the smoke of his darling plant, upon sober second-thought, he will be glad to unsay that sentence. Obviously to all candid and impartial minds, call it—tobacco—a plant—an herb—or a weed, it may be "good—very good" for curative, but not culinary purposes:—it may be "good" for a medicine, but "bad" for "meat." As A. S. R. says, it may be "one of the best antedotes, for extracting poison from the human system, such as the bite of poisonous snakes, &c.;" but never—never place it again among the "green herbs for meat," nor put it upon a par with the "staff of life!"

Secondly, having dwelt so long upon what appeared to be the chief—the scriptural source of support of the tobacco usage, the balance must be disposed of more briefly. The second prop to the practice of using tobacco in the ordinary way, as furnished by our friend, is its delicious taste! He says, "Again, it is not only good in point of character. But very good to the taste, yes, delicious," &c. Truly this is a straightout epicurean reason! And would it not apply with equal force to the glutton and the wine-bibber? O the terrible appetite of the inebriate for his ruby bowl! How "delicious" the accursed cup to many poor ruined souls! And will friend A. S. R. plead from appetite in this case also?

Thirdly, "Again," says the defender of the habitual use of, and traffic in, the article of tobacco, "it is good as a commodity." That is, the tobacco business is a money making business, and therefore it is right! Here is another outspoken and undisguised plea—not for the pernicious practice of chewing, &c., alone, but also for the credit of the tobacco business. And what a reason! Nay more. That language is far too feeble. What blessed logic for all those who are engaged in the vilest practices below the sun! Provided they only make money by it!! Speaking of the profits of raising "the weed," says A. S. R., it is the most money making business they could engage in. Therefore it must be good!!!" If this doctrine be true, sound it out, and let all the publishers of impure and infidel literature, all keepers of gambling houses, of doggeries, and of dwellings of ill-fame know it! And that this wonderful discovery is made by a moral essayist! Yea, let them all know that their most abominable business is "good!" If they only realize considerable monetary profit by it! Tell them, too, (lest scruples should arise,) that this new doctrine is openly avowed by a moral writer, and published in a religious newspaper!!!

Seriously and solemnly, if the argument now under review is solid and good in Ohio, why not in Pennsylvania? If conclusive in the tobacco business, why not in the liquor trade? If it proves the tobacco business to be "good" in "Old Muskingum," it will prove the liquor trade to be also "good" in "Old Monongahela." For "Old Monongahela whiskey," in these parts, has made many men rich—has been, and still is, "the most efficient means to support their families" who are engaged in the most nefarious business of making and selling the article. "Therefore," according to A. S. R., "it must be good!" True it is done at the awful cost of thousands of lives, nay even of their immortal souls!! But never mind the loss of property, of peace, of character, of life, even of the soul itself; so long as whiskey is a good "commodity" in the market!! Hope our friend A. S. R. will ponder his positions before he publishes them abroad, in future. And I think the more he does so, the more he will see how difficult a matter it is rightly to defend an indefensible cause.

AN ANTI.

Pitts. Pa.

Ministerial.

From the Cumberland Presbyterian.

The kind of Ministry the World Needs.

Self-denial, as we have already mentioned, is a qualification highly necessary to a ministry's being useful.—"Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."

When the disciples were called, those of them, who were fishermen, immediately left their boats and nets, and Matthew left his tax gathering—they forsook all and followed Christ. Paul forsook even his own nation, and the honor he possessed there, and became a preacher to the Gentiles; exposing himself to all manner of persecution, and even to death, for Christ's sake, and the kingdom of heaven's sake. Whatever honor, wealth and pleasure the world afforded, these holy men were compelled to despise, that they might preach that gospel which is the power of God unto salvation.

We are taught by these facts, that those who are called to herald the glad tidings of salvation, cannot gratify desires for the world. But that father and mother and houses and lands must be denied the chief place in the affections if they would fulfil the office they "receive from the Lord;" that a minister should be so unencumbered by the things of this world, as to be ready to go whenever, and to whatever place the spirit of God may call him. Such a constant tendency to evil has a love of the world that they cannot serve it, as do its votaries, and save it too.

He that will not deny himself, as Christ has directed, should not enter upon the duties of a preacher. The world will not be spiritually benefitted by him. "My kingdom is not of this world," says the Divine Redeemer. Then they, who preach it cannot in spirit and practice conform to the world, without exhibiting palpable inconsistency. This will bring disgrace upon the holiest of all offices, and ruin upon souls.

It should be remembered that God's ministers are not to receive their reward in this life, but in the world to come,—that evil things, conflicts, persecutions, and bonds and imprisonments, are to be their portion here. They must suffer patiently, for the reward set before them, looking unto Jesus, who promised to be with them, even to the end of the world.

The world needs a working Ministry.

Christ and his Apostles went from village to village, and from city to city, teaching the way of life. The multitude were preached to upon the mountain, and by the sea side; the eunuch, as he rode in his chariot; the jailer, in the prison; Lydia, and her household upon the shore of the river; the governor in the judgment hall; and the Athenians on Mars hill. These heralds of salvation were "instant, in season and out of season, exhorting, reproving and rebuking with all long suffering." This they regarded as their only business here on earth. They desired to know nothing among the people but Christ and him crucified. They were working ministers.

He who died for man knew the wants of the world, and to meet them he instituted this mintry. As a pattern for the church in all ages, is their history set before us. Men are as wicked now, as they were then, and as much in danger of wrath. It is no easier task to reclaim them now than it was then. Vast difficulties still lay in the way of the universal spread of the Gospel. Therefore, there is as much need of a working ministry, now as there was then.

How busy are men about their worldly interests! They labor during all seasons, day and night. The country, the city, our highways and streets present nothing but activity and toil.—Men running to and fro, meeting and parleying about their interest: they brave the perils of the ocean, endure the heat and thirst of the desert, and the cold winds and snows of the North, that they may gather but shining dust. It is by such industry that cities rise, and send up their domes glittering in the sun; that gilded palaces are built; that the forest is made a cultivated field, and that ships whiten the ocean by their sails Would we see churches rise in every village and neighborhood, the Gospel preached in every part of the habitable globe, nations forsaking their idols, and turning to the worship of the true God, the teeming millions of this earth bowing before the Lord of Hosts, and worshipping the Son? we must have a ministry equally industrious in their calling as the men of this world in serving mammon.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Visit of Merle D'Aubigne to Scotland.

From his new Book, on Germany, England, & Scotland.

I traversed England, from London to Newcastle, in one short day, thanks to the railroads! I often went forty-eight miles in one hour, three times the distance from Geneva to the other end of our lake. I flew like an arrow through the delightful and celebrated landscapes of Derbyshire, and waved my hand, as I passed by, to the majestic towers of the ancient Minister of York. The next day, for want of better accommodation, I took my seat in one of those heavy vehicles of the Middle Ages, called mails, or stage coaches, and proceeded slowly, by comparison, although at full gallop, from Newcastle to Edinburg. After crossing the border, the magnificent ruins of Jedburg Abbey, one of the finest remains of Saxon architecture, soon attracted my notice. These ruins of olden times which appeared before me the moment I entered Scotland, after having crossed the desert moors which divide it from England, made a deep impression upon me. I seemed to hear a voice from them saying to me, "Thou art setting thy foot upon an ancient land, & it is not only the present times which thou must behold there, but those also which are no more!"

Yet I must not forget the present. After having passed within sight of Abbotsford, celebrated as the residence of Walter Scott, we arrived in Edinburgh. It was the day on which the Queen's birth-day is kept; there were great rejoicings in the streets, and fire works were thrown against the coach. I had not yet alighted, when I perceived amidst the crowd a head already whitened by age, with a lively eye and benevolent smile. It was Chalmers, that man, who for these thirty years has been all over Europe the representative of Scotland; he had had the kindness to come and meet me. The hearty welcome of this venerable Christian, with whom I was not before personally acquainted, and who adds to his great genius the simplicity of a child, affected me even to tears. Thenceforward I loved Chalmers as a brother, and reverenced him as a father. I was united to him, to his church, to his people, by a powerful bond of affection. A month afterwards, having gone to spend my last two days in Scotland with Chalmers, in a delightful village at Fairlie, on the sea-shore, opposite the mountains of Arran, I repaired to Greenock, to meet the steamer which was to carry me to Liverpool; and, notwithstanding the distance, notwithstanding his age, and a heavy rain, (a Greenock day, as they call it there,) Chalmers would see me to my cabin, and did not leave me till the signal was given for our departure. Chalmers was the first and the last whom I saw in Scotland. If I recall this cordial welcome, it is not only for the sake of doing honor to this friend; I merely point to the venerable Edenburgh patrarch, as the type of Scottish hospitality.

Here am I, then, in Edinburgh, the most picturesque, of all the towns which I have ever visited. Its situation has been compared to that of Athens, but it is added that the modern Athens is far superior to the ancient. Edinburg, built upon the two brows of a large terrace, presents the most wonderful prospective. If from that beautiful Prince's Street, which separates the Old town from the New, you turn towards the south, you have before you the old Edinburgh, with its historic walls, its colleges, its hospitals, its ancient towers, and those houses that, from the side on which you now look, have as many as fourteen stories, while on the other they have but two or three; you see those narrower streets, in which you must seek the memorials of the city, and in particular the residence of Knox, around which the Free Church has lately purchased a site, to raise to the reformer of Scotland a monument worthy of him, two churches and a school.—Geneva is not doing as much for Calvin!

Such is the view which from the New town we have of the Old. But, if I change my position, and climb to the heights of the Old town, and look back to the place I have just left, on the north side to the New town, I then see a very different prospect: squares, gardens, magnificent streets, adorned as it were with palaces; and, at the corner of two of them, the hospitable abode in which Archibald B——received me like a brother; that house, which, during the sitting of the assembly, never ceased to be filled with friends, from breakfast time until after evening worship, between eleven and twelve; the crowd renewed at every moment, so that it was rare to see the same face twice, and it might have been called a very caravanserai of Christian friends, where every one is free to enter. Farther on, I beheld the Frith of Forth; the sea with its islands, its rocks, its vessels traversing it in all directions; towns, light houses; and all around me in the distance, the shadows of the Ochills, and the Pentlands, and the rugged summits of the Grampians.

But what, even to a Swiss, is most striking in Edindurgh, and especially when walking in the cool groves of the valley which separates the Old town from the New, is that mountain, which in the very midst of the city, shoots up its immense and abrupt walls of rock, which an Irishman described as being more than perpendicular. You wander amid Scotch firs, (we call them here Genevese pines; Geneva and Scotland have both joined in giving their own name to their favorite tree,) you contemplate the base of the mountain, you climb from rock to rock, you hide yourself under their shadow and dive into their recesses, you fancy yourself in one of the most picturesque and most distant solitudes of our Alps; in some secluded glen of the Valais, of the Oberland, or of Glaris, beside the Glaciers; you look up, and palaces surround you!

But what are those ancient walls which I see perched upon the summit of these bold rocks? What is that loud blast of the trumpet which re-echoes from the heights? What mean the bands of armed highlanders, who, clothed in their picturesque costume, ascend and descend the mountain? These walls are the castrum puellarum the camp of the maidens, where in ancient times the Pictish Kings, as the tradition tells us, placed their daughters to be educated in these inaccessible heights, safe from the tumults and the wars of the plain; it is the old Castle of Edinburgh, which has been as the kernel to the town, that has gradually germinated around it. More than once in critical circumstances for the country, during the thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, armies have spread their banners around this lofty fortress; and now, all that remains of those historical times, are the royal jewels of Scotland,—the crown, the sceptre and the sword,—which, having been found by accident, and in a dark room, are now exhibited at noon-day to visitors by the red glare of lamps.

But how many more memorials are there in Edinburgh! Coming down from the Castle along the High street and the Canongate, which join the two most remarkable edifices of the metropolis, Edinburgh Castle and Holyrood Palace, I find the ancient cathedral of St. Giles, near whose Gothic walls lie the remains of Knox, and whose lofty aisles have witnessed so many celebrated events of Scottish history. Continuing my walk, I reached the palace of Holyrood, situated between the splendid Calton Hill, which commands the sea, and on which stand the monuments of Nelson, and of other famous men, and where a strong wind is always blowing; and on the other side Sir Arthur's seat, that picturesque mountain which reminds us of our Saleve on a smaller scale. Here, then is Holyrood, that ancient abode of so much grandeur, of so much beauty, of so many painful & terrible remembrances. Here are the half destroyed walls of that chapel whose graceful ruins are a sad but significant monument of the desire of the Stuart's to introduce Prelacy and Popery into Scotland, and of the fruitlessness with which efforts so uncongenial must ever be attended. But the great name which seems to hover over Holyrood, is that of the unfortunate Mary Stuart. We see her bed, her dressing table, and her work. Every moment with this name in Scotland. "Here," they say pointing to some fine ruins, "here Mary Stuart was born." "There, very near Edinburgh, Mary often resided." They have given the name of Little France to the village in which the French guards were lodged. Nations keep the remembrance of those who do them evil, better than of those who have done them good. Thus, near the gulf of Baiæ, not far from Naples, you still find every where the memorials of Nero; there are Nero's bath's Nero's grotto, Nero's palace; and farther on, Nero, Tiberius, the Cape of Misene. The poet describes with exactness the places in which tyrants resided.

Cæsar Tiberius
In Misenensem villam
Quæ monte summo posita Luculli manu,
Prospectat Siculum, et despicit Tuscum mare.

Thus, Scotland every where recalls Mary Stewart. "But the memory of the just alone is blessed." I shall have another opportunity of speaking of the recollections which Mary Stuart has left in Holyrood. I now leave Edinburgh, and turn to the Scottish people.

Explanation of the Word Selah.

Every reader of the Bible feels a strong desire to know the meaning of this word, as used in the Scriptures. In a late number of the Bibliotheca Sacra, this desire is fully met, in an explanation, to us, at least, perfectly satisfactory of this hitherto unexplained and apparently inexplicable term. For the gratification and benefit of our readers, we will present them, in as few words as possible with the substance of what is written upon the subject in the work referred to.

1. This word appears only in poetry, and in poetry only designed as temple songs, and which for the most part are still provided with musical notes.

2. The word appears only in connection with some very great and strong religious sentiment, such as the most earnest supplication, confession, or thanksgiving, a sentiment attended with a most intense desire to have it borne up directly as a memorial before God.

3. The real meaning of all the passages in which it is found may be fully expressed, with the omission of the word, its omission not at all impairing the thought. Of the truth of the above statements, the reader of the Bible can inferm himself, by an examination of the passages where the word is found.

4. It is hence concluded that the word does not "properly belong to the context, but must stand independently, and is consequently an inserted, or intercalary note." Its use as such a note may now be readily explained by a reference to what obtained in the temple service at the time when the songs in which the word is found were sung, together with a certain usage instituted by Moses.

(1.) Moses required that trumpets should be blown on occasions when an earnest appeal was made to Jehovah, as for example, in connection with the offering of sacrifices, (Num. 10: 10,) on the first day of the month in which that great act of God's mercy, the yearly atonement for Israel's sin was expected, (Lev. 23: 24;) and when the people went forth to war, (Num. 10: 9.) The express design of this ordinance was to bear up the offerings and requests of the people for a memorial before God. This was the peculiar design of the blowing of trumpets.

(2.) "Whenever those who performed the psalmody were introduced, the priests with the trumpets were mentioned along with the Levites, but always distinct from them," (1 Chron. 15: 18—24; 16: 4—6; 2 Chron. 5: 12; 29: 26—28: Ezra 3: 10; Neh. 12: 34—36,) and these two musical choirs, different in nature, remained separate in the performance of the psalm. The Levites stood in the singer's gallery, opposite to the priests with trumpets, (2 Chron. 7: 6.) The instruments of the Levites served to praise and thank Jehovah; those of the priests for intercession."

(3.) The use of the trumpets in the temple service is manifest. Whenever the choir of singers had given utterance to very great and strong sentiments which the people desired to have borne directly up to the ears of Jehovah, then in the interlude, the priests blew the trumpets for this purpose. In their being blown, the design was a direct appeal to Jehovah, as "Hear, Jehovah, or awake, Jehovah."

(4.) In just such connections, Selah always appears. Its design then was this, to indicate the interlude in which the priests should blow with trumpets to carry up the sentiments expressed for a memorial before God. The term Higgaion Selah indicates the sound of the stringed instruments used by the Levites in connection with the blowing of the trumpets on the part of the priests. Such is the meaning of Selah. To read it with profit, we should pause a moment when we come to it, letting our hearts ascend directly to God, in the sentiment, Lord hear, Lord remember, Lord help, &c.—Oberlin Evangelist.

Abolition of Slavery.

The 'Moniteur' publishes another decree, which will be read with universal satisfaction.—Slavery is to be abolished at once. The following is the decree.

FRENCH REPUBLIC.

Liberty—equality—fraternity.—The Provisional Government of the Republic, considering that no French land should any longer bear slaves, decrees—a Commission is instituted, under the Provisional Minister of Colonies and the Marine, to prepare within the shortest delay, the act for the immediate emancipation of the slaves in all the Colonies of the Republic.

Profane Swearing.

"To swear—is neither brave, polite nor wise;
You would not swear upon the bed of death—
Reflect—your Maker now could stop your breath!"

Brother S———and myself were entertained, during the Convention week, at the house of a medical gentleman, eminent in his profession, but addicted, it was said, to profanity in ordinary conversation. Without a premonition, no suspicion of so blameworthy a practice could have arisen in our minds; for no real Christian ever showed guests greater courtesy, or seemed further from profaneness than our gentlemanly host. He did not even annoy us with lady-like mincings, putting forth the buddings of profanity "la me!"—"good gracious!" and the like.

But on Sunday night, our conversation taking a religious turn, the subject of profane swearing was incidentally named, when I could not resist the temptation of drawing a bow at venture, and so I said:

"Doctor, we leave you to-morrow; and be assured we are very grateful to Mrs. D———and yourself; but may I say, dear sir, we have been disappointed here?"

"Disappointed!"

"Yes sir, but most agreeably——"

"In what way, Mr. C——?"

"Will you pardon me, if I say we were misinformed, and may I name it?"

"Certainly, sir, say what you wish."

Well, my dear sir, we were told that Dr. D——was not guarded in his language—but surely you are misrepresented—"

"Sir," interrupted he, 'I do honor you for your candor; yet sir, I regret to say, you have not been misinformed. I do, and perhaps habitually, use profane language; but, sir, can you think I would swear before religious people and one of them a clergyman?"

Tears stood in my eyes, (the frank-heartedness of a gentleman always starts them,) as I took his hand and replied:

"My dear, sir, you amaze us. Can it be that Dr. D——, so courteous and so intelligent a man, has great reverence for us than for the venerable 'God!'"

"Gentlemen," replied the Doctor, and with a tremulous voice, "I never did before see the utter folly of profane swearing. I will abandon it forever."

The Beef Trade.—The Beef business of the Scioto Valley for the past season, is estimated at $800,000—more than one-third the amount involved in the Pork business of Cincinnati. The Chillicothe Gazette says: "Take one year with another, the Beef business, of which our city is the central exchange, amounts to about a million of dollars."

Two persons traveling on the road to Caudebec in a carriole, were smoking cigars, from the fire of which some straw at the bottom of the wagon became ignited. The flames soon drove them from their seats, and while they were busy in extinguishing the fire, a countryman, who had been for some time following them on horseback, alighted to assist them. "I have been watching the smoke for some time," said he. "Why then did you not give us notice?" asked the travelers, "Well," responded the peasant, "there are so many new-fangled inventions now-a-days, I thought you were going by steam!"

Manumission.—We learn from the Lynchburg Virginian that Captain John Warick of Amherst county, who died a few days since, manumitted by his will all his servants, numbering between seventy and eighty. He has made ample provision for their removal, outfit and settlement in one of the Western States.

Population of Iowa.—The population of Iowa according to the census just completed, is 116,204. In 1840 it was 43,112. Wisconsin in 1840 numbered only 30,645, but now contains 213,000.

From the Boston Olive Branch.

Maine District.

Br. Norris: The last Session of our Conference, holden at East Dixfield, March 2d to the 5th, was, I think, decidedly the best we have had since our organization; nearly all the members were present, notwithstanding the boisterous storm and badness of the travelling; the brethren came up like men of God, strong for war, full of faith and the Holy Ghost.

The Conference business all closed up harmoniously on Saturday P. M. Sabbath A. M., Brother Danforth interested a respectful congregation for an hour, from Eccles. iv: 8, by describing the benefits of laboring for God, contrasted with the drudgery of Satan, at the close of which Brothers Daniel Collins and Marchant Hally were set apart to the Sacred Office of Elders in the Church of Christ, by the laying on of hands. It was a solemn and impressive scene. In the afternoon Father Tripp gave us an excellent sermon, that I trust will long be remembered by us all, and also reduced to practice, that we may rightly divide the word of truth; text, 2 Tim. ii: 15. This veteran and pioneer of the gospel is the oldest member of our Conference; and it was truly cheering to us, who are younger, to hear him publicly avow his unshaken confidence in the doctrines and usages of our church. May God bless and prosper him to do much good yet in the Gospel Ministry.

The closing address from the President, on Sabbath evening, was founded on Amos vii: 2.—'By whom shall Jacob arise, for he is small?'—in the contemplation of which we felt strengthened to go out, trusting in Jacob's God, believing that the promises are sure to all the seed.

I am happy to say in this report, that the last year has been one of prosperity with us as a body. So far as we have sacrificed in the cause of truth, God has blessed our labors in the reclaiming and conversion of souls. There has been some increase in the ministry and membership, the past year; we hope to live only to exert a redeeming influence in the world.

We go out to our new fields of spiritual labor, cheered with the flattering prospect of winning souls to Christ, and with the assurance of Christ —'Lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world.' Our labors are arduous, our privations great, our enemies many and strong, our society small, poor, and in, as it were, an infant state; yet we go with a prevailing consciousness that it is the cause of truth and christian liberty; in God we trust for success and final victory; God can save by few or many; the battle is not to the strong, nor the race to the swift; the battle is the Lord's, and the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds.

Yours for the truth,

T. M. HALL.

Religious Intelligence.

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Fairmont, Va., April 7th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: we have had a gracious revival of religion in Fairmont, the work first commenced with the Methodist Episcopal Church, they continued some two weeks and closed, we then commenced in the fear of the Lord. Brother N. Gillespie came to our help and labored zealously in the cause of our good Master. The work progressed gloriously. The altar was crowded with mourning penitents, and many found the Lord precious in the pardon of their sins. Brother Simpson and myself continued the meeting about two weeks, the result of the revival in reference to the Methodist Protestant Church has been the addition of about fifty members to the Church. We then commenced our second quarterly meeting in Pruntytown, February 26th. Here in the commencement of our meeting we had the labors of Brother R. H. Walker, from Buchanan Circuit, who labored with zeal and acceptability. Here the Lord powerfully revived his work, we continued the meeting thirteen days, 30 souls were happily converted to God. Sixteen united with the Methodist Protestant Church. This is rather a Baptist community, this accounts for the difference in the number of converts and those who united with us, we have received one hundred members since Conference. Our souls have rejoiced in God our Saviour, but from continued labor and exposure my health has failed to a very considerable extent. Brethren pray for us.

Yours in Christ

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

New Alexandria, Jefferson Co., Ohio, April 10th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Since I wrote to the 'Recorder,' in the latter part of last October from Litchfield, Medina County, Ohio, I have visited Wayne, Frederick, Licking, Coshocton, Pisgah, Pennville, Cambridge, Belmont, Georgetown, Mt. Pleasant, Wellsville, (at Lisbon, a 2nd visit since Conference,) Warrensville, Burton, Vienna, Granger, (a 2nd visit since Conference,) and Leesburgh Circuits; and Steubenville & Youngstown Stations. From a number of these fields of labor, reports of a very cheering character have been made, by their respective superintendents, thro' the medium of the 'Recorder.'—These reports, with similar ones from circuits, not included in the above list, show that a great part of the Muskingum District has shared largely in spiritual prosperity, during the last few months. This is welcome intelligence! It is cheering to both ministers and members. And not only so, but the revival news from sister Districts contributes much to this 'feast of rejoicing.'

These reports will, I trust, fully excuse me from the irksome task of writing a regular journal of visitations. I may, however, be allowed to say, that my visit to each of these appointments was, to me, a pleasant visit, and upon some of them, very interesting meetings.

Wayne Circuit.—The prospects upon this ct., at the beginning of the year, were rather forbidding. Br. C. T. Kingsbury took charge of it & commenced his labors under many dark clouds of discouragement. But while he had opposition staring him in the face, sufficient to truly test his firmness, he had a few good members, and willing too, to aid him. And upon his faithful labors and the willing efforts of his people, I am glad to learn, a brighter day has dawned. It delighted my heart much on meeting Br. K., some two weeks since, to learn his spirits were somewhat revived, and that some success has crowned his labors, both at Litchfield and Wayne; particularly at the latter place, where, under all the circumstances, a remarkable revival of religion was experienced; in which near one score of souls professed to have realized the converting power of grace, and some 14 or 15 were added to the M. P. Church.

I doubt not that Wayne circuit, is destined to be again numbered among the living circuits of the Muskingum District.

Warrensville.—Nothing special has occurred upon this circuit. The spirit of 'comeouterism' has done much to prostrate the cause of Christ, in the bounds of this and adjoining circuits. A number who were once in active union with the church, now stand aloof from her, manifesting the spirit and making common cause with 'Garrison and Foster infidelity.'

Burton.—Nothing special here.

Farmington.—Father Richardson's health has been so delicate that he has not done much labor upon this circuit. He is however, disposed to do what labor he can. For reasons, to him and to me, too, quite satisfactory, he had not made any appointment for me upon this ct.

Vienna.—Br. Brown is doing well on this ct. He has been considerably successful upon the north east part of his field, & upon the west part, things seem pleasant. Br. B. is well received. There are many valuable members upon the Vienna ct. In many respects, it is a pleasant field of labor.

Youngstown.—Nothing special. Glad to learn that Br. Gee sustains himself well as a preacher, and commands a good congregation. A quiet time among and in all the churches here.

Mahoning Mission.—(If there is any 'mission' here.) Were all 'Home Missions' like Mahoning 'mission' the trouble would be who must serve them? rather than 'how long may he serve?' Br. P. Kinsley has spent but little of his time upon this Mission, and I suppose has no encouragement to spend any of his time upon it.

Granger.—I paid a second visit to this ct., the 18th and 19th of last month, and was glad to find Br. Moody at his post, aided, in part, by a very good man, and able preacher, by the name of Webber, received recently from the Wesleyan Methodist Church. There are some omens of good upon this ct.

Leesburgh.—This is Br. Baldwin's third year upon this circuit, and so far as I could learn, by far the most prosperous year of the three, thus far. Br. B. seems in fine spirits and his people appear much attached to him. With this I am much pleased.

Br. Winn, at his own request, is released from his charge upon the Licking circuit, and, upon the request of the Quarterly Conference of said ct., Br. J. Dorcas is appointed in his (Br. Winn's) place.

As a church, we have much to encourage us. Our prosperity has been great. While some have wondered that our prosperity has not been greater. I would rather 'wonder' that it has been so great as it is. Surely our success is fully equal to our efforts; and in view of surrounding circumstances, probably, greater than we might well have expected. If we, therefore, continue faithful, prosperity will continue to revive our spirits and cheer our hearts.

O! for the peace, harmony and spiritual prosperity of the M. P. Church!

GEO. CLANCY.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Bainbridge, O., April 14th, 1848.

Dear Brother Young,—President O. Conference: Below you have my second quarterly report of Bainbridge Circuit. Our meeting at this place continued after you left until the night of the 31st, which resulted in the organization of a society of 55 members. And many others we trust will ere long go with us. May the Lord still revive his work among us. There is a work begun here which we think will result in bringing many souls unto glory, and freedom and mutual rights to man. Our classes are going ahead with vigor. All the glory be to God. At this meeting we were favored with the labors of Brothers Hughey, and D. Inskeep, at the first of the meeting. Br. C. H. Williams continued with me to the end. May God bless these Brethren for their labors of love.

We opened a subscription for a meeting house; about $700 is secured, the House will be under contract in a few days and the building committee think it will be in use before the next Annual Conference. This is a friendly and liberal people to whose praise too much cannot be said. We have just closed our protracted meeting at the Rocky Fork, and Rapidforge. At the first we were favored with the labors of Brother W. G. Fowler, we had a very good meeting but no conversion or accessions. At the Rapidforge Brother. C. H. Williams stood at my side, and T. D. Howe. This meeting resulted in organizing a new class of seven members, elected a class leader; in good spirits. May the Lord prosper them. For our success praise the Lord.

S. P. KEZERTA.

INDIANA DISTRICT.

Edinburg, April 13th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Through the mercies af a kind and benevolent Father, I am still permitted to live and share the blessings of life. God is still enabling me to perform some labor in his vineyard. I have traveled around the district since Conference with the exception of two Circuits & one Mission. In many parts of this district prospects are growing better; the membership appear to be stirred up to a sense of their duty, and in several parts appear to be ardently engaged for a revival of God's work. And in fact at several meetings which we have attended, sinners have been made to cry aloud for mercy, when God in the plenitude of his goodness spoke peace to their souls. Oh that the Great Head of the Church would revive his work more abundantly among us. The tide of emigration to the west is yet thinning our ranks both in the ministry and membership so that we cannot make much advancement in point of members in this District. I am sorry that I have not had an opportunity of supplying Flatrock and Madison Circuits with superintendents as was contemplated by the Annual Conference. Oh that the good Lord would send more laborers into his harvest, for the harvest is great and faithful laborers are few. I have visited Madison circuit several times this year, spent five weeks with the friends of that part, held a protracted meeting in January which lasted ten days in the city of Madison. Several presented themselves at the altar of prayer, six or seven professed to have found the pearl of great price during the meeting. I was favored with the assistance of Br. Holcombe who labored with zeal and ability. May God build up the waste places of Zion on Madison Circuit.

There is another subject in which I feel deeply interested, that I would name to the brethren of this district, and that is the necessity of making a united effort this year as was contemplated by the Annual Conference to raise funds to liquidate the Ludlow claim. I hope we will be able this year to roll back that dark cloud from the horizon of our Zion which has haunted us for several years. Br. H. Collings has been presenting the subject before the citizens of Sugar Creek circuit, and has succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectation. One hundred and fifteen dollars are subscribed and he expects still more. Brethren will you help?

T. SHIPP.

NORTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT.

Canton Ill., March 30th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: According to promise I proceed to give you & your readers some farther particulars in regard to this circuit. I remarked in my last that the brethren on this circuit were much discouraged. It will be due to the last superintendent to state that this and Cherry Grove Circuits were united, and two Brothers were appointed to travel them. They got sick—one did not travel at all, the other not till spring. In regard to the revival at Harkness Grove, that I last wrote about, there were some twelve professed to be reclaimed and converted. Others that were forward for prayers have since at other meetings found the blessing. It was the first revival in that section this season, and others have followed all around. The Episcopal Methodists have had two hard by; the Wesleyans one, and the Methodist Protestants one. The next meeting I held was at Waterford. It commenced on New Years' eve. The Lord was with us at the beginning; two came forward for prayers the first night. Br. Kirkpatrick was with me one day and two nights, and the Lord all the time. The old professors were quickened, three backsliders reclaimed, five or six sinners converted. To God be all the glory. There had been no regular preaching there by our preachers for more than two years. The first time I went, it was with difficulty I could get a house to preach in. I found some five or six that call themselves Protestant Methodists, and all but one brother thought it hardly worth trying to do any thing; but at the close of our meeting we organized a class of sixteen. May the Lord keep them faithful. Amen. I have been preaching at a new place, a little village called Uniontown. There has heretofore been no regular preaching there; the prospect is good.

The second Quarterly Meeting for this Circuit was held at Center School House, near Harkness Grove. It commenced on the evening of the 24th of February. Br. Bagley got there the second evening. The meeting was protracted about two weeks. Brother Bagley did the most of the preaching. The power of the Lord of Hosts was there. About forty professed the pardoning mercy of God. Oh, it was a soul-stirring sight to see the old grey headed father and his children bowing together at the altar of prayer. The entire professing community of all denominations were greatly quickened. We organized a new class of about thirty members and if things go well, more will join. I preached there last Sabbath; things are going on well. They organized a Sabbath School and raised $15 for books, may they be preserved from internal commotions, and their names be registered in the Lamb's Book of Life. Hallelujah, give God the glory, for glory is his due.

Yours for the cause of Christ,

SAM. DILLEY.

MICHIGAN DISTRICT.

Schoolcraft, March 20, 1848.

Br. Reese,—Having just returned from a three months' tour on the East part of the District, I cheerfully communicate for publication in your excellent paper, the state of our Zion on the several Circuits embraced in my visit. By a resolution of our last Annual Conference, it was made my duty to perform one tour around the entire District during the year, spending five days, including a Sabbath, on each Circuit. Accordingly, I commenced on the Jackson Circuit, and continued to labor with them from Dec. 11 to 15. Our meetings were interesting and profitable. There has been some revival on the Circuit this year, and some additions to the Church.

Dec. 18 to 22.—Ingham Circuit.—The Quarterly meeting was held in Livingston County, in Br. Halsted's Class. It was protracted one week after I left, and resulted in the hopeful conversion of some 30 souls, with quite a strong addition to the membership of our Church in that place.

Dec. 25 to 29.—Livingston Circuit.—At this meeting several sinners experienced "redemption through the blood of the Lamb;" several backsliders were reclaimed, and the Church generally revived and renewed in the spirit of their minds. It was highly interesting to witness the union that prevailed among the ministers and members of different denominations present.—This Circuit is steadily on the advance.

Jan. 1 to 5, 1848.—Flint Circuit.—Quarterly meeting at Grand Blank; God was with us of a truth; good omens; but owing to the badness of the roads and other circumstances not under our control, we could not protract the meeting, as was anticipated. The work is reviving on some parts of this Circuit, and our cause progressing.

Jan. 8 to 12.—Lapeer Circuit.—The meeting was held at the county seat, and though it commenced under forbidding and discouraging circumstances, resulted in the commencement of one of the most powerful and glorious revivals of religion ever witnessed in these parts. Between 75 and 100 are received as converts.

Jan. 15 to 19.—McComb Circuit.—This meeting will not soon be forgotten; a powerful work broke out; several experienced religion, & quite a number came forward to the "anxious seats" for prayers. We left the meeting in progress—have not heard the result. This Circuit is in a healthy state.

Jan. 22 to 26.—Franklin Circuit.—Here God was pleased to own his word, and favor us with his blessing. Before we left, 23 gave in their names for membership in the Methodist Protestant Church, as fruits of the meeting. Among whom are several heads of families and several young persons of great promise. Omens on this Circuit indicate quite an increase this year.

Jan. 29 to Feb. 2.—Should have been devoted to the Orchard Lake Circuit; but as the Superintendent, the Rev. R. Bamford, had seen cause to declare himself no longer a member or minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, and had organized a new Church called the "Bible Witness Church." In consequence of which, my appointment to that Circuit was not circulated. I thought it best, under the circumstances, to devote the time thus left on my hands to the Franklin Circuit. After much fervent prayer to Almighty God for counsel in this matter, I appointed our venerable brother, the Rev. Laban Smith, to the superintendency of the Circuit. Since which, he writes me that he has been on to his work, and met with a cordial reception from the friends generally, who rejoiced to receive him as their minister for the balance of the year. He thinks, notwithstanding the secession of brother Bamford and 22 members, the Circuit will be saved, and our cause sustain but little or no injury.

Feb. 5 to 9.—Washtenaw Circuit.—Here again God made bare his arm in the awakening and conversion of sinners; our congregations were large and attentive to the word. More favorable indications of a general work I have seldom seen. Our brethren design to protract the meeting.

Feb. 11 to 15.—Eaton Rapids.—We have seldom in this country addressed larger or more intelligent congregations than attended our meeting at this place. We were permitted to occupy the Methodist Episcopal Church; and could the meeting have been continued a few days, we have every reason to believe we should have witnessed an extensive revival of the work of God here; but being taken very sick, we were reluctantly compelled to give over the effort.—We shall long cherish the recolection of our visit to this pleasant little village.

Feb. 16 to 20.—Marshall Circuit.—The Quarterly meeting held at Rice Creek was not in vain in the Lord. On Sabbath morning, at the close of Love-feast, 10 young converts gave in their names for membership, and were duly received. When I left, the meeting was still in progress and the work increasing.

Feb. 26 to 27.—Quarterly meeting at the meeting house on Prairie Ronde.—We were favored with the labors of our Conference Missionary, Rev. D. G. Oaks, who protracted the meeting several days, with some success. Several experienced religion and several were reclaimed.

Br. Oaks has just closed a series of meetings on the Lagrange Circuit, which resulted in over 100 converts, and between 90 and 100 added to the Methodist Protestant Church. The Superintendent of Valparaiso Ct. writes me he has nearly doubled the membership on his work since Conference.

The labors of Br. Newhouse, an unstationed preacher, have been crowned with success on some parts of the Van Buren and Barre Circuits; about 20 have experienced religion and united with our Church.

As a Conference, our prospects are brightening, but we are exceedingly deficient in ministerial help: several Circuits unsupplied. We would send out in behalf of the Conference, a long and earnest "Macedonian cry" to the surplus ministry of older Conferences, "Come over and help us!" With a pleasant and fertile country, an intelligent population, good roads, Circuits already formed, good homes, warm friends, cordial reception, and a sure reward in the final issue, we bid you a hearty welcome.

Yours, respectfully,

W. B. MACK.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, April 20, 1848.

☞ New subscribers this week, 13. Discontinuances, 2. That other list also in our Business Department, has had two accessions this week. Keep the ball moving, brethren.

"Restrictive Rule."—Our writers are getting along somewhat with their discussion on this question. We have in hand Br. Springer's No. 3, and an article by Br. W. S. S. on "The Convention of 1830, and the Restrictive Rule." We however deferred them another week to give our friend "Homo" his turn. We have to avoid giving too much space, at a time, to one subject. We have also received "Homo's" No. 4. It would make quite a book. What will become of "Joseph?"

From Cincinnati.—We have been much cheered by the receipt of a private letter from our old friend and brother T. Finkbine, superintendent of the Elm Street Mission. A series of meetings had been held in his church and also in that of Br. Dalby of the George St. Mission, attended with encouraging results. He writes that the health of Br. Stockton is improving. His congregations at the 6th Street Station are very large. Br. T. intends furnishing us a more particular statement for publication, after his ensuing Quarterly meeting. He sends us seven new subscribers, all of whom, he assures us, are of the right sort. Thank you, kind brother. A more acceptable present could hardly have been transmitted.

The Earthquake.—We have been assured by various persons of different neighborhoods in the surrounding country, that they very sensibly experienced two successive shocks of earthquake on the the evening of the 6th inst. This was simultaneous with the occurrence here, which we spoke of in our last week's paper. We have also received information that the same was experienced at Marietta, Somerset, Columbus and Chillicothe. But we do not as yet meet with statements in any of our exchanges that the phenomenon was observed at any points further off. This surprises us. Scott's Weekly however, speaks of a brilliant display of Aurora Borealis, witnessed by the Philadelphians on the said evening of the 6th inst. We also witnessed the last named phenomenon from this point, on that evening, though not very brilliant.

Bunyan's Immortal Work.—The London Tract Society have aided to print the Pilgrim's Progress in twenty-three languages, in Europe, Asia, Africa and the South Seas.

Godey's Lady's Book.—The May number has just come to hand, and is very fine. "The Queen of May" is an exquisite piece of workmanship, printed in colors! Then we have, "A spring Flower," (mezzotint) Original Music, Fashion Plate, Patterns for Window Curtains, Model Cottages, Ladies Work Department Illustrations, &c. Godey has such a run for the 'Book' that he has to enlarge his edition every month. L. A. Godey, Publisher, Philadelphia. Three Dollars per year. We are authorized to act as Agent.

Fugitives in Canada.—Rev. Edward Smith of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, has been taking a missionary tour in Canada, to look after the religious and educational interests of the colored fugitive emigrants in that country. We have before us two letters from his pen, in the Clarion of Freedom, giving an interesting account of the condition of the colored settlements in Canada West. He represents that the number of fugitives from Slavery there, is not less than 25,000, and that the number is steadily increasing. He states that during last season, not less than 1000 made their escape from Kentucky alone. Says he:—"The colored people of Canada are a picked lot; none but persons of enterprise and great energy of character, can get there. The way is too difficult for any others to reach that land."

He represents however that after the fatigues and exposures of a critical pilgrimage in pursuit of the North Star of freedom, they reach Canada in a state of destitution, and usually late in the season. And the number is so great, that the previous settlers, have not the means to prevent them from extreme suffering, in the rigors of their first winter in Canada. Hence Br. S. appeals to the friends of humanity for aid in their behalf, to be contributed in money, clothing or bedding, new or second handed. He is himself, an agent for the object, soliciting contributions in all places visited by him in the States. But a chief part of his mission is to solicit and procure means to erect one meeting house, & two school houses, for the benefit of settlers of the above description. We believe that he is considerably successful in collecting from all classes and denominations.

In regard to the opportunities of settlers in Canada, he says that there is abundance of government lands to be obtained in lots of 100 acres, but in no less quantities, at from one to two dollars per acre, and the purchaser can have ten years to pay for it. His description of the country will be interesting to our readers. We take the following extracts.

I said in my last that the country was a good one for either white or black men. The soil is of the very best quality, so far as I saw. I say the very best, for, being raised a farmer, and having felt a deep interest in that business all my life, I consider myself a judge of soil, having paid much attention to the subject. The climate is far more mild than I had judged previous to my visit to the province; being in the West, & between 42° & 43° North latitude, South of Western New York, and the greater part of New England; also the greater part of Michigan, all of Wisconsin, part of Iowa and Illinois, and being bounded by Lakes Erie, St Clair and Huron on the South, and West. The temperature is softer by the influence of such large bodies of water, so that in point of temperature it has a decided advantage over many portions of the States. Indian corn and Tobacco grow well there, and get ripe before frost comes in the fall. I saw very large corn there, the yellow gourd seed of the States, and also the large yellow corn and the white flint, large, sound and ripe; and I learned that they raised from fifty to sixty bushels to the acre: and I heard that as much as one hundred bushels had been raised on an acre. Potatoes and turnips grow remarkably well, and much of the land is very good for wheat; but some is too rich and flat, which is first rate for grass and, with a little labor in dunging, can be made good corn land. Canada is a great country, indeed I have seen few, if any places, in my extensive travels which present greater inducements to enterprising farmers; and to this good land, Providence has lead the poor trembling fugitive, and calls on us to bless him there.

The fugitives are principally farmers, this was their business in the States, and when they went to Canada they fell into their former callings, because they could do nothing else. They settled on leased or government lands, cleared up farms and by so doing have so increased the value of the land that they are unable to purchase it and the whites are now buying those improved lands, and the colored people have to begin again in the woods. I was in a settlement where I saw two school houses, in one of which Br. Rice taught his first school; but such was the unsettled state of the people, by reason of the whites buying the lands they had cleared up, that they had given up the idea of having any more school in either of them. The persons thus compelled to leave the lands they had taken from the wilderness, were entering lands of government as noticed in my former number, so that the next farm they cleared up might be their own. Some have lands of their own, and have pretty good improvements; but they are few, the many live on government or leased land. And the great point now to be gained is to have owners of the soil and improvers for themselves, and children. This leaves but little of their means for educational or religious purposes; hence they must go unblessed in these respects, unless we bless them.

Can it be so?—We meet with the following in an exchange paper, and feel constrained to doubt the correctness of the statement. We hope to learn that there is some mistake in the matter.

"Beauties of Slavery.—Martha Christian has been committed before the Court of Wood Co., Va., of the crime of teaching a female slave to read the Bible, and sentenced to imprisonment for ten years in the Penitentiary."

Since penning the above, we have met with the following in the Baltimore Sun, which is doubtless correct.

"A Difficult Case.—The Quakers in Virginia seem to be placed in a peculiar relation to the laws of Virginia. The Yearly Meeting of Baltimore, to which they belong, has charged all its members to educate the free colored people.—The laws of Virginia forbid it; and the Friends have addressed a memorial to the General Assembly of the State of Virginia, asking liberty to pursue the advice of their Yearly Meeting. If liberty is not given, we do not know what course Friends will take."

Ladies' Nat. Magazine.—The May number is received. The engravings are, The Sciote Girl, and the Fashion plate, finely colored. The number contains numerous seasonable articles pertaining to spring time, "House Cleaning," Seedtime, May Flowers, &c., which are very interesting. The contributors are mostly ladies, of talent. C. J. Peterson, Publisher, Philadelphia. $2 per year.

College Meeting.

Gratiot, April 0., 15, 1848.

Pursuant to adjournment the college meeting was organized by calling Brother Munhall to the chair:

The meeting was led in prayer by the President Brother Munhall, after which he proceeded to announce the object of the meeting.

Brothers C. Springer and E. S. Hoagland (by request) proceeded to address the meeting; upon the necessity and importance of an institution of learning on the Muskingum District, of the M. Protestant Church; after which the reading of the resolutions of the previous meeting; which was done by the Secretary. Brother C. Springer then offered the following preamble and resolutions.

Whereas there is no way of properly getting the sentiment of the Church in relation to our contemplated institution of learning until the sitting of the next Muskingum Annual Conference, and whereas such an institution is much needed in this section of the country; and it would be inconvenient to wait so long, therefore,

Resolved, 1st. That we will make an effort to raise the means, and erect a suitable building.

Resolved, 2d. That we will rely with confidence upon the church to furnish a library and philosopical apparatus, and upon the Muskingum Conference in particular to use their influence to obtain scholars for the institution.

Resolved, 3d. That the building shall be situated either in Gratiot or Brownsville, according to the choice of the subscribers. The subscription papers when circulated to be laid off in two columns, one headed Brownsville, the other headed Gratiot, each subscriber to be requested to place his name in both, and the amount opposite his name when footed shall determine the cite.

Resolved, 4th. That the chair appoint a committee of three for each village to circulate subscription papers and that these committees be called upon to report proceedings to the next college meeting to be held in Brownsville on this day six weeks, to which meeting all are invited to attend.

Signed,

WM. MUNHALL, Ch'n.

News of the Week.

[Telegraphed for the Baltimore Sun.]

Charleston, S. C., April 11, 1848.

Fatal Railroad Accident.—A melancholy accident, involving loss of life, occurred on the Georgia and South Carolina railroad, within a few miles of this city. While the train was at a moderate speed, the boiler of the locomotive exploded. Two gentlemen, one named George Artope, the other Henry Cammers, and the fireman, whose name I have not learned, were instantly killed. They were dreadfully mangled and bruised by the concussion. All were married, and have left families to mourn their sad fate.

Election of Mayor.—We learn that John Robertson, Esq., was elected Mayor of Hagerstown, Md. on Monday last.

A Narrow Escape.—The cars which left Baltimore on Saturday evening, approaching Havre de Grace, at a greater speed than usual, from being rather behind time, the locomotive was detached while under full headway, the consequence was, that before the cars could be arrested, they had run three quarters over the ferry boat that takes the passengers over the Susquehanna, and in another instant one hundred persons would have been precipitated down a declivity of thirty feet into twenty feet of water! Fortunately, however the cars stopped within five feet of the extreme limit of the boat, and a dreadful catastrophe was averted.—N. Y. Mirror.

Dead Sea Expedition.—The Washington Union learns by a letter from Constantinople, 27th February that Lieut. Lynch and some of his officers have arrived there on their way to the Dead Sea. They were to leave Constantinople in a few days, and hope to be at the end of their journey by the latter part of March, or early in April.—Our minister had an audience of the Sultan for Lieut. Lynch—an honor which has been rarely granted to any officer lower than an admiral or commodore.

Steamer Hibernia & the Br. Barbara.—It will be remembered that the survivors of the British brig Barbara, wrecked off Newfoundland, reported that Capt. Shannon, of the steamer Hibernia, refused to render them any assistance, water, &c. Captain S. reported on his arrival at Liverpool, "Spoke March 2, lat. 46 lon. 53. Barbara, of and for Halifax, short of water, and owing to a heavy gale was unable to supply her."

The Law's Delay.—A case was decided last week in Fairfax county, Va., which had been in Chancery for twenty years. The parties were Lee v. Chichester. The decision was for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals! So the end is not yet.

A Letter from Father Matthew, received by the Hibernia, states that circumstances have lately occurred, which will render it necessary to postpone his visit to this country till fall, instead of coming this season.

Appointment by the President.—J. W. Lugenbeel, of Maryland, to be commercial agent of the United States at Monrovia, in Liberia.

A Family Burned to Death.—We learn from West Bloomfield, says the Newark (N. J.) Advertiser, of Wednesday, that a fire broke out in a frame building at Mount Prospect, five and a half miles from that city, about 11 o'clock on Tuesday night, after the family had retired, which consumed the building with the family of the tenant, a Mr. Sturr, who alone escaped.—Mr. Sturr was alarmed by a colored man who threw stones against the building for the purpose of waking him; when he jumped from the window of the second story to the ground, after requesting his wife to follow him, but for some reason she was unable to do so, and remained in with her three children, the eldest being 17 years of age, and they all perished in the flames together!

Sharp Rebuke.—"I never go to church," said a country tradesman to his parish clergyman, "I always spend Sunday in settling accounts." The minister immediately replied, "You will find, sir that the day of Judgement will be spent in the same manner."

Desperate Incendiarism in Pittsburgh.

Fires—Incendiaries.—No less than three fires occurred on Saturday night, the 8th instant, between ten and one o'clock, in different parts of the city. The first broke out about half past 10, in a frame shed, used as a stable, situated on Plum Alley, near Grant Street, and in the rear of the tavern lately occupied by George H. Bell, and at present by three brothers—Messrs. Hagey.—From this shed it communicated to an adjoining one, and thence to a large two story brick stable, also situated in the tavern yard. The two sheds were entirely consumed, and with them two fine horses, which belonged to Alexander McRoberts, and another, the property of a stranger from Ohio. The upper part of the brick stable, with a quantity of hay, was consumed, but all the horses, mules, &c., were taken out safely. The fire communicated to the shutters of a smoke house, cornering on Plum Alley and Grant St., which was filled with meat; but here, most fortunately, the devastation was arrested.

Whilst the engines were still playing upon this fire, another broke out in another small frame stable, on the hill, above the canal, and south of Seventh street, at the opening of the Tunnel. This stable was owned by Mr. W. Kirkpatrick, chandler, and was located close to the end of his chandlery, which fronts on 7th street. He informed us that his horse and cow, which were in the stable, had been untied by the incendiary, and thus escaped. This stable was of no value, and was quickly overturned and thrown down the steep bank of the canal. No other property injured.

Somewhere near one o'clock, a third fire broke out, also in a frame stable. This was situated between Irwin's Alley and Irwin Street, close in the rear of Wilmarth's Lumber Office, which fronts on Penn Street, the stable being in his lumber yard. The fire had been, apparently, thrown into the end of the hay loft, above the stable, and spread so rapidly, that here also two noble horses were consumed. Thence it spread to an adjoining stable in the same yard, in which another horse was haltered, which the owner succeeded in saving, at imminent risk of his own life. The poor brute, finding the flames reaching his back from above, and unable to break his halter, lay down, and remained passive till his humane owner untied the halter and set him free. The two horses lost were in the stable of Martin Connelly, baker, and belonged to him. The one saved belonged to James M'Elroy, and the stable was also his.

There can be scarcely a doubt that the last two fires were kindled by incendiaries. The first was probably accidental. Fiends must they be, who could thus torture noble brutes to death; and horrible the malignity which could kindle flames amid so many frame dwellings as were proximate to each of the two last fires.

The firemen merit unstinted praise for their promptitude and good management at all these fires,—without which an immense number of families must have been deprived of homes and a great deal of valuable property destroyed.—Pitts. Gaz.

FIRES.

Thursday, April 13, 1848.

Not a day passes that we are not called upon to record the occurrence of fires—the results of incendiarism. Stables have in every case been the buildings first fired, and from them the flames have extended to other buildings.

About half-past one o'clock yesterday morning, flames were discovered issuing from a stable near the corner of Seventh and Grant streets, & in a few minutes several adjacent buildings were in flames. Our readers will remember that the property in that quarter of the town is leased, and is mostly covered with old frame tenements. Although the firemen behaved with all their accustomed energy and courage, they could not stay the progress of the conflagration among materials so combustible until 23 buildings were destroyed. The streets in the neighborhood were crowded with the furniture removed from the burning houses, and by women and children left houseless by the catastrophe.

Among the buildings destroyed were the smoke houses of Holmes & Brother; Jordan & Son; and Kier & Jones. 715,000 lbs of Bacon were destroyed.

The spectacle presented at this fire was, if a sad one, still more imposing. The dry materials of the buildings, and the close construction of the houses rendered the work of destruction particularly rapid in its consummation. The immense sheet of flame and the heavy volumes of smoke rolling up over the city, recalled to all minds the great disaster of the 10th of April 1845. We are gratified to state, that so far as we could ascertain, no accident occurred, altho' from the crowds of spectators, and the active exertions of the firemen we were fearful that some persons would have been injured by the falling of the walls.

Scarce had the progress of the flames in this quarter been stayed when a stable on the corner of Washington and Liberty streets was discovered to be on fire. It burned down in a few minutes.

The paper warehouse of S. C. Hill, on the canal, between Penn street and the river, was the scene of the third fire. Two dwellings and the stable of the Citizen's Hotel were also destroyed at this place.

The fourth alarm was caused by the burning of two stables in O'Harra street, owned by Dr. McCracken.

The fifth and last was the burning of a house and stable on Etna street, near McClurg's foundry. In this fire two fine horses were burned to death.

This closed the disasters of the night; and when it is remembered that they were all, confessedly, the work of incendiarism, we submit whether some immediate action is not necessary on the part of our city authorities to insure more efficient watchfulness over the lives and property of the citizens.

P. S. Since the above was in type we have collected the following additional particulars.

The Bacon destroyed belonged to the following persons: lbs.

W. B. Holmes & Brother	120,000
James Dalzell	45,000
Jordan & Son	200,000
Carson & McKnight	200,000
Atcheson & Dagg	150,000
	715,000

The pork, as well as the smoke houses were fully insured. The Delaware Insurance Company is the principal sufferer.

The warehouse of Kier & Jones was much injured.

The loss of S. C. Hill is stated at $5,000 insured for $3000. Mr. H. had just obtained new machinery.

Six of the houses near Seventh street were owned by Mr. James Mackerel.

Three brick dwellings in the same neighborhood owned by Chambers & Bowmen, were destroyed. No insurance.

Three stables on Canal and Mulberry Alley, belonging to S. Biddle, were destroyed.

Five brick dwellings on Penn street were injured, but the insurance is sufficient to cover the loss.

Two dwellings on Mulberry Alley, owned by J. Morton, were entirely destroyed. No insurance.

A stable adjoining Mr. Hill's warehouse was also destroyed It was owned by Mr. Smith.

A stable and two dwellings were damaged on Etna street. The houses were owned by Dr. McCracken. The stable by Mr. McClurg. The horses burned here were owned by Mr. Flemming, who rented the stable.

Four stables and one ice house were destroyed, corner of O'Harra and Mulberry Alley. They were owned by J. Kearney. Some women in this neighborhood state that they saw a man enter one of the stables, and a few minutes after he came out, flames were discovered issuing from the building.

The stable of Mr. J. Briedenthal, proprietor of a Lawrenceville Omnibus Line, also caught fire, but was saved without sustaining much damage.—Pitts. Com. Journal.

A NEW STATE.—The project of erecting Long Island into a State, is now agitated. It has a larger area than Rhode Island or Delaware, and more inhabitants than several of the States.

GOOD.—The General Assembly of Maryland have passed a law prohibiting the sale of any kind of intoxicating liquors on Sunday.

SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—The several railway companies between Albany and Buffalo, at a meeting here a few days ago, adopted a resolution to discontinue the running of cars on Sunday, if the Postmaster General will assent thereto.—Roch. Dem.

THE ILLINOIS CANAL.—The Chicago Democrat says that not more than three thousand yards of work, embankment, stone work, &c., remain to be completed of the Canal. The steam tug, to bring the boats from the mouth of the Canal to the city, has been contracted for, and was to have been launched on the 1st inst.

Charles and Phil. went up the hill,
In France, across the water,
Charles fell down, and broke his crown,
And Phil. came tumbling after.

DESERTERS.—We apprehend that unnecessary severity is exercised towards deserters from our army in Mexico. A letter written at San Anglo, says: "I saw 16 men hung, and 16 men whipped and branded—again 30 more were hung."—It will be recollected that our soldiers have had hard times, have fought forty battles in Mexico, and gained many glorious victories. Many wish to return home, and if they should desert for that purpose, bad as the crime is, there are nevertheless extenuating circumstances, which should preserve their lives though they may forfeit their liberty.—N. Y. Sun.

TELEGRAPH DIVIDENDS.—The stockholders in the Louisville, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh line of Telegraph are informed that a dividend of five per cent. on the business of the last six months is declared, and will be paid on demand.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CANAL.—Messrs. Davis, Hale, and Allen, have completed the tour of observation along the unfinished line of the canal, and made their report to the president and directors of the company. We understand, says the Cumberland Civilian, that they speak very favorably of the progress of operations along the line, and express a confident belief that the canal can be finished by the time designated in the contract.—*Balt. 1802—Senator in the Legislature of Massachusetts.
1803—1808—Senator in Congress.
1808—Minister to Russia.
1811—Judge of the Supreme Court of the U. States.
1814—Chief Commissioner to negotiate a peace with Great Britain.
1815—Minister to Great Britain.
1817—Secretary of State.
1825—President of the U. States.
1831—1848—Representative in Congress.

At a Missionary Meeting held in New York on Monday, the Rev. Mr. Calhoun, from Syria, stated that in all that country, with a population of a million and a half, that not a single newspaper is published. In the entire region in which the Arabic language is spoken, comprising Syria, Arabia, Egypt, and the Barbara States, including a population of about forty millions, there is, he believed, only one, if indeed one, newspaper in that language, and only three or four in French or English. In Turkey, there is but one in the Turkish language, and that conducted by an Englishman. Here, he said, was an illustration of Mahommedanism, a religion which has no tendency to improvement in intellect, in morals, economics. He said the first newspaper in the Turkish dominions was started, like those in some other heathen countries, by American missionaries; and it is an interesting fact that American and Greek Journals are now copying religious as well as political intelligence from New York daily papers.

ACCIDENT.—Mr. Porter (son of the manager of the Pittsburgh Theatre) and a Mr. Black, connected with the Theatre, were thrown out of a buggy last Sunday on the Liberty street Road.—Their vehicle was run into by another, their horse took fright and dashed the buggy against a post, when both gentlemen were thrown out.—Mr. Black we are sorry to say was much injured, but Mr. Porter's hurts were slight.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

HORRID ACCIDENT.—A German woman, the wife of Louis Wanderer, met with a frightful accident yesterday morning. She was mixing lime, when, by some means, it flew into her eyes, putting them both out. The lime was dry and she poured hot water on it. The husband is a poor and industrious man, with a large family to support. His case is one demanding sympathy. —Pitts. Com. Journal.

Writing for Newspapers.

There are several questions which we should like every correspondent to ask himself, before sending an article to be printed.

1. Is the subject upon which I am writing, one in which the readers of the paper are likely to be interested or profited?

2. Have I reason to believe that I can throw any additional interest into the columns of the Church Journal?

3. Am I willing that the judgment of the Editor shall decide the propriety of publication, without subjecting him to my ill-will, in case he declines its publication?

4. Have I examined my manuscript with care, erased all unnecessary expressions; & in regard to orthography, punctuation, and style in general, have I made it as correct as I can make it?

The candid consideration of these queries might save us much trouble, and those who sometimes write for us no little mortification.—Meth. Prot.

FIRE.—About 2 o'clock last Saturday morning, the building on the Canal Basin, occupied as a warehouse by Charles McAnulty, was discovered to be on fire. A building adjoining was occupied as a stable, in which the fire was supposed to have orignated. Both buildings were destroyed entirely, together with a large quantity of flour and produce, and four horses. A very large quantity of bulk pork, we heard 300,000 pounds, belonging to the Messrs. Lippencott, was destroyed. The horses belonged to Mr. Boyd. Several drays were burned. We understand that none of the property was insured.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

MR. RUSH'S ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF THE REPUBLIC.—The Washington Union, of yesterday morning, contains the letter of Mr. Rush to his Government, giving an account of the events in France, and of the course he thought proper to pursue, from which we extract the following concluding paragraphs:

"This succient narrative will accurately apprize the President of what I have done. I shall anxiously await his judgment upon it all. The events were as new as momentous. They had transcended all expectations. In recognizing the new state of things as far as I could without your instructions, and in doing it promptly and solemnly, I had the deep conviction that I was stepping forth in aid of the great cause of order in France and beyond France—and that I was acting in the spirit and government of my country, the interpreter of whose voice it fell upon me suddenly to become. If I erred, I must hope that the motives which swayed me shall be my shield. The provisional government needed all the moral support attainable, after a revolutionary hurricane which shook society to its base, and left every thing at once portentous and trembling. In such an exigency, hours, moments were important; and the United States are felt as a power in the world, under the blow that has been struck.

"I am not unaware that the course I have pursued departs from diplomatic usage, and separates me, for the time being, from the European diplomatic corps accredited, like myself, to the late government of France; all the members of which will probably await instructions before adopting any steps of recognition. Having acted under a sense of independent duty in the emergency, I am, however, not the less aware that the diplomatic corps represents countries in friendly relations with the United States, and that it will hence be as much my duty as inclination to go on maintaining that amicable footing with its members, ever dictated by reciprocal goodwill among the representatives of friendly powers, whatever different forms of goverment they may represent."

STORM AND FLOOD IN WILLIAMSON COUNTY TENNESSEE.

The Franklin Review of last Friday states that the heavy rains on Monday night and Tuesday last raised Big Harpeth river to a height unprecedented for 40 years past. On Tuesday afternoon, the river was running across the Franklin and Nashville turnpike two feet deep. The damage done is immense. From all parts of the country, so far as we have heard, along every creek and water course, the devastation is very great—mills injured, rails and saw logs in immense numbers have been swept away, fencing destroyed, and on many bodies of land, just plowed and ready for planting, the soil has been almost entirely washed away.

THE PITTSBURG AND CLEVELAND RAILROAD.—Besides the subscription of $100,000 in her corporate capacity, the citizens of Cleveland have subscribed $50,000 in their individual capacity. The route from Hudson to Cleveland is to be immediately surveyed, with a view to put under contract in July.

SHOCKING MURDER.—Mr. James K. Patterson of Warren county, Ohio, was cruelly murdered, lately, in Vicksburgh. While in bed, some villian, unknown, broke his skull, with a colt, and then robbed him.

A WHOLE TOWN NEARLY DESTROYED.—The village of Troy, Bradford county, Pa., was entirely destroyed by fire on Tuesday last. Every store in the town except one was consumed.

The buildings destroyed were Jones' Grocery store, in the same building with Carnochan & Morgan's Saddlery and James Adam's Tailor shop; also Long's "Troy House;" O. P. Ballard's store and dwelling, Baird and Stenhen's Runyon's Maxwell's and Pomeroy's stores, &c.

Trials in Mexico.

We give to-day some interesting news from Mexico, but the Trials as reported are too voluminous for the entire publication. The short of it is, that General Worth declined prosecuting his charges against Gen. Scott. and Gen. Scott declined prosecuting against Gen. Pillow and Col. Duncan, but Pillow insisted on a trial, and a trial was consequently accorded to him. The Louisville Journal remarks, that "the facts present a very strong case indeed, against Gen. Pillow, and the testimony of Mr. Freaner seems to inculpate him beyond the possibility of vindication. Certainly no one can read the specifications, naming as they do, times, places, and witnesses, and then read Mr. Freaner's evidence without feeling that Gen. Pillow's disgrace is inevitable. The court of inquiry convened at the National Palace, March 15th, 1848. The members of the court were—

Brig. Gen. Nathan Towson, Pres't.
Brig. Gen. Caleb Cushing.
Col. W. G. Belknap.
Capt. Ridgely, Judge Advocate.—Cin, Com.

Sudden Death.

A man named John Coyle, a deck hand on the steamer Buckeye, dropped dead yesterday afternoon, upon the boat, while carrying a barrel of potatoes up the stairway to the boiler deck. He fell, when about half way up, the barrel falling down upon the forecastle, and he, a corpse, upon the stairs. It is supposed that he ruptured a blood vessel.—Cin. Com.

The Old World.

The condition of the old world is extremely equivocal. Disorganization and re-organization are the events of almost every day. Old fabrics are crumbling to ruins, and new elements are developing new structures. The blow recently struck by the French has excited intense interest the world over. Germany is in utter confusion. Revolution is rife through the land.—What is to be the end, no man can tell. The most intelligent are perplexed. Apprehension and alarm tread closely upon the heels of congratulation and triumph. The principles of free government, dearly as we treasure them, are susceptible of great abuse. How far the French are prepared for their present position time alone can determine.

The wide-spread influence of the philosophy of Fourier, and other semi-infidels, among the leading men of the French people, fills us with apprehension. Lamartine, the noble poet and warm-hearted patriot, it is said, is strongly tinctured with these notions. Others, we know, deny that he holds them. Nothing but Christianity will save the French, from successive scenes of anarchy, confusion and bloodshed. If their Christianity be the Christianity of Fourier, we have little confidence in the stability of the present experiment.

Nevertheless, our trust is in God. He is the King of Kings and Lord of Lords. We cannot but hope, that in all this commotion and strife, his providence with the children of men is being developed. Let the American Churches pray God in behalf of the "Old World," that the present new aspects of foreign affairs may be promotive of his glory and of general peace.—Meth. Prot.

Interesting Case.

The case of Cassius M. Clay, versus James B. Clay and Thomas M. Waters, removed by change of venue from the Fayette to the Jassamine circuit has closed. The ground of the suit was the removal of the press, type, &c., &c., of the True American from Lexington to Cincinnati by a Committee appointed by a meeting of the citizens of Fayette and adjoining counties held in August 1845. Messrs. J. B. Clay and T. H. Waters, were supposed to have been active in the removal of the press, &c.—hence the suit against them. In defence they pled that the course of the True American, rendered it a moral nuisance to society, and as such, it was abated in pursuance of the request of the meeting. The plaintiff demurred, and adjudged the plea bail.—The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff of $2,500 in damages, the value of the press, type, &c. Defendant prayed an appeal.

Capt. John Warwick, of Amherst county, Va. who died recently, by his will manumitted and made provisions for settling his slaves, 70 or 80 in number, in one of the western States.

At Matanzas, Cuba, on the 17th ult. the flags of all the vessels were at half mast in respect to the memory of John Q. Adams.

Important Decision.

A case of some importance to community, was recently decided in the Boston court of common pleas. The case was this. A trader made his entries on a slate which entries were transcribed to the daybook by his clerk at irregular intervals. The clerk not being able to testify to the items charged any further than that they were correctly transcribed, the court ruled that the defendant could not be permitted to swear to the correctness of his book, because they did not contain the original entries.

FATE OF KINGS.—The history of the latter Kings of France shows a remarkable succession of misfortunes:

Louis XVI guillotined; Louis XVII died of want; Louis XVIII twice exiled; Napoleon exiled; his son died in a foreign land; Charles X dethroned; Henry V proscribed; Louis Phillippe put to flight; the Count of Paris rejected.

Two thousand new buildings are under contract in and around Pittsburgh.

CHEAP FARE.—Competition on the North River has reduced the fare between N. Y. and Albany, to 12½ cents.

FIRE IN THE WOODS.—Several acres of woods, on the line of the Worcester (Mass.) Railroad, were burnt on Saturday from a spark from the locomotive. About the same time a fire was raging on the edge of Dover.

Br. Shipp, we have stopped sending to J. S. as requested. Hope he will inform us of his address, when he gets to Iowa, that we may send again. Ten numbers yet are due him. And then, we would not for a year's subscription, lose such a subscriber as Br. S.

Br. W. E. Martin, Ill., paid us for 1 year in advance from the time of last Gen. Conf. not quite two years ago.

Br. D. D. Hughes, as no small bills are in circulation in your parts, we trust you will shortly be enabled to procure more for us, so as to make up a larger note to send us.

Br. Sears, we find no opportunity yet to send the books. Can you not send for them?

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encournging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	17
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chaneyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	5
Rev. A. S. Robinson, Ridgefield Four Cor. O.	7
Rev. J. Nichols, Hoskinsville, O.	5
Rev. R. M. Dalbey, Bethel, O.	5
Rev. O. P. Stephens, Catawba, O.	6
Rev. C. H. Williams, Bouruville, O.	5
Rev. S. P. Kezerta, Bainbridge, O.,	7
Rev. T. Finkbine, Cincinnati, O.,	7

☞ We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

This law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS —The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year, for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

☞ All orders must be accompanied by the MONEY, post paid, to insure attention.

POET'S CORNER.

Written for the Western Recorder.

THE CHILD'S DREAM.

Oh, I have had a dream, mother,
So beautiful and strange;
Would I had slumbered ever,
And the vision never changed.

What didst thou dream, my dear one?
Thy look is bright and wild,
Thy mother's ear is ready
To listen to her child.

I dreamed I was at play, mother,
Beneath an orange tree,
When a white bird lit close by my side,
And sweetly sang to me.

O how sweet the bird did sing
As it rested on a bough,
I rose to catch the pretty thing,—
Methinks I see it now.

Its notes were clear and sweet,
And I lent a listening ear,
My little heart began to beat,
But not with dread or fear.

Just as I reached my hand to catch
The strange, but pretty bird,
It raised its pretty little wings,
When lo! a voice I heard,—

Saying, fear not little stranger,
For I will be thy guide,—
It led me to a manger,
Close by a river's side.

And when I'd reached the place, mother,
The white bird seemed to say,
Look, and I turned my eyes,
And saw a sleeping infant lay.

Its cradle was a manger,
And straw its little bed,
A maiden fair set by its side,
To guard its little head.

Again the white bird warbled,
Its notes were soft and low—
It bade me rise and follow
Wherever it might go.

It led me on, and on, mother,
Through groves and fields of light,
Until we came to one sweet spot
Which dazzled, 'twas so bright.

As tremblingly I entered,
An angel form drew near,
And bade me welcome thither,
Nor harm nor danger fear.

I knew no person there, mother,
I only felt 'twas bliss,—
I joined the angel song,
Canst thou interpret this?

What else didst thou behold
My child? tell to your mother dear,
Thy look doth seem so bright and wild
It fills my heart with fear.

Why doth my daughter tremble so?
Come, tell me all thy dream;
Is not thy mother's ear inclined
To listen to thy theme?

I saw a great white throne, mother,
And some one set thereon;
A shining bow around his head,
Too bright to look upon.

Thousands of shining forms stood by,
All drest in purest white;
With crowns and stars upon their heads,
O 'twas a lovely sight!

They sang so loud and sweet
And did so real seem,
I clapped my hands in extacy
Which 'woke me from my dream.

Now tell me, dearest mother,
The meaning of all this—
The infant in the manger,—
The shining place of bliss.

My daughter, listen to me,
You'll know when you do die,
The meaning of the vision
You saw beyond the sky.

What means the smiling infant,
That in the manger lay?
Do tell me all about it,
My mother, dear, I pray.

The sleeping babe was Jesus,
With his mother by his side,
The white oird was the Holy Ghost,
Who is the christian's guide.

The blissful place was heaven,
The shining ones the blessed,
Whose sins are all forgiven—
They have entered into rest.

A song no one can learn to sing
But followers of the Lamb—
They sing the song of Moses,
To God, the "great I am."

"The babe of Bethlehem" was his name
And glory crowned his head.
The person seated on the throne,
Once in a manger laid.

If you are good, my daughter,
And pray from day to day,
You'll go at death where Jesus is,
And sing that heavenly lay.

Restrictive Rule.

REPLY III.

The 2d premises viz. "It is not necessary to an efficient Itinerancy," of Br. Joseph, in turn now demands from us our consideration, and we think that in this article we will be enabled to convince him that he is not consistent, and that his premises as laid down will not stand the test of experience and reason. "In reference to the removal of ministers, I have nothing to say, I do desire a settled ministry:"—now mark this position, "I have nothing to say against the removal of ministers" here is an admission that it is right, that it is good, and consequently, must be in accordance with the will of the Divine Mind, and must continue, as it ever has done, to redown to the glory of the majesty of the Universe. Now we ask what has become of the real ground of controversy, this admission by Br. Joseph, has left him without a single prop suspended in the vast eternity of space;* and now for his consistency. "I do desire a settled ministry," for an individual to say, "I do not desire" a thing, or wish to accomplish an object, and then turn right-about and use all his energies, to pull down a law which expressly forbids, and must prohibit this state of things from ever taking place, so long as it remains in existence. What think you of his consistency? and further he advocates a policy which to say the least of it, does not prohibit, and may eventually (and will in many instances) lead to a settled ministry, if this be consistency may Heaven save me and all my brethren from it.

He then proceeds and admits the correctness of the present system in appointing ministers, and then says, "But the reason inducing the change and the end to be accomplished by it, is that which presents itself for consideration in answer to the inquiry proposed:" he then states the object to be accomplished by the ministry, viz: the glory of God, &c., which is all right, but what has this to do with obliterating the restrictive principle from the constitution of the church. He then states what is an efficient Itinerancy which we also admit, and we conscientiously believe that we now have in operation, one of the most efficient systems which has ever been devised by human wisdom and in support of this opinion we appeal to the history of the church? We will here say a few words by way of answering his argument that acquantance and confidence are essential to an efficient Itinerancy, now with regard to personal acquaintance this is a small business, he certainly does not think when he is penning such remarks he must be dreaming that the Pittsburgh Annual Conference is composed of different ministers every year and that they come from the extreme quarter of the continent and consequently never have seen each other before and never will again. But look at the thing as it is, the district composed of but a small territory, the ministers meet annually, the people send up their delegates to meet eight and ten days, every year, & consequently they become not only acquainted by character but personally, with every minister in the district, and the people or members through their delegates (with whom they have daily intercourse) for an acquaintance intimate enough to satisfy their minds with regard to every preacher in the Conference; but not only this, but by the efficiency of our present system many of our oldest preachers are not only personally acquainted in some of the stations and circuits but throughout the district.

In regard to confidence, in this case his admission is too strong to be over-turned by any argument which he can advance, that is, "that the Conference appoint him," what a shame it would be that any man should be a preacher and a member of the Pittsburgh Annual Conference, of the Methodist Protestant Church, who was unworthy the confidence of any people. Again there are different grades of talent, each of which may be especially suited to certain conditions and characters of the various charges, to be supplied, or in other words, like the "virgins" some are wise and some are foolish, now Br. Joseph who are the wise Preachers and who are the foolish, you must make the classification and say to what circuit the wise shall go, and to which the foolish, if this be not a fair inference we must confess we cannot understand our language, and if it be correct, the Preacher who could write such a sentence in regard to his brethren should blush in deepest shame.

With regard to the remark, that our present system leads to indolence and idleness, upon the part of our Preachers, how far it is correct, we appeal to every individual who has any acquaintance with them, & I as an individual must avail myself of this favorable opportunity to say that in my opinion take our preachers as a body, there is as much talent and information amongst them, as is to be found in any other branch of the church; and consequently this objection to our present system falls to the ground. Who is this insinuation intended for viz: "This may be as long as some would be wanted to remain" we learn the Brethren of the ministry to enquire amongst themselves; but would, say such things comes with a bad grace from an individual professing to be a minister of Christ. In regard to the "pecuniary disadvantage" we do think if the people do not complain of the heavy expense, the Preacher should not. This disposition of "novelty" which Br. Joseph speaks of as having been created amongst our people, through the operations of our present system, now what he can have taken this idea from, we can not divine, certainly not from observation, he however may possibly, from experience as there is always some even amongst us professing to be Preachers, whose congregations from self-importance—pride—novelty, or some other cause will forever grow down hill; but so far as we are acquainted with our congregations, in general they will compare in number and in respectability, with any other christian denomination, considering the age and opposition of the church.

"And to this same desire for novelty we trace the fact that many of our aged and experienced men would be literally neglected if sent to many of the appointments while the services of the young and experienced men are called for merely because they go farther in pandering to suit this vitiated taste," with regard to this argument against our present system, we do most sincerely believe it is erroneous, from the fact, that whilst we are writing we have in our mind every aged and experienced man in the Conference, in connexion with the circuits & stations, and we would challenge Br. Joseph to produce an instance in support of his argument, and we are satisfied, that he can not find one upon the records of the church. We know what this idea has grown out of, it is from the course which is generally pursued by the delegates to the Annual Conference, in calling for the preachers, and we are satisfied that they are actuated by different motives than are attributed to them by Br. Joseph, it is not because the circuits and stations, as his argument would imply, do not really desire the services of our "aged and experienced" brethren;—that they are not called for by the circuits and stations, through their representatives, but it is for the reason, that they know that they can not obtain them: the interest of the church requiring their services elsewhere, and another consideration is that many of the circuits are as it were but a nucleus, and consequently are not able to give to our experienced men that pecuniary assistence which their circumstances would actually demand, this is the reasoning of the delegates & are frequently spoken of amongst themselves when at Conference though many of them as was stated upon the floor of Conference, may not have "three ideas above an Oyster."

We stated in the onset, that Br. Joseph's arguments would not stand the test of experience, with regard to the Apostle's system, of ministry. we cannot conceive the cases as being analagous, from the consideration that they were the indirect authors of the gospel, as well as its expounders, and the ministry of the present day are simply the explainers of the gospel, as given to us of Christ through his Apostles: who were influenced in their operations by circumstances of an altogether different character, being led and directed by the immediate interposition of the Holy Ghost.

His example, the Cumberland Presbyterians as having more efficiency in their system of ministration than ours, a man to make such a statement must be groping his way through the world with his eyes closed, we concede, that to be the most efficient, which accomplishes the most in a given time, as a general thing this church has confined its oppositions to the cities and large towns, for instance they have not a congregation in N. Western Virginia, so much for the "efficiency" of their system, but how widely different with regard to Methodism, that has found its way not only into cities and towns—but villages, neighborhoods and even into the most remote regions where God's creatures are to be found, and through his blessings saved them from darkness and spiritual death, and this example will hold good throughout the length and breadth of our happy country, and wherever one of God's ministers has found his way, if the first is not a Methodist, there is one close on his track, and thus through the efficiency, of the present system of Methodism wonders have been accomplished, and to God be all the HONOR.

Narrative.

From the Methodist Protestant.

HOW A NEWSPAPER WAS INSTRUMENTAL IN PRODUCING A REVIVAL MEETING.

Hans Van Gruber was a sturdy German settler in the town of B——, in the State of Pennsylvania. He had been carefully educated after the maner of his fore-fathers, and had risen to some eminence in the county where he resided. To smoke his pipe, attend to his farm, pay his debts, lay by money, vote on days of election, and go to Church twice on the Sabbath, was with him a fulfilment of the entire circle of duties belonging to the present state of existence. These properly attended to, Hans felt that the interests of the future were all secure. He was a good neighbor—a good husband—a good father, and a good citizen; and, as a matter of course, Hans felt that he was a very good Christian. His 'vrow' was a thrifty, tidy housewife, free from all modern notions of fashion and extravagance, and their only aughter, Katharina, was as blooming, cherry-cheeked a damsel as ever carried a milking-pail to the dairy, or shot piercing darts from black eyes, into the bosoms of neighboring rustic swains.

Hans had been for some years, a prominent member of the village Lutheran Church. He had been elevated to the important post of elder, and from this circumstance felt that the interests of religion were in some sort committed to his keeping. Hans was not a man to shrink from any duty imposed upon him—much less from duties so responsible and important as those enjoined by the Church. He had been the bosom friend of the staid old pastor, who for many years had preached to them, baptised and married their children, and performed the solemn ceremonies of the funeral rites. In short, Hans was a happy man in his own peculiar way, and but for the death of the good old minister afore mentioned might to this day have remained in undisturbed possession of his wonted quietude.

But this world is a world of change, and sad changes, as some regard them, came over the town of B—— and the little Lutheran Church in that neigeborhood. On the death of the good old patriarch, who for forty years had preached to them after the old fashion, which admits of an occasional doze, without much loss of important points, it became necessary to call a new preacher. The young folks were delighted with the prospect of a change, but the 'old folks' shook their heads with doubtful significance. At length the new preacher came among them. He was a man of deep piety, considerable earnestness of delivery, a tolerable education, and of great report as a revivalist, or new-measure man. But a short time had elapsed after his installation, before the 'anxious bench,' as it is called among our Lutheran brethren, was introduced. It was crowded with penitents. A commotion, such as had never before been witnessed in that vicinity, was realised. Men & women trembled before the power of the Gospel, and there were large accessions to the Church of those who professed to know God in the pardon of their sins.

To all this Hans scarcely new what to say. At first he was rather pleased with the new preacher, but when his 'new measures' began to show themselves, Hans hesitated. His father and his mother had been Lutherans of the right stamp—they were dead, and no doubt had gone safely to Heaven, and they had needed no such 'new measures' to help them on their pilgrimage to the skies. Where was the necessity now, to bring up a new-fashioned religion?

"It ish all wrong," said Hans. "De man ish a metotist! He vill ruin de young beoples!—Mine face shall be set aginst all sich toings."

With this sage resolution floating in his mind, Hans went home from the meeting one night, after hearing a sermon of great warmth and impressiveness. He entered thoughtful and silent For two days he scarcely spoke to his wife or daughter. When he broke his taciturnity, it was simply to express his prohibition of either of them attending upon the ministry of the newcomer hereafter. The command was heard with astonishment, but not a word of expostulation was uttered. Hans was master of his own household, and there his word was the law.

Nor was Hans alone in his displeasure and moodiness. Some half dozen old German farmers were equally dissatisfied. They met often together to talk over the troublous times upon which they had fallen; and to consult upon the best measures to be pursued to remedy, if possible the growing evil. At length they determined to address the Synod with a statement of their grievances, and beseech that fatherly body to remove the noisy "metodist" from among them, and send them a man who was a good old German Lutheran.

On the night appointed for the formal preparation of the address to the Synod, Hans repaired to the house of Henrich Zeiber, where the formidable committee of "old setlers" had determined to meet for consultation. His wife and Katharine were alone, the former busily engaged in knitting a stocking for the foot of her grave lord, the latter in hemming an apron for her mother. After they had remained some time in silence, the mother looked up from her knitting, and seeing Katharina busily engaged in reading that excellent paper, the "Lutheran Observer," spoke somewhat angrily for her waste of time, and commanded her to go to her work directly. But, to her surprise, Katharina spoke not a word in reply, nor did she cease reading the paper.

"What is the matter with you, Katharina, that you cannot hear me what I speak to you?" said the mother still more angrily.

"Oh, mother," said the daughter, "listen! I am reading here an account of the Judgement-day. You and I, mother will have to stand at the Bar of God! Oh, hear what is said of the account we must then give!"

Katharina hereupon read for some time to her mother, a startling and vivid description of the day of doom. But she was at length interrupted by the exclamation,

"Are you crazy, Katharina?"

"No, mother; but I feel strangely. I never felt so before. I feel as confident, if I die as I now am, I shall go to Hell, as if I were already there!"

The good old mother was thunderstricken. She verily believed her daughter to be deranged. Instantly she despatched a servant to the house of Henrich Zeiber, with a message for the speedy return of Hans. It was a most unfortunate interruption of the business of the committee; for, having concluded the smoking of a pipe of tobacco each, they had just arranged themselves for farther deliberation, and were oppressed with the most weighty considerations for the well-being of their neighborhood.

Hans soon informed his associates of the calamity in his own household. He was less alarmed, however, than one might have expected; and remarking that his daughter had become a little troublesome to the old woman, he signified his unquestionable ability soon to cure all ailments, and concluded by proposing an adjournment to his own house, for the farther settlement of the matter pending before them, which proposal was unanimously approved, and at once put into execution.

On arriving at the door of his house, for the first time Hans felt embarrassed. A mysterious indefinite feeling overcame him; and, in spite of himself, his knees trembled, and his heart beat quickly. What was there to alarm him? He could not tell. But still his heart beat with a rapidity to which for years it had been a stranger; his resolution seemed all at once to forsake him utterly; and as he opened the door of his cottage and entered, his friends following close upon his heels, he met the anxious gaze of his daughter, and absolutely quailed before the terrific earnestness with which she looked upon him.

For a moment all was silence, and an awe deep and powerful, seemed to rest upon the little company. At length the daughter said.

"Father—my dear father—I am a sinner. Will you not pray for your daughter, that she perish not in the wrath of the day of Judgment!"

A new idea seemed to break in upon Hans. For a moment he breathed more freely. Shaking his head, in a manner which indicated his perception of the true state of affairs, he said,

"Yish—yish—it ish all blain—dish girl ish bin goin' to de metodist meatin'."

His wife attempted to assure Hans that such was not the case—but she had scarcely uttered a word, when the passionate exclaimations of the daughter were heard crying,

"For the love of my soul, Father, pray that your daughter sink not into Hell?"

"Vot shall I too!" exclaimed Hans; "Vot shall I too. I cannot bray! Henrich you bray!"

But Henrich shook his head, and signified thereby, that it was a performance with which he was not particularly familiar.

"No," said the daughter; "not one of you can pray! You are prayerless, as I have always been. Never have I been taught to pray, as I should have been. Father, the Bible declares us all to be sinners! You, and mother, and I, all these neighbors will have to stand before God in the day of Judgement, and if we are all sinners then—we will be sent to Hell, where we shall be burned in fire and brimstone! Oh, if you can none of you pray, kneel down with me, and I will try! We will ask God to have mercy on us—and it may be he will hear our prayers."

As she spoke, the trembling of her Father increased. It was like electricity passing from one to another, until the mother, and the sage committee-men, all shared in its powerful impulses. Prostrate upon their knees fell the company, and with such earnestness, as seldom characterises petition, went up the prayer of that unschooled heart, burdened with a consciousness of its guilt. God heard, and the Spirit descended. Such another shout is seldom heard by the ears of hovering angels, from assemblages of men and women on earth. It was not alone from the voice of the daughter. Hans had groaned until groaning would not suffice him. He began to cry aloud for mercy. Mingled with his petitions were those of his neighbors who surrounded him, and of the wife of his bosom. It was a great time—a glorious time—a converting time! Prayer was ere long lost in praise, and the dawn of the morning broke in upon as happy a household as ever rejoiced in the mercy of forgiving love!

But the address to the Synod? What of that, says the reader. It was never spoken of afterwards, and to this day the new preacher is unmolested in his advocacy of "new measures" and revival meetings!

Reading Proof.

No one, perhaps, that is not acquainted with the practical part of an editor's life, is aware of the amount of labor that is to be undergone, in this department of it. Column after column of printed matter is furnished him by the compositor, and it devolves upon him to rectify all mistakes. Nor is this, as it might appear, an easy task. To strike out all superfluous and defective, and supply all omitted letters, to see that the punctuation is as it should be, to call attention to "spaces" appearing when they should not, to mark the improper separation of words, &c., &c.;—all this, as any one can testify who has tried it, is no trifling undertaking. Especially must it be so regarded, in view of the facts, that uneasiness is produced by the frequent readings which are necessary for this purpose, and that, as the eye is apt to pass over the matter in hand, at each succeeding time, in precisely the same line which it at first took, there is a fretting suspicion continually that some errors, after all, (as too often proves to be the case,) are overlooked. There are, however, from this as from all other employments of man, lessons of instruction to be derived. 1. The editor learns that many errors in this world are unintentional, and that if they are pointed out they will be corrected.—2. As it is more difficult for him to notice inaccuracies in his own articles, than in those of correspondents, he is reminded how apt the human heart is to detect the faults of others, even whilst concealing its own. 3. He learns to appreciate the works of others, even though they may not seem to him to be the product of much toil.—4. He is impressed with the importance of rectifying mistakes, whilst yet they may be, before that great and terrible day of the Lord shall come, from the decisions of which there shall be no appeal, and when "he that is righteous shall be righteous still, and he that is filthy shall be filthy still."

ANECDOTES.

Not having met with the following anecdote in the English language, we translate it for the benefit of those who do not understand the original.—Ex. Paper.

LUTHER AND HIS MAID SERVANT.—Luther had a domestic residing in his house by the name of Elizabeth, who in a fit of displeasure left without giving the family any notice. She subsequently fell into habits of immorality, and became dangerously ill. In her sickness she requested a visit from Luther. On taking his seat at her bedside, he said: "Well, Elizabeth, what is the matter?" I desire, she replied, to ask your pardon for leaving your family so abruptly; but I also have something else weighing very heavily on my conscience: I have given my soul away to Satan! "Why," rejoined Luther, "that's of no great consequence;—what else?" I have, continued she done many wicked things but that is what oppresses me, that I have deliberately sold my poor soul to the devil, and how can such crime ever find mercy? "Elizabeth, listen to me," rejoined the man of God, "suppose while you lived in my house, you had sold and transferred all my children to a stranger, would the sale of transfer have been lawful and binding?" Oh no; said the deeply humbled girl, for I had no right to do that. "Very well, you had less right to give your soul to the arch enemy; it no more belongs to you than my children do. It is the exclusive property of the Lord Jesus Christ; he made it, and when lost, also redemed it; it is his with all its powers and faculties, and you cannot give away or sell what is not yours; if you have attempted it, the whole transaction was unlawful and is entirely void.—Now, do you go to our Lord, confess your guilt with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and entreat him to pardon you and take back what is wholly his own. And as for the sin of attempting to alienate his rightful property, throw that back upon the devil, for that & that alone is his." The girl obeyed, was converted, and died full of faith and hope.

A NEW DISCOVERY.—A jouanalist has discovered that, "all things considered, railways are very slow and behind the age. He says, that when travelling, he blushes to think that the message on telegraph flies like lightning, while he is lazily creeping on at only thirty or forty miles an hour.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. GENERAL CONFERENCE PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

Selected Poetry.

MY FATHER'S HOUSE.

"In my Father's house there are many mansions."

There is a place of sacred rest,
Far, far beyond the skies,
Where beauty smiles eternally,
And pleasure never dies;—
My Father's house, my heavenly home,
Where many mansions stand,
Prepared by hands divine, for all
Who seek the better land.

When tossed upon the waves of life,
With fear on every side,—
When fiercely howls the gathering storm,
And foams the angry tide,—
Beyond the storm, beyond the gloom,
Breaks forth the light of morn,
Bright beaming from my Father's house,
To cheer the soul forlorn.

Yes, even at that fearful hour,
When death shall seize its prey,
And from the place that knows us now,
Shall hurry us away,—
The vision of that heavenly home,
Shall cheer the parting soul,
And o'er it mounting to the skies,
A tide of rapture roll.

In that pure home of tearless joy,
Earth's parted friends shall meet,
With smiles of love that never fade,
And blessedness complete:
There, there adieus are sounds unknown,
Death frowns not on that scene
But life, and glorious beauty, shine,
Untroubled and serene. R. TURNBULL.

REV. JAMES KEMPER.

The follwing narrative of the life of the first settled minister of the gospel in Cincinnati, and who survived until within a few years past, will interest those who delight in contemplating the beginnings from which this flourishing city started into existence.

The father of the Rev. James Kemper, V. D M of whose life we are about to give a short sketch, was John Peter Kemper, who was born in Germany, Dec. 25th, 1717, old style. His mother, Elizabeth Fishbock, was born Feb. 13th, 1723, O. S., married Dec., 1738, O. S. They emigrated with other Germans to Virginia, and settled what they called Germantown, perhaps what is now called Kemps or Kempersville, and there, for want of iron, plowed with wooden plows.—Rev. James Kemper was born in Fauquier Co., Va., Nov. 25th, 1756, and on the 16th of July, 1772, married Judith, eldest daughter of Captain John Hathaway, who then resided on the Ball run mountain, and who was an active officer in the Revolution. He commenced farming for a livelihood, but some friend in Carolina advised him to go there and undertake surveying, which he did. Having then six children, in the spring of 1785, about the first of April, he left Carolina taking Col. Boone's road, set out for Harrodsburg, Ky., in company with a few daring souls and a wife of still greater resolution, he passed through the enemy to the forks of Duck river, where he landed on the 18th of April, 1785, and on the 19th, his seventh child and fifth son was born—match that, girls of our days! His move was made for the purpose of putting himself under the care of Rev. David Rice, to read divinity, which he did, and having obtained the necessary credentials for the ministiy, in October 17th, 1791, he removed to Cincinnati, and took charge of the First Presbyterian Church, and preached to the people, they being under arms, sitting on logs thrown against each other. That winter he lived in a small cabin, corner of Walnut and Front streets, where he received many of the wounded soldiers returning from St. Clair's defeat. He also in that cabin dined some of the Indian chiefs who would not cut their meat in peices, but raising it with their forks from the plate, would lake it off the fork and put it in the mouth with their fingers. In the spring of 1792 he procured a better house on Sycamore, between Fourth and Fifth. From there the Indians stole his last horse, and the same night shot an ox with two arrows that killed him so dead that he never kicked. They left him and the arrows sticking in him, taking only the bell from his neck. That year he bought 150 acres of land on the hill beiween Cincinnati and Columbia, and named it Walnut Hills—built a block-house on it, which was called by General Wayne the Out Picket, although it stood near two miles from Fort Washington, and in case of alarm would send a sergeant and his command to support the picket, as he called it. The blockhouse was never attacked. He lived there till General Wayne defeated the Indians in 1794. He would never suffer any of his family to go to the spring without a guard. As early as 1797 he had organized a church at Columbia, Round Bottom, Duck creek, Hopewell, Springfield, and Beadle's station, in what is now Warren county. In 1799 he moved to Beadles's station in Warren county, where he had a church. He remained there one year, and then moved back to Walnut Hills, where in 1804 his fifteenth child, a son, was born. He used to dine the whole fifteen on one side of his table and his friends at the other.

Both parents and children lived in good health generally, and without a broken bone or defect of mind or body, till the 31st of March 1835. when his fourth daughter, then Mrs. Palmer, died, leaving four daughters and ten sons. In 1809 he moved to Flemingsburgh, Ky., where he remained a few years in charge of two Presbyterian congregations—then returned to Walnut Hills.—In 1819 himself and sons laid off part of their land in building lots, formed the Rehoboth Society of Walnut Hills, then adding these, (see their circular of that date,) built a stone church, schoolhouses, &c., erected their higher and lower schools.

He still continued to preach in his stone meeting house, calling it the First Presbyterian Church of Walnut Hills.

In 1834, about 24 hours after burying his eldest son, who died of cholera, he was taken and died of the same disease, thus ending a life of pious industry. His remains were interred on Walnut Hills, on a piece of ground marked by himself for that purpose. Mrs. Kemper, his worthy companion, survived him till March 1st, 1845 when she died in clearness of mind as she always had been. Her children are now erecting a plain stone over their bodies, as directed by himself. Since his death, their heirs, about 60 in number have met, surveyed and divided the estate. * * * * *

MISCELLANEOUS.

Memoir of Louis Philippe.

The King of the French was born in Paris, October 6th, 1773, and consequently is now in his 75th year. He succeeded to the title of Duke of Orleans in 1793, after the death of his father Philippe Egalite, who, it is well known, suffered by the guillotine in the sanguinary days of the Revolution. The Orleans branch of the Bourbon family, of which Louis Philippe is now the head, originated in Philippe, a younger son of Louis XIII., created Duke of Orleans by his elder brother, Louis XIV. The first Duke of Orleans twice married, his second wife being Elizabeth Charlotte of Bohenia, grand daughter of James I. of England; thus connecting the houses of Orleans and Stuart, from the latter of whom the Queen of England, Victoria, is descended.

For many years Louis Philippe was exiled from France, travelling in various countries of Europe, and visiting the United States in his exile. While in Switzerland he engaged as a teacher in an academy for eight months, being then twenty years of age. It is a mistake, however, that he ever taught school in the U. States, as is generally supposed.

He arrived in this country in November, 1796, and was joined by his two brothers, the three spending some time with General Washington at Mount Vernon, by invitation, previous to making a journey through the Western country. After a tour to the Lakes and the Falls of Niagara, the Princes returned to Philadelphia, where they resided a few months. Having determined to join their mother in Spain, the Princes concluded to go thither by way of New Orleans and Havana. For that purpose they again crossed the mountains to Pittsburgh, and descending the Ohio & Mississippi rivers in a boat, arrived at N. Orleans in February, 1798. Being refused a passage to Spain from Havana, whither they went from New Orleans, they sailed to N. York, whence an English packet carried them to Falmouth, at which place they arrived in February, 1800. The Princes then took up their residence on the banks of the Thames, at Twickenham. They received much attention from the English nobility. They made a voyage to the island of Minorca, a passage being given them in a frigate by the British Government; but finding no opportunity of passing thence to Spain, which was then in a convulsed state, they returned to England, and resided for some years at Twickenham. The Duke of Orleans had the misfortune to lose both of his brothers while in exile. The Duke of Montpensier died in England, in 1807, and his remains were interred in Westminster Abbey. The Count Beaujolais died at Malta, whither his brother accompanied him in 1808.

From Malta Louis Philippe went to Sicily, and accepted an invitation from Ferdinand, the King of Sicily, to visit the royal family, at Palermo. During his residence there, he gained the affections of the Princes Amelia, the second daughter of the King, and with the consent of Ferdinand and the Duchess of Orleans, who had joined her son in Sicily, their marriage took place in November, 1809. By this lady, late Queen of the French, Louis Philippe has had eight children, of whom six still survive, viz:

1. Louisa, Queen of Belgium, (wife of Leopold,) born 1812.

2. Louis, Duke of Nemours, born 1814, married Victoria Augusta, of Coburg, cousin of Prince Albert.

3. Maria Clementina, born 1817—unmarried.

4. Francis, Prince de Joinville, born 1818, Admiral of the French Navy, married Francisca, a sister of the Emperor of Brazil, and of the Queen of Portugal.

5. Henry, Duke d'Aumale, born 1822—married to Carolina, cousin of the King of the Two Sicilies.

6. Anthony, Duke of Montpensier, born 1824—married a sister of the Queen of Spain.

The oldest son of Louis Philippe was Ferdinand, Duke of Orleans, born 1810, killed by jumping from his carriage, July 1842. He married, in 1837, Helena, daughter of the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Schwerin—by whom he had two children, viz: Louis Philippe, (Count of Paris,) born 1838, and now 10 years of age, and Robert Philippe, Duke of Chartres, born 1840.

At Palermo, Louis Philippe remained after his marriage until 1814, when in the restoration of the Bourbons he repaired to Paris, and was restored to his rank and honors. The return of Napoleon from Elba in 1815 broke up his arrangements, and he sent his family to England, where he joined them, and again took up his residence at Twickenham.

On the restoration of Louis XVIII, the Duke returned to France, in September, 1815, and took his seat in the Chamber of Peers.—The large estates to which he was entitled by inheritance being restored to him, he devoted his attention principally to the education of his family. His opulence enabled him to become the protector of the Fine Arts, and the patron of Letters, and few men in France were more popular during the career of the Bourbons. He was unexpectedly called from private life by the Revolution of the three days in July, 1830, when, on the abdication of Charles X., the Chamber of Duputies offered him the Crown, which he accepted on the 9th of August, 1830, and adopted the style and the title of Louis Philippe, King of the French.

The Ex-King was a handsome man when young; his frame is now bulky, but there is much ease in his manners. He is ready in conversation, and was always remarkably affable to all.

Besides the young Count of Paris, grand-son to the Ex-King, there are two other claimants to the French throne at this time, namely: first, the young Duke of Bordeaux, son of the Duke de Berri, and grandson to the late King, Charles X., who was of the elder brance of the Bourbon family, and brother of Louis XVI. and Louis XVIII. Charles X., it will be recollected was deposed in 2830.

Second, Louis Napoleon, son of the late Louis Bonaparte, who was for a while King of Holland. The mother of this prince was Hortense, daughter of Josephine, first wife of the Emperor Napoleon.

The claims of neither of these two princes seem to be worth much now; the only chance, if a republic be not permanently established, is probably for the young Count of Paris, under the regency of his mother, the Duches of Orleans.

At a Late Meeting of the New York City Temperance Society, Rev. Dr. Tyng stated that fifty millions of dollars were directly spent in that city annally for liquor; a sum sufficient to send six thousand Christian missionaries to any quarter of the globe; and that the sum expended for liquors equalled all that was raised in the city for the objects of benevolence.

"I've been to Law."—A suit to recover $25 the amount of a note given for a horse, having been three years before the courts in Wyoming county, N. Y., has just terminated. Verdict was given for the plaintiff in amount claimed, with costs, the latter amounting to about eight hundred dollars! Such is law.

Fatal Mistake.—Mr. Marshall Johnson, a highly respectable citizen of Rappahannock county, (Va.) was accidentally shot about three weeks since. Being dressed in a thick coat he was mistaken for a bear, and fired upon by Mr. Madison Fletcher.

British Arctic Expedition.—Among the passengers who arrived in New York from England, by the steamship Hiberma, are Sir John Richardson and party, who had been commissioned by the British government to proceed to the Polar regions, in search of Sir John Franklin's party of explorers.

Arrival of a Long Expected Vessel.—The British brig Thalia, from Cork, Ireland, supposed to have been lost at sea, arrived at Boston on Sunday, after a passage of one hundred and thirty-six days. The Thalia put into Antigua in distress. She has seventy passengers, six died on the passage, and four are now sick.

Departure of Missionaries.—On Saturday, the Rev. George Thompson and Mr. A. J. Carter, sailed from New York in the barque Adario, their destination being the mission station at Kaw Mendi, West Africa, formerly under the care of Mr. Raymond, whose death was recently announced. They take with them a printing press and materials for publishing books and tracts at the mission.

NESTORIANS IN PERSIA.

LETTER FROM DOCTOR WRIGHT, SEPTEMBER 10TH, 1847.

Preaching excursion among the Mountains.

Having recently made a short tour among the Nestorians of Nochea, a district, in the mountains west of the plain of Oroomiah, I now propose to give you a brief account of it. I may premise that no one of our mission had ever before penetrated that region, as it is infested by a lawless tribe of Koords in the summer, and in winter it is quite inaccessible to any but footmen, on account of the deep snows which cover the mountains at that season.

Accompanied by Priest Dunkha, who is a native of Nochea, and who had often spoken of our visiting his mountain home and preaching the gospel to his people there, and Priest Eeshoo, who proposed to spend some days in preaching in Mar Beeshoo, which was in our way, I set out on the 16th ultimo, and passing through Tergawer, where we spent a night, reached Mar Beeshoo the next day. As we left the open region of Tergawer and entered the gorge in the mountains leading into the wilds of Koordistan, Priest Dunkha exclaimed, "O that these mountainous countries were under the government of a Christian power; how I would love to go through the length and breadth of them, preaching the word of life to my poor people." This remark was prompted by our speaking of the dangers of the way, and the hazard we might be running in going into the heart of a region, when overrun by a wild wandering tribe of Koords. "The early disciples of our Lord," I replied "went every where preaching the word, and did not wait for a Christian power to be established first." "Yes," he replied, "but they travelled with such an appearance of weakness and poverty, that nobody feared them or was jealous of them. It is said of Peter, that patches* were taken from his garments and carried to the sick. Now, it is not so. You are identified with the English, who are supposed by the people of Koordistan to have great power and wealth. They have not learned to distinguish between missionaries and officers of Government; and I am known to be in your employ. If you or those employed by you go into the mountains, the object is thought to be to spy out the land, to prepare the way for an invading army." While there is much truth in the Priest's remark, and this current of thought in our circumstances made him appear quite serious and somewhat anxious, we committed our way unto the Lord, strong in the assurance that he would be our guide and protector.

Just before reaching Mar Beeshoo, while we were stopping to bathe in a stream of water, Deacon Guergis of Hakkie, the "mountain evangelist," overtook us. Priest Eeshoo, in passing Tergawer, had sent to him, requesting that he would be his companion and fellow-laborer in the gospel for a few days in Mar Beeshoo. He gladly hastened on to join us, and as he came up with the New Testament, his constant companion and precious treasure, slung on his back, his countenance was so full of joy and peace, that it made our hearts glad to greet him.

The next day was the festival of the Nestorians held to commemorate the scene in which our Lord was tranfigured on the mount. The large church of the village was crowded early in the morning by those who came to partake of the sacrament. Matthew xvi. 24 was the commencement of the lesson in the gospel for the day. The lesson being read, the Priest of the village asked me to preach. If the time had been given me to choose my text, I could not have found a more suitable one than the first verse of that portion of scripture, viz: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." What is it to be a follower of Christ? was just the question fitted to be discussed before that people, confident that they are Christians, if there be no others in the world. It was a delightful work to hold up before that crowded assembly, in that ancient church, the Bible standard of a Christian, and then lead the people to compare themselves with it. The close attention given to the preached gospel here is quite in contrast with that which was given a few years ago, when no light had broken in upon the thick darkness of the place.

The first object in prosecuting our tour was to visit Hajee Aga, the chief of the large and powerful tribe of Harkee Koords, who spread themselves over the mountains of Nochea in the summer, and descend to the plains of Mosul, in the autumn. His approbation was deemed indispensible to our entering the country at all. We expected to find him encamped in the neighdorhood of Mar Beeshoo, but he had left that place some days before, and pitched his tent farther up in the mountains. After nine hours of hard riding we reached his encampment in a nook in the hills at the head of the district of Gawar. On the way we crossed a high mountan pass, from which we had a view of the beautiful plain of Gawar; of the snow-capped mountains of Jeeloo, and of the wild country of central Koordistan. The Harkee chief received us with unexpecied cordiality, and entertained us in the most hospitable manner. We ate supper with him in his tent in company with his brother and some of the chief men of the tribe, and spent the evening in familiar conversation. We could hardly realize that we were in the presence of the famous chief, who rules over a tribe of some twenty thousand souls, and of whose prowess we had heard so much. The next morning we informed him that we wished to traverse the district under his control, in order to visit the Nestorians, and that perhaps we might wish at some future time to open schools among them. He at once gave his concent to our travelling wherever we please in the districts subject to him, and assured us of his approbation and protection in case we should wish to open schools. He gave us a paper duly sealed, ordering, under severe penalty, that nobody should molest us on our way, and sent a servant of his own with directions to accompany us wherever we might wish to go.

Arrival in Nochea—The Bishop—A Nazerite.

We rode away from the tent of this powerful chief, deeply impressed with a sense of God's goodness in giving us and our object favor in his eyes, & proceeded on our way with joyful hearts. Our course to-day lay south-east into the interior of Nochea. In three hours we reached the village of Nardoosha, the native place of Priest Dunkha, situated in a nook in the mountains. In the neighborhood are three other small villages of Nestorians, containing in all but twenty-three houses. We desired that all the people should be assembled, that we might preach to them the unsearchable riches of Christ; but this we found impracticable, as scarcely an individual remained at home. At this season the Koords who during the earliest part of the summer were on the mountain heights, come down with their flocks and herds into the valleys below in the neighborhood of cultivated fields. As a consequence, the Nestorians are obliged to watch their fields of wheat, barley &c., with ceaseless vigilance night and day, or they will be all destroyed. We spent the evening with the few persons who happened to be at home, in the shade of a venerable church, standing on the borders of the village. The Bishop of the few villages in the neighborhood lives here. He is young and worldly, caring for anything rather than the spiritual interests of his flock. He confessed that he did not live as he ought to do, but said by way of apology, that he was poor and pressed for the necessaries of life, and moreover that the Koords so annoyed him, that his mind was kept in a fever unfiting him for the service of God.

The next day, the 20th, we rode seven hours over a rough country—our course lying to the south-west—to the village of Nayree, the residence of the celebrated Koordish Sheikh, Tahar whose acquaintance and friendship it was deemed important to make in order to prosecute missionary labors in Nochea. From an elevated pass we had a view of some six or eight Nestorian villages, situated in different valleys, presenting a pretty appearance in the distance, snrrounded as they were by wide-spreading walnut trees and various kinds of shrubbery. Just at night we reached the Sheikh's village, which came in view from the summit of a mountain over which our road lay, and presented a charming appearance among the trees in the deep valley below. It consists of some 50 or 60 families of Koords, & two of Nestorians. Our reception from the Sheikh at first, before he knew who we were and what our object was, was cold, and was ominous of ill. Priest Dunkha, was alarmed. We were in the heart of Koordistan—we were in the village of a fanatic mussulman, and he a Koord, where any one would delight to plunder us, or even take our lives at his bidding, for his word is regarded as the word of God* In the evening we fully explained our object in visiting Nochea to a servant of the Sheikh, who came to us as we were sitting on the roof of a house before the Sheikh's window, but from the old man himself we heard nothing that night. At an early hour the next morning, he sent a messenger to us with messages of welcome, and also to apologize for not having invited us to his presence the evening before, on the ground of infirm health. A short time after, he left his harem and entered his room for the reception of company, when we were invited in. We entered, and found him seated in the corner of a small room, the thick darkness of which was broken only by a few rays of light admited through a hole in the roof. He was wrapped up in a black cloak, with a large white turban on his head, which almost hid his dark features from view. His appearance and manner were altogether such as to impress the ignorant and superstitious Koords with the idea that he held peculiar communion with God. As he knew Persian, we were able to converse freely with him. We explained to him our object in visiting his country, and assured him that we had no connection with Government—(agents of which he suspected us to be the evening before) that our design was one of simple benevolence and related merely to the spiritual interests of the Nestorians. He then assured us of his kind regards, and compensated by his cordiality for the coldness of our first reception. He moreover gave us a paper, certifying that we were his friends, and that any persons who should trouble us or any of our native helpers in any way, would meet with his displeasure. Upon getting this paper, Priest Dunkha was greatly delighted as he thought it would add much to our security in travelling in Koordistan, but especially to that of our helpers, who visit the mountains to preach the gospel.

This Sheikh is regarded throughout all Koordistan as a prophet, and as being favored with special revelations by the Most High. It is said by the Koords, that he performs miracles of an astonishing character. He is invoked as a saint. At Nardoosha a man, on whose eye I was performing a painful operation, cried out repeatedly. "O Sheikh Tahar, O Sheikh Tahar." His name is also associated with that of the Supreme Being in the prescribed prayers of the mosque. There was a quiet and stillness about the house of the old man, and in the village generally, indicating that the people thought they were in the presence of some superior being, of whom they stood in awe.

Crossing a lofty mountain covered with a stunted, gnarly kind of oak, which we had passed the day before, though by a different route, we descended into a beautiful valley, abounding in fields of wheat, barley, millet, &c., and dotted over with fine large trees of the English walnut. Finding two Nestorian villages here, B'deewee and B'teemoo, of about forty families, and it being Saturday afternoon, we stopped for the Sabbath. We spent the night in B'deewee. In the evening all the men in the place gathered around us on the roof of a house; and there, in the bright light of the moon, it was our delightful privilege to preach to them Christ and him crucified.—Sabbath morning they assembled again, in the shade of a wide-spreading walnut, a little out of the village; when we read the first part of the thirteenth chapter of Luke, and preached on the subject of true repentance, and tried to show the vanity of that man's hope in Christ who is addicted to swearing, lying, reviling &c., sins fearfully common among the mountain Nestorians. After we had concluded, some revealed what was passing in their minds by saying, "We are in the hands of heathen, (meaning the Koords,) and it is impossible for us to keep the commandments

*Since this was written, we have heard of an act of the Sheikh, committed after our visit to him, which shows what a fanatic he is, as well as reveals the barbarity of his character. A Jewess professed the faith of Islam, but after some time wished to return to the way of her fathers, and ventured to break the fast of Ramazan. This reached the ears of the Sheikh. He at once summoned the woman before him, and asked her how she dared to eat during the fast She replied that she had returned to Judaism again. Upon this the Sheikh ordered his own son, who was standing by, to strike her with his dagger. The wretched woman was thus wounded, and being dragged away, was stoned to death.

*The word is in Acts xix. 12, which in the English version is rendered "aprons," in the Syriac is rendered "patches," which lead the Priest to suppose that Peter's clothes were patched, and that he was altogether meanly clad.

of God." In this way many are deceiving themselves with the idea, that they may continue in gross sin, in their circumstances, and still be guiltless. While we were preaching several Koords came up and joined the congregation. They sat down quietly until we had closed, when they asked the Nestorians what we had been talking to them about. They replied, "about repentance." "They say we must forsake sin—all sin—repent of it, and turn unto God." "This is all very well," they rejoined, "but see to it that they do not turn you away to another religion."

From B'deewee we walked to B'teemoo, on the other side of the valley, where all the men in the place soon assembled to hear our message. The people in these villages probably never heard the gospel before.

We returned to B'deewee, and after operating for cataract on the eye of a Koord, who had come from a distance, we crossed the valley and ascended the mountain on the other side, about two miles, to the house of Mar Khan Eeshoo, the metropolitan bishop of Nochea. We were received in the most cordial and hospitable manner. The bishop's house is joined to a very ancient church, which is said to have been a monastery in former times; and here he lives on the mountain side with his brother and some other relatives, all in one family, and with no neighbors around him.

Early the next morning we set our faces homeward, crossing a part of Nochea farther to the south than where we entered the country. Our course lay mostly through the summer quarters of the Harkee Koords, several encampments of whom we passed on our way.

We passed two Nestorian villages to-day, so shut in by the mountains and down in deep ravines, that you would suppose their location was chosen as a hiding-place from the world. After riding eight hours over hill and valley with scarcely a rod of level ground, we reached the village of Baitkaree, containing about twenty families of Nestorians. Here we spent the night. The two priests of the village gave us a most hearty welcome, saying that they had been hoping for years to see some one of our mission there, and now they thanked God that their wishes were gratified. A lad was sent forthwith upon our arrival, to the flock, to bring a lamb, which was killed and served up in the highest style of the culinary art in Koordistan, which with honey, milk, butter, and cream, arranged on the skin of an antelope, spread on the ground, constituted our supper. At early candle light, when the people had come in from their work, a man was sent through the village by one of the priests to invite them to assemble to hear the word of God. Some thirty men came together without delay, to whom we preached on the words of our Lord, "Enter ye in at the straight gate," &c.

The next morning we started for home, which we reached in eight hours from Baitkaree, after an absence of nine days.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Cincinnati, April 29, 1848.

Mr. Editor: Having to write on business, it may not be amiss to drop a line in relation to the George Street Mission. Owing to causes not necessary here to be given, we did not get into the basement of our new meeting house until the first Sabbath of January last, so that up to that time, but little could be done for the organization of this new charge. The Mission at that time consisted of some forty members who united in the experiment of getting up another Methodist Protestant Church in this City. And although many discouragements were anticipated, God graciously smiled upon us in every coming together. In many instances we have been favored with powerful manifestations of the power of God in the awakening and conversion of the impenitent; and in the upbuilding of believers. Truly the Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad. We now number one hundred and five members, have an attentive and growing congregation, with a good prospect of a still greater increase of Membership. I have witnessed some rare instances of christian liberality, among the members of the 6th street charge as well as in this mission, in getting up this new interest. And it is matter of great pleasure to me, as well as to them, that they have not spent their money in vain. The brother who secured the ground whereon to erect the new church, by advancing twelve hundred and fifty dollars of his private funds, now proposes to make a donation of it, provided, we go on and finish the house, and clear it of debt by the first of next September. To meet this proposition we must raise two thousand dollars which I confidently believe will be done. We have brethren and sisters in this city who are ready to make great sacrifices for the promotion of the cause of God through the instrumentality of the Methodist Protestant Church. I am now receiving my support by a christian liberality which I have never enjoyed before. I speak of the heavy amounts paid by a few individuals, while equal honors are awarded to all the faithful. For those who have less, are liberal according to the ability which God giveth. "He that watereth shall also himself be watered."

We have also an interesting Sabbath School of more than one hundred scholars, and a juvenile class of about one hundred children, which I meet statedly on every Sabbath afternoon for religious instruction, several of whom have given evidence of a change of heart. On the whole, we have much to encourage us in our work, & labor of love.

The prospects for extended usefulness in this City have not been so flattering to the Methodist Prot. Church for many years as at the present time. There are other openings in this city for the erection of churches, which I hope we shall soon be able to improve. O that we may have many holy hearts and liberal souls for this work.

Br. Stockton's health is greatly improved, so that he will he likely soon to resume his labors. O that he may long live to preach Christ, & him crucified.

I have been much cheered by the amount of revival intelligence appearing weekly in the columns of the Recorder. May they abound more and more with such matter: If faithful, God will evidently bless us as a church, with a more extended field of usefulness than we have as yet attained unto. But this will depend upon our piety, intelligence, faithfulness and zeal, both as ministers and members. Will not some of our Fathers in the gospel give us boys a few chapters on christian perfection? Perhaps we may become enlightened and humbled thereby.

Your brother in Christ,

J. DALBEY, Jr.

Gilboa, Kalida Circuit, April 14th, 1848.

Br. Bassett It is known to most of the brethren that but very little from my pen has appeared in the columns of the Recorder, this Conference year, and perhaps some are thinking strange that I do not report more fully the condition of my field of labor. By your permission I will give the brethren some intelligence respecting our prosperity as a church on this circuit; when I came here immediately after the rise of Conference, I found about one hundred persons who were called Protestant Methodists. They had the form of godliness, but many were without the power, as one brother remarked with regard to his circuit, "gross darkness dwelt upon the face of it," for there was not a church house in all our borders, neither was there a prospect of building any, and for a season I had to labor under great discouragements partly in consequence of the feeble state of my health during the winter past. But still we had a few things to encourage us to persevere, for there were still a few faithful souls whose garments were not spotted, & they had been praying ardently, & incessantly for these many years, for the Lord to revive his work. At length the time of refreshing came from the presence of the Lord, many souls were made happy in a saviour's love, and 35 have united with us in church fellowship, and though as you see, our accessions have not been numerous, yet I can say I never saw more Divine power made manifest in any community, than I have here for the last three months, & best of all, pretty near the entire circuit, appears to be under the influence of revivals of religion. Prospects at present are very flattering for many more accessions to our church in this place. I have no doubt if the brethren prove faithful that Kalida circuit, is destined in a very short time to be one of the strong holds of Methodist Protestantism. We have some as valuable material on this circuit as our country can afford, and we now have two splendid frame church houses under contract to be finished by the 12th of October, one of which will be in the town of Gilboa, where we intend calling for the Annual Conference of 1849. Brethren pray for us that the Lord may more abundantly revive his work, of grace amongst us.

Yours, &c.,

Braxton Ct., Va., March 17th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Please let a few lines from my pen find a place in the columns of your worthy paper, as no doubt Br. Brown and others are anxiously waiting to hear something from Braxton Circuit. By the help of Him who led forth the armies of Israel we are trying to do the best we can. Our first quarterly meeting we commenced the 30th of October, at the Union Mills on Elk river. This lasted three days and was a meeting of considerable interest. The love of many that had grown cold was re-inkindled. The next was our second quarterly meeting this was held at Br. E. Squires, in the Flatwoods—commenced the 19th of February. Here I expected the aid of Br. R. H. Walker, but was disappointed, the weather being unfavorable on Saturday. Sunday the congregation was larger than is usual in this country, and while I tried to preach the word, the Spirit of the loving God was felt in the congregation. At night Dr. Rhea of the M. E. Church South preached for us. May the Lord reward this Brother for his labor of love. On Monday we held our love feast. This was a precious time—the Lord was there of a truth, while believers rejoiced, sinners trembled under the mighty hand of God. At the close of the love feast we administered the sacrament of the Lord's supper. This was a glorious time, a time long to be remembered. We closed the meeting on Tuesday night, with victory on the side of Israel. The Saturday following we commenced a protracted meeting at the mouth of Birch river, about twenty miles below Sutton. Here we have no members, this is a new appointment. We had large congregations, mostly unconverted. For the want of help we had to close on Sunday night. We have reasons to believe that this meeting was not in vain. Methodist Protestantism will take hold here. The next was a protracted meeting on Kenhawa, commenced the 11th of March, lasted three days. At this meeting there were several seekers of religion. Two professed to obtain pardon, and three united with the church. This is a flourishing class. As Br. Brown has promised us a visit next summer on the condition of our having a camp-meeting, we are making arrangement for that purpose expecting to meet his presidential visit. We wish this meeting to commence about the 10th or 11th of August, if this will suit Br. Brown, if not I hope he will inform us when he can come. Do not forget Braxton circuit. Pray for us that the Lord may carry on his work among us.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel.

Conneaut Circuit, April 18th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: After so long a time I desire to say something in relation to this circuit. Two weeks after I reached it, I was attacked with the ague and fever, & I have been very much afflicted ever since. But notwithstanding this, our friends have waited with a degree of patience for the Lord to restore me to health again. We have had our first and second quarterly meetings for the present year. At both of these meetings we had good times. I would say that our prospects are somewhat flattering, and if I was able to hold protracted meetings I have no doubt but they would result in great good. Our third quarterly meeting will be held at Lockport the second Saturday and Sunday in May. We hope and pray that the good Lord will be with us. Our president, Br. Brown, will come to Steemburgh where he preached one sermon last Conference year. This place is east of Br. Gants about two miles, and west of Conneautville about seven miles.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Gnadenhutton, Ohio, April 11th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: As I have to write to you on business, I take the privilege of giving some further information relative to the prosperity of Leesburgh Circuit. Some ten days after I closed my 2d quarterly meeting, I commenced a protracted meeting at Harmony Meeting House which lasted 10 days. Here the Lord was pleased according to his abundant goodness to make known his saving power in the salvation of precious souls. The Brethren came up nobly to the help of the Lord against the mighty. They sent up their petitions to a of throne of Grace, God gave them the agreeing power, according to their faith so it was done, God sent his awakening grace to the hearts of sinners, they were constrained to cry for mercy. The church sent her petitions to the God of love and mercy, in the behalf of the sin sick penitent, and their united prayers brought answers of peace to several waiting hearts. Penitent souls were made to rejoice with joy unspeakable, and I think nearly all the church shouted for joy. At least twenty professed to obtain the pearl of great price, 13 united as probationers, and most of them are much engaged in the cause they have espoused, upon the whole I think it was the best meeting I ever attended. To God be all the glory.

The next Saturday after the close of this meeting, we commenced a protracted meeting at Robert Crook's class, here we held the meeting a week, we had a good time, some conversions, the church much revived and comforted. Six have joined at this place, prospects are quite flattering, our M. E. Brethren came to our assistance, may the Lord reward them for their friendly aid.

Most of the appointments on Leesburg circuit are doing well, though two or three are not so prosperous as we could wish surrounded by circumstances and influences at the present beyond our control. We still hope for better times in those places, we have received 35 on probation this year, and hope to increase the number, we wish to be thankful for a few, may the Lord enable them to be steadfast unto the end of life. This is the third year I have been laboring with this kind people and have found them always ready to administer to my wants. May they enjoy the smiles of Heaven continually in time, & finally be brought to the enjoyment of eternal life in Heaven.

Yours, &c.,

WM. L. BALDWIN.

Newark Circuit, April 20, 1848.

Mr. Editor: We have been favored this year on Newark Circuit with some prosperity. At a number of our classes, the Spirit has been poured upon us, and many have been added to the church; something over eighty have united with us at our different societies, many of whom professed to have found favor with God. During a season of great revival in this section of the work, in different churches especially in the two Methodist churches, I have been greatly pleased with the liberality, charity and christian intercommunion that has prevailed. We preached, prayed, exhorted together, met in class and even took in members for one another, in short the world were surprised to see it, and infidelity deprived of one of its chief objections which it has wielded so successfully against christianity, seemed as though it would be starved out for want of crumbs to subsist upon.

One circumstance which occurred at Elizabethtown, I will relate. At our quarterly meeting, on Monday morning at sacrament there were 81 present, 71 communed, leaving 10 persons, of whom 6 joined the church at the close of the meeting, leaving four; at night three of the remaining were among the mourners, and I think joined the church. So we took the whole company perhaps with not one exception.

The work was chiefly among the juveniles of both sexes, though not exclusively so. We have four Sabbath Schools now in successful operation, having just got under way, which we hope will be a means of great good. I might say a great deal, but I don't want to occupy too much of your room to the exclusion of more interesting matter.

Yours, &c.,

Br. Bassett: I am happy to have it in my power to communicate intelligence through the Recorder, which shall tend to increase the joy of the friends of our Lord Jesus Christ. The second quarterly meeting was held the nineteenth and twentieth of February. We commenced the meeting the Monday previous, on Wednesday Br. Mack, the President, was with us and preached in the evening, the word was attended with power, the labors of our worthy brother were blessed in the awakening and conversion of sinners. He had to leave us the next Monday, in poor health. After he left I was favored with the labors of Br. New, superintendent of Barry Circuit, and Br. Smith, local preacher of the M. E. Church. They labored with zeal, and their labors have been blessed to the good of souls. Lest I weary your patience, I would say the meeting resulted in the conversion and reclaiming of between thirty and forty souls. Twenty have united with the M. P. Church, on probation, and three by letter. The work still goes on. To God be all the glory. Others will unite soon.

GEORGE LOWREE.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, April 27, 1848.

New Subscribers this week, 9. Discontinuances, 3. All the names sent us this week are from the Ohio District! Much obliged to our brethren, for remembering us.

To Correspondents.—We have in hand, No. 4, by Br. C. Springer; also an article by a True Methodist, and one by Br. John Scott, all of which shall have place in due course.

HO! FOR A CAMP-MEETING!!

We shall commence a Camp-Meeting on Richwood Circuit, Ohio District, on Thursday, 1st of June, 1848. It will be held two miles and a half west of Richwood, Union county, on the road leading from Richwood to Summerville. We earnestly invite ministerial aid. It is also very desirable that brethren of the adjoining circuits unite with us. We hope that Brothers Hatfield, Ensminger, Stevens, and Davis will endeavor to induce some of the brethren of their respective circuits to join in with us. Brother Young is informed that we have appointed the time for our Camp-Meeting to correspond with that of his presidential visitation. Ho! Ye Watchmen of Zion! for a rally in the green woods of the North!

Come, Mr. Editor, leave your "scissors" and "exchanges" for an "exchange" of friendship with old friends. Leave the "d—l" and all his works; come & make "impressions" on sinners' hearts, and show them the "errors" of their way, that, by the grace of God, they may "correct" them, become good "cases," and thus be enabled to present a "clean proof" & beautiful "impression," without "spot or blemish," at the Judgment Day.

JOHN B. PEAT, Sup't.

Richwood, Ohio, April 17, 1848.

The last ¶ of the above characteristic "piece" of "composition," presents quite a "case" for our consideration, the Superintendent of Richwood Circuit himself having been a practical printer. There are those in that ¶ of country, who have given "proof" of the purest friendship; and we should love to "em-brace" so goodly an opportunity of meeting them once more in the flesh. We could most agreeably "space out" a few days of relaxation from our toils and confinement, if we could for the necessary "period" of time, "lay aside" our responsibilities, "chase" away our cares, and "dash" off our perplexities. We have some understanding how to help "distribute" the "pi" and other "sorts" of good things, usually "displayed" on camp-meeting occasions. But the "matter" we should most of all desire, would be to enjoy the religious advantages and consolations of the occasion; and if we might, (as our brother has requested,) "contribute," in any "form" to the interest or success of the meeting, we should be "lead" to feel truly thankful. But as the duties of our calling "impose" cares and burdens upon us, almost without a ¶, and "press" upon us beyond "measure," we fear we shall be denied the privilege of complying with our Brother's invitation.

Success to the Richwood Camp-meeting!

☞ We cheerfully give place this week, to all the religious intelligence thus far received, and to an unusual amount of interesting and important foreign and domestic news, to the exclusion of editorial and other matter.

Losses by Fire.—We record this week, an unusual number of losses by the devouring element.—New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, and Medina, Ohio, have had visitations of this kind.

☞ The general Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the United States, holds its next session in the city of New York, commencing on Saturday, May 13th, 1848.

☞ The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, (O. S.) holds its next annual meeting at Baltimore, Maryland, commencing May 18th, 1848.

American Pulpit.—We have received the April number. It contains a sermon by the Rev. Wm. B. Slight, of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, Canada; several sketches of sermons, and a ministerial miscellany. The Pulpit has now completed its 3d volume. The work, already unsurpassed is to be conducted for the coming volume, on an improved plan. It is truly evangelical in its character, and free from denominational influences. Ministers of all evangelical denominations are invited to become contributors to the pages of the Pulpit, and ministers and laymen of every order, are solicited to act as agents for the work. Rev. J. D. Bridge, Editor, Samuel Chism, Publisher Worcester Mass.

Recent Scenes at Washington City.

We regret to learn that some riotous proceedings took place last week in Washington City. An attempt was made to overthrow the liberty of the press. We give below the particulars, so far as information has thus far been received. The following notice appears in the last number of the National Era, dated 20th inst.

Disturbance.

Last Saturday night, we learn, some seventy or eighty slaves escaped from this place, in a sloop or schooner, and proceeded down the river. The fact was not discovered till next day, when a steamboat was dispatched in pursuit. The fugitives, together with three white men, who navigated the craft, were caught, brought back, and imprisoned. A great deal of excitement was the result; and the cry soon arose among the crowd, that the 'National Era' was the cause of the mischief. Of course, there is no truth in this—not one particle. But, excited men do not inquire of reason. While we are writing this, at ten o'clock at night, a crowd of men and boys is collected about the office; many stones have been thrown; but the police are striving to do their duty. They may fail; the multitude may overpower them; but we hope for the best. We cannot but think that the sober second thought of the ringleaders in this affair will arouse compunction for this violent assault against the liberty of the press—a liberty in our case which even they dare not say, has been abused.

All we have to say is, we stand by the freedom of the press, whatever the result.

Wednesday morning, 8 o'clock. The mob dispersed last night about 12 o'clock—thanks to the efficient conduct of Captain Goddard and the rest of the police. The rumor that the office of the 'National Era' was concerned in the escape of the slaves in the Pearl, is utterly groundless—this its originators know, but they are willing to use it to inflame popular feeling against our Press. Whatever we do, we do openly. We cherish an instinctive abhorrence of any movement which would involve us in the necessity of concealment, strategy, or trickery of any kind.

No! No! We understand this outrage. It is aimed at the Freedom of the Press. We own and edit a paper which is as free as the winds of heaven. It bows neither to slavery nor to the mob. We stand upon our rights as a man, and as an American citizen, and will use these rights, in speaking and writing freely upon any subject we please, despite all threats or violence. It is a damning disgrace, that at the very moment we are rejoicing with the people of France at their triumph over a Despot who undertook to 'enslave the press,' an attempt should be made to strike down the freedom of the press in the Capital City of this Republic, in sight of the National Legislature.

We are again threatened—the outrage is to be repeated, it is said. And for what? What is our offence? Is there a man in this community whom we have injured? Have we not been kind and courteous to all men, studious of the proprieties which ought to distinguish the discussion of all important questions? There is no man in this city who has examined our paper that finds any fault with its tone, style, or temper.

Enough. We yield to no violence. We appeal to the good sense of this community, aye, and, as we said, the sober second thought of the infatuated persons who, in a paroxysm of blind excitement, assailed our press. It cannot be that in the nineteenth century, in the face of a world struggling for free thought, free speech, free action, and looking up to this Republic for example and encouragement, a free Press should be put down by violence in the capital city of this Republic.

Later.—The following additional accounts, are given by the Washington Correspondent of the Baltimore Sun.

Washington, April 19, '48.

The Slave Excitement—Attack on the National Era office—Destructive Fire—Committal of more Slaves—Apprehensions of Riot—Examination not concluded, &c.

The exciting scenes and feverish state of the community, yesterday, induced fearful apprehensions of a design on the part of certain evil-disposed persons, to attempt the demolishment of the "National Era" Office, or to rescue the white prisoners from jail, with a view to wreak their indignation upon them. The prison was, accordingly, provided with a strong guard. Soon after dark, last night, some hundreds of persons assembled on Seventh street, in front of the printing office, their number gradually increasing up to 9 o'clock, when the entire square was filled. The Mayor of the City being confined to his bed, ill, the entire control of the business devolved on Captain Goddard, who was promptly and efficiently aided by justice B. K. Morsell.

Upon the first essay of certain individuals to injure the establishment, they were told by the officers that they were there "to do their duty:" "that no man should enter the door unless he first killed those who were bound to protect it." For a season, reason predominated—probably nine-tenths of those present felt justly indignant at the cool, deliberate manner in which our citizens had been injured, yet, to their praise be it recorded, no one, recognised as a citizen of Washington, seemed disposed to violate the laws.—Towards 10 o'clock, as usual upon all such occasions, a party of vagabond boys, encouraged by some few men of their own class, who kept themselves out of sight as much as possible, commenced stoning the house, breaking the windows, window-shutters and a portion of the sign over the door. This continued for an hour or more, when the spectators gradually withdrawing exposed the perpetrators to closer observation, and hence their outrageous conduct was brought to a close. About, midnight gangs of these fellows were seen sneaking off to remote corners of the city.

In all such cases, let every good citizen remember that he is authorised to maintain the peace of the city: that it is his 'duty' to aid in the enforcement of the laws; and if he can do nothing else, he can give information of the person who violates those laws.

Washington, April 20, 1848.

The large assemblage on Seventh street, last night, presented quite an imposing appearance. A party of reckless young men, destitute of reputation or responsibility, aided by no small number of boys, whose parents or guardians should have prevented their attendance, attempted to render "night hideous" by pretended concert and wild vociferations. Added to these were a few mischievous men, of more decent 'dress,' whose craven spirits, shrinking from a due accountability to the laws, would have paid ignorant and thoughtless individuals to involve themselves in still deeper disgrace for the gratification of their licentious employers, by the perpetration of flagrant outrages upon private property.

As I informed you at the moment by telegraph, the committee reported that the proprietor had respectfully declined to leave the premises. Unearthly yells quickly succeeded—the first class alluded to assuring themselves that they now possessed ample authority for the commission of mobism in any and every form. The office of the "Era" was quickly surrounded, and a volley of stones thrown at it, when Capt. Goddard boldly advanced and called upon all good citizens to aid the civil authorities in the discharge of their duties.

This was the crisis! Honor to the enlightened citizens of the metropolis—the city that bears a name which can never die—they promptly responded. Nobly did the masses, who had been drawn together by motives of mere curiosity, rally in vindication of the laws. The violence of the rioters was speedly restrained, and threats superseded by jokes or derisive remarks until after midnight, when disappointed and fatigued they strolled off to other haunts. The resolution adopted to forcibly remove the office this morning has, of course, been disregarded, those who would thus trample down the laws never taking daylight for their work.

Need the question be propounded. Who are the people more deeply interested than any other in the maintenance of the laws? The citizens of Washington; for separate and apart from that innate love of liberty which exists in every republican breast, the first—aye, the very first assault upon the privileges of a press, in this city, would lead to immediate and serious consideration, on the part of Congress, to remove the seat of government. What then? Whether this be the result or not, a penny press is destroyed under a pomp and circumstance which invests it with tenfold interest, and the very object sought to be stunned is inevitably and forever defeated.

Incident in the Life of a Tobacco Chewer.—An excellent brother, who uses tobacco, not for the utility of the practice, but because he 'loves it,' has kindly sent us, post paid, the following leaf from the life of a tobacco chewer. The same is the brother who declined giving an anti-tobacco lecture at the last Muskingum Conference, for the reason above hinted. He says he is willing thus to make atonement for his non-compliance, amuse our readers, and gratify the feelings of his friends, as he can do it without sacrificing principle. We are much obliged to our friend, for giving us this seasonable aid in a good enterprise, and wish him a happy deliverance from a fascinating habit.

I called upon Miss B., a delightful creature, full of romance and poetry; pretty and agreeable. Commenced descanting upon the beauties of moonlight evenings, pleasant walks, &c.—Asked her if she would accompany me in a stroll on the banks of the Hudson. She was agreeable, and off we started. Animated by the gayety of the scene, I ventured to pay her a few compliments, and finding them well received, I gently pressed her hand, at the same time comparing her to all that was lovely and beautious, assuring her bright eyes added no little to the splendor of the scene about us. She took this piece of flattery by a look of sweet complaisancy; and being that moment seized of a spirit of impudence of which I am rarely possessed, I desparately resolved to steal a kiss. In accordance with this resolution, I passed the orb of my countenance beneath the roof of her cottage hat, when she started back with the exclamation—"Faugh! Mr.——, how strong your breath does smell of tobacco."

Here was a rebuff; and as unsentimental, too, as could be agreeable to an individual of my temperament. I was dull as a hammer for the remainder of the walk.

* * * * *

Went to a party. Was seated, by a most unfortunate incidence, between two of the prettiest young ladies in the room. Found to my horror that I had a chew of tobacco in my mouth.—Could not leave my seat—that would be rude—floor carpeted—no spittoons—don't need them at parties—in perfect agony—drew out my embroidered handkerchief and deposited the nauseous morsel within its folds, redolent of cologne and otto of roses—was obliged to swallow the spittle—complained of indisposition—attempted to walk out doors, but in the hall was taken with a spasmodic affection of the stomach, which caused a deposition of its contents on the hall floor, to the amusement of the servants who stood grinning at my expense. Assumed an unusual degree of dignity, and walked back into the parlor, where I received the condolence of the hostess and a half a dozen of the young ladies, which put me in tolerable spirits. Forgot my adventure, & made myself generally agreeable to the fair sex. Refreshments were brought in. Walked up to the beaufet with a divine creature on my arm, & helped her to a general assortment of cake &c. As we stood eating from the same plate, I brought out my handkerchief with a flourish and wiped the perspiration from my forehead, and felt a cold clammy substance adhering to the organ of individuality. A shudder ran through my frame, as it dropped upon the plate. By some extraordinary fatality, my companion caught the morsel with avidity. She was seized with nausea, screamed and fainted. I started from the room, grasped my hat and made myself scarce. The next morning it was bruited over town that Mr.—— had attempted to poison Miss T——with tobacco.

* * * * *

Called to see Mr. C——, upon business—was shown into the sitting room, which was something unanticipated. Franklin stove lined with evergreens and tisue paper—floor carpeted. Mr. C— very particular about his house, no spittoons, and stove hearth polished. Here was a dilema. Taught by former misfortune I placed my hat between my knees and spit soon covered it.—Succeeded in getting off—crammed my handkerchief into my hat and my hat on my head—no go—felt the saliva streaming down my neck—threw my hat into the gutter and started home for dear life,—Got home and found my new satin vest was effectually spoiled. Resolved to quit chewing and become a decent man—all useless, however.

Found that it was generally known that I chewed—and young ladies would'nt trade with me because they did not like my breath, and mammas were afraid that my laces, threads, ect. might become tainted with the obnoxious effluvia. Business was dull—did'nt trade enough to pay my board—failed—was a marked man, and came very near being a candidate for the Lunatic asylum, all from the use of tobacco.

Tobacco Reformation Onward!

Mr. Editor: A brother here, by reading some of your anti-tobacco arguments, found his case described exactly, and proposed, with two of his neighbors, infected with a like complaint, that they would abstain for a time, from the use of tobacco. The last time I saw them, they still stood firm, but said they felt a little like backsliding. If they do, I shall publish them, and perhaps give names. You can judge of the interest taken by ladies in the good cause, when I state that one sister, the wife of one of the above named, proposed to give them a good supper, if they would show themselves manly enough, not to be brought into bondage again to the filthy weed.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

LENOX SHEPHERD;

In the 66th year of his age, closed his earthly existence in the full triumphs of Christianity, five miles north of Irville, in this county, (Muskingum.) He died of Palsy, which disease was attended with great difficulty in respiration. He was conscious that he would not recover from his attack, and spoke of his approaching end with confidence. Forty-four years of his life was spent in the church, the early part in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the latter part in the Methodist Protestant Church, commencing with its earliest history, and remaining a worthy and faithful member; and for many years an acceptable and useful minister among us.

As it regards the respectability and piety of our brother, where he was known, it needs no eulogy, nor should we be afraid of the charge of adulation were we to say a great deal in his favor; but he is not in need of our praise, while society will award to him that he lived and died a consistent Christian.

His life was accompanied with some sore trials having buried two wives, and five children; but in these he was not forsaken of his God, his "faith failed not" and when the last trial came and he himself was called to pass through the dark valley, he had the company and support of which the Psalmist speaks. To his son he said "I am going to heaven, my peace is made with God, I have no pain, how easy I feel." And then died without a struggle or a groan with a serene smile on his face. This event took place on the 3d of Jan. 1848.

Yours in love,

FOREIGN NEWS.

Progress of the European Revolutions.

France, Prussia, Poland, Lombardy, &c.

[Telegraphed for the Baltimore Sun.]

New York, April, 20, 10 A. M.

The express steamboat Republic has just arrived, bringing up packages of Havre papers brought by the packet-ship Duchess d'Orleans, to the 23th of March, three days later than those brought by the steamer Hibernia.

The fermentation in Europe is still increasing, and Republicanism is spreading, but not without signs of opposition from the Autocrat of Russia.

A Republic has been declared in Prussia, and the King, Frederick William IV., and his Ministers, seized by the provisional government established, and cast into prison. The Prince has made good his escape to England.

The revolution at Lombardy was entirely successful, but has been accompanied by great bloodshed.

The King of Naples has yielded to the people all the reforms and extension of their liberties that they demanded.

It is expected that, notwithstanding the concessions made by the Emperor of Austria, he will be compelled to abdicate, to make way for a republic.

The Emperor of Russia has issued a ukase ordering the army into the field, in which he gives, as a reason for so doing an "alliance with the United States (should probably be United Powers) to stop the flood of anarchy spreading throughout Europe."

The rumored Polish Revolution is fully confirmed by this arrival, but nothing further received as to its prospects or progress.

SECOND DISPATCH.

New York, April, 20—1 P. M.

At the date of the sailing of the Duchess d'Orleans, great excitement prevailed at Havre between the two classes of citizens, rich and poor, which constantly threatened serious consequences. The latter had compelled the higher orders to remain within their houses with closed doors, and the military were on the alert to prevent outbreaks and quell any disturbance that might occur.

Pecuniary matters in France still wore a gloomy aspect, and failures continued among the first houses. It was reported that the Rothschilds had suspended, but from the known immense resources of that firm, the rumor had not gained general credence.

In Prussia there has been another emeute, which resulted in the proclamation of a republic at Berlin, the king being dethroned, and ministers cast into prison. The Prince of Prussia, (probably heir apparent) had fled to England, but before his flight the people had demanded that he should renounce all claims to the throne.

Prince (ci-devant) Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, was doing duty as a member of the National Guard, and standing sentinel at the Poste du Drapaux.

ADDITIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

From Galignani's Messenger, March, 24.

Highly Important.

Republic Proclaimed in Prussia.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated Metz, received yesterday, states that a Republic had been proclaimed at Berlin. The King had been dethroned, and his Majesty and Ministers arrested.

This news is confirmed by the Paris Commerce of the 25th. That paper says, "this time the fact is official. The telegraphic dispatch which we add to this was addressed to the Provisional Government, and posted at the Bourse, and leaves no doubt of the authenticity of the communication."

We learn from Berlin, under date of the 20th, that all the Polish prisoners in that city had been set at liberty. They went in procession to the Palace, and the King appeared in the balcony and bowed to them.

M. Mierslawski was in the carriage, the horses of which were taken off by the people, who supplied their places, uttering loud acclamations.

The Cologne Gazette, of the 24th ult., has accounts from Berlin up to the evening of the 22d. At that time the capital was tranquil, and the ceremony of the interment of the victims of the revolution had gone off without the slightest interruption of order. The King was not present at this ceremony, but all the authorities attended it.

The Universal Gazete of Prussia, of the 23d, states that the King had placed the properties of the State, including the military stores destined to be employed for the defence of the country against foreign foes, under the protection of the citizens and inhabitants of Berlin.

It also states that the King had ordered that the pledges, not exceeding five thalers, in the pawn-broking establishments, should be given up at the cost of the treasury.

A committee had been formed for receiving donations on behalf of those who were wounded, and of the widows and children of those slain in the recent events.

The Gazette announces, that in consequence of its compositors being desirous of attending the funeral of the victims, which took place on the previous day, it had been obliged to go to press early.

The French Republic.—Galignani, of the 26th ult., says that the Provisional Government was much embarrassed in relation to what system of checking voters should be adopted in the coming election.

The Government has charged a member of the Academy des Sciences to draw up a plan for checking the votes.

The Provisional Government has decreed that work in the prisons shall be suspended, and that the contracts now existing with respect to it shall be recinded, and the contractors receiving an indemnity from the State if called for.

About 400 of the Poles living in Paris assembled yesterday, to form the first column for returing to their own country.

These Poles have written to their fellow countrymen in the Provinces to join them either at Paris or at Strasburg. They have also made an appeal to the Republic of France for a supply of arms and the munitions of war.

REVOLUTION IN GENOA.

We read in the Patria of the 24th ult.: At the moment of going to press we were assured that a great movement had taken place at Genoa, and that it had detached itself from Sardinia with the project of contributing to the formation of an Italian unity with a republican form of government.

AUSTRIA.

The Vienna Gazette of the 19th ult., announces officially the appointment of Count Colleredo Waldso as Minister for Foreign Affairs, Baron de Pillorsdorf, as Minister of the Interior, & Baron Kuheck, as Minister of Finance, Count Stadion as President of the Austrian Chamber, and Counts Kollowrat and Hartig as Ministers without portfolios. The Archduke Stephen is appointed Viceroy of Hungary. Great retrenchments in the public expenditures are promised by the new Ministry.

BAVARIA.

A letter from Munich of the 21st, dated at five o'clock in the morning, which we find in the Augsburg Gazette, says King Louis has abdicated: the Prince Royal ascends the throne under the title of Maximillian the Second.

The news of the King's abdication produced an extraordinary sensation. It is said that King Louis could not make up his mind to effect the promised reforms, particularly to have a responsible Ministry.

AFFAIRS IN MILAN.

The "Opinion," of Turin, of the 20th ult., publishes the following news from the "Norra," dated the 19th:

Milan has rebelled, and is in a state of siege.—The gates are closed, and the battle rages within. The people have made themselves masters of five pieces of cannon, and the report of artillery was heard at 11 o'clock.

Five thousand Lomeliens are on their way to Milan to assist their brethren.

The same journal adds, in a postscript dated six o'clock, P. M., "We learn that the Government is in the hands of the people of Milan."

HANOVER.

His Majesty on the 19th ult., sent an official ratification to the Burgher Guard, that he had dismissed Privy Counsellor Falka from his post in the Cabinet. Had not his Majesty taken this step, it would assuredly have been demanded.

The King of Hanover has conceded all the demands of his people, and been obliged to submit to the bitter necessity of calling to the ministry, M. Sturbe, the liberal deputy of Osnabrick, who, for refusing to abet his Majesty in the arbitrary measures which he adopted in his accession, was prosecuted and imprisoned for several years.

[From the London Times, March 25.]

RUSSIA.

The contents of the private letters received this afternoon from St. Petersburg, possess considerable interest. It is said the anger of the Emperor at the recent events in France is excessive, and that he declares he will hold no communion with that country.

News of the Week.

Crime in Washington Co., O.—At the late term of the court held in Washington County, O., a boy of 14 was sentenced, for arson, to 12 years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. An indictment was found against him for attempting to burn a house, and another for attempting to poison a Mrs. McCoy. When the jury returned their verdict, he caught up a law book and threw it at the jurors, hitting one of them in the face.—Another boy of 17 years was sent to the penitentiary for three years, for horse stealing. At the same time these boys were receiving their sentences, two other boys, one 15, the other 16 years of age, were under examination before the Mayor, on a charge of having committed nine burglaries the previous night.

Runaway—Three Persons Injured.—The horses attached to the carriage of Mr. G. Williamson, took fright on Friday evening, on Vine street, and started at a furious speed across the canal bridge. At the corner of Vine and Canal, a little girl was thrown out of the carriage, falling headlong upon the rough pavement, receiving injuries, from which it was feared she would not recover. The horses kept on, and all the efforts of the driver (who was on the box) to check them proved unavailing, and near the corner of Thirteenth, they dashed into the sidewalk, amongst the posts, &c., smashing the vehicle to atoms. The driver was thrown down under the feet of the horses, and received several severe wounds—the flesh being torn from the skull just above the right eye, and his body much bruised. A lady who was in the carriage was also thrown out, and much hurt.—Cin. Com.

Thomas Nash, convicted of murdering a female slave two years ago, paid the penalty of his crime in Waynesburg, N. Carolina, on the 31st ult. The rope by which he was first suspended broke and he fell to the ground; whilst the rope was being adjusted he conversed with the bystanders. He was again suspended and lauched into eternity.

Destructive Fires.

Fire at Cincinnati.

The alarm of fire, yesterday afternoon, between the hours of three and four o'clock, was occasioned by the burning of two or three frame buildings on the northwest corner of Race street and the Miami Canal, owned and occupied as follows:

One as a Planing Machine establishment, owned by Messrs. Wm. and John Conn—loss $10,000. This establishment was purchased of Messrs. Bicknell & Jenkins on the 1st of April.

John Richard's Coopering establishment—loss $1,000.

Joseph Kirby's Sash and Plug Manufactory—loss between $2,000 and $3,000.

A frame dwelling adjoining the Planing Machine was partially consumed—loss three hundred dollars.

The total loss is estimated at $15,000. The fire was caused by friction of the machinery.—There was a rumor in circulation to the effect, that the boiler attached to the engine of the Planing Machine, had exploded. We inquired particularly into this matter, and found it merely a rumor. Our firemen, as usual, were on the ground early, but the building being built of wood, and filled with dressed timber and shavings, burned rapidly.—Cin. Com.

Destructive Fire at Philadelphia.

We yesterday morning announced by telegraph from Philadelphia that a destructive fire was raging in that city at the time the telegraph office closed. We sum up the following additional particulars from the Philadelphia papers:

"On Tuesday evening, about half-past 8 o'clock, a most destructive fire broke out in the block of large five-story brick buildings, 110, 109, 108 and 107 South wharves, between Lombard and South streets, and extending back to Little Water street, which were soon enveloped in one sheet of flame. The stores 110 and 109, where the fire originated, were occupied by Robert Patterson & Co., extensive produce commission merchants, and contained a large amount of cotton and sugar, all of which was destroyed, as were also the contents of 108 and 107, occupied as places of storage by different houses on the wharf. The two buildings to the south, 111 and 112, the latter occupied by J. Carstairs, commission merchant, were nearly destroyed.

The following is a recapitulation of the loss:

No. 106 (Commercial House,) owned by E. Hollingsworth, and occupied by S. W. Clement. Loss $300.

Nos. 107, 8, 9 and 10, four-story stores, owned by George Cuthbert and A. S. Roberts. Damages $14,000; loss $10,000. No. 7 was occupied by Mr. Ayres, No. 8 by Mr. Ohl, and Nos. 9 and 10 by Patterson & Co. Mr. Ayres' loss is trifling. Mr. Ohl's loss is probably $12,000.—The loss of Patterson & Co. will, it is thought, reach $35,000. The greater amount is doubtless covered by insurance. General Patterson, who is now in the service of his country in Mexico, was the principal partner in this firm.

No. 111 belonged to A. Cuthbert and J. M. Thomas. Loss $1500. Fully insured. The loss of Allibone & Troubal, who occupied it, is small.

No. 112 belongs to Mary Cuthbert. Loss $300. Insured.

Tremendous Fire in New York.—Great Destruction of Property.—New York, like Philadelphia, was the scene of a terribly destructive fire on Tuesday evening. We gather the following particulars mostly from the Herald:

A fire broke out about a quarter to ten o'clock last night, in the building occupied by Francis Plate as a cabinet workshop. The flames immediately communicated to the two large five-story buildings in front, occupied by the same person as a store, both of which were filled with furniture to the amount of $25,000, all of which was destroyed. The loss of the buildings and stock is estimated at $40,000, upon which there was an insurance of $25,000. The flames also communicated to the three-story brick building, No. 124, accupied by Mr. Roux as a dwelling house, which was also destroyed. Also to No. 120, occupied as a shoe store, which was destroyed; and to the two-story frame house, occupied by several poor families, which was also destroyed. The flames also communicated to the Eighth ward station house, but it was only partially injured. Also, to the 2 large brick four-story houses, Nos. 116 and 118 Wooster street, which were also destroyed. The wind being high at the time, the fire crossed the street and communicated to the Oceana engine company's house, No. 121, which was destroyed, and to Nos. 119, 117, 115, 113, three-story brick houses.

The beautiful Jewish house of worship has suffered severely. The roof and corners are much damaged, as also the ornamental woodwork and fresco painting of the interior. The walls of the largest building fell as soon as the roof fell through, but the firemen were enabled to escape without hurt. All the furniture of the dwellings was destroyed, and it is said there was no insurance upon any of it. Persons were driven in haste from their slumbers, without time to gather up their clothes. The whole loss is estimated at $150,000, and it is said the insurance upon the whole will not exceed $75,000. The fire originated from the flue of Plate's steam engine chimney. The men employed in the building, numbering some 125, are turned out of business, with the loss of nearly or quite all their tools. It is the largest fire with which the city has been visited since the great fire of 1845.

Great Fire at Medina--Much of the Business Portion in Ruins.

A sad calamity befel the thriving county town of Medina, last evening, the 11th. A fire broke out in the dry goods store of Messrs. C. & A. Castle, on the Square and Columbus turnpike, which it destroyed, then swept south, burning the mechanic's Block, occupied by C. E. Bostwick's tin shop, Ashley Loring's hat store, and Barney Prentis' shoe store and grocery, and the adjacent dwelling house of Dr. Peak; and crossing the street, the dry goods store of H. G. Blake drug store of Robber chapel, jewelry shop of Mr. Whitemore, stage house of Wm. Chidester, saddle and harness shop of Mr. Ferris, and the dwelling house of Dr. Munger, were consumed.

We have no details or estimate of the loss of property. It is probable that a considerable portion of the contents of the buildings were saved; still the blow is a heavy one to Medina, and the loss probably reaches $30,000 to $40,000. The stage teams &c., at Chidester's were saved. The night was quite calm, and the fire raged from 9 to 11 o'clock. The light was observed in this city, a distance of twenty-seven miles.—Cleveland Herald.

To the foregoing, the Wooster Democrat adds the following further particulars:

P. S. We learned from stage passengers last night, that the whole number of buildings burned was twenty-one; among which were some of the best in the town, including a number of stores, the "Whig" printing office, &c.

Fire in Washington City.

Correspondence of the Balt. Sun, April, 19.

Early this morning, a daughter of Mr. H. A. Wheedon, who occupied one of the large three-story houses on Fourteenth street, opposite Willard's, arose from her bed, when she discovered smoke in her chamber. Instantly flying to the passage, she found that also densely filled, and gave the alarm to the rest of the family. Mrs. W. hastened down stairs, when she found that some fiend had set fire immediately under the stairway, in the basement story, with a view to cut of all retreat, which nearly proved effectual, for the wind blowing a gale, the devouring element spread with fearful rapidity. Mr. Wheedon leaped from a third story window, with a child in his arms, buoyed by a father's affection, and most providentially escaped from harm. I learn also, that Lieutenant Ringgold descended from the upper story, under circum-stances of great peril by a rope.

In this house Major J. D. Graham occupied a room as an office, and it is a subject of deep regret that everything therein, embracing the charts of the North eastern Boundary, and a valuable library of important works, were entirely destroyed. This house and its contents are a smoking mass of ruins. It was owned by Messrs. White & Stephens, of Philadelphia—no insurance. Another house adjoining, owned by the same firm, was partially destroyed.

A small frame building, next door to the former, occupied by Mr. Ready, was knocked to pieces by the falling walls.

A two-story brick dwelling north of the frame, owned by Mrs. Blanchard, of this city, and occupied by Mr. Turrey, is also reduced to ashes.

The gale wafted the sparks and cinders a considerable distance, and at one period seven different houses were on fire.

Some good citizens, with the best intentions, sent the firemen two demijohns of liquor, which, I regret to learn, was productive of much evil. Few men, worn down with fatigue and drenched as were the intrepid and praise worthy firemen on this occasion, for they saved the whole neighborhood from devastation, can exercise that discretion which is desirable. But, in all cases, a bucket of coffee from the hands of the fair maidens of any city, is vastly preferable, and more serviceable than ardent spirits. Let the girls try it. I remember well one present of the kind to the Patapsco company, of Baltimore.

Fatal Accident.—We regret to learn that on Wednesday morning, Mr. Dan. Snyder, of Perry tp., was so severely injured by a fall from his wagon, his horses having run away in the village of Irville, that his recovery is considered hopeless.—His skull was fractured, and his back-bone broken.—*Z. Our old friend, J Needham of Morgan County, is informed that, when we get to see Br. Warren, all shall be made right and satisfactory, in reference to his paper.

We say to Br. J. Mills of Adrian, Mich., we know not why he does not receive his paper regularly, as we know it is regularly mailed. If he will inform us what numbers are missed, we will cheerfully supply them, if possible.

Br. C. Craig, what you request shall be attended to with pleasure, and any thing else you will.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encourraging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	17
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chancyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	5
Rev. A. S. Robinson, Ridgefield Four Cor. O.	7
Rev. J. Nichols, Hoskinsville, O.	5
Rev. R. M. Dalbey, Bethel, O.	5
Rev. O. P. Stephens, Catawba, O.	6
Rev. C. H. Williams, Bournville, O.	5
Rev. S. P. Kezerta, Bainbridge, O.,	5
Rev. T. Finkbine, Cincinnati, O.,	7
Rev. W. G. Fowler, Paintersville, O.	6.

☞ We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are heldt responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

This law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS.—The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year, for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

☞ All orders must be accompanied by the MONEY, post paid, to insure attention.

POET'S CORNER.

ALL'S FOR THE BEST!

All's for the best; be sanguine and cheerful;
Trouble and sorrow are friends in disguise;
Nothing but Folly goes faithless and fearful;
Courage forever is happy and wise:
All for the best,—if a man would but know it;
Providence wishes us all to be blest;
This is no dream of the pundit or poet;
Heaven is gracious, and—All's for the best!

All for the best! set this on your standard,
Soldier of sadness, or pilgrim of love,
Who to the shores of Despair may have wandered,
A way-wearied swallow, or heart-stricken dove:
All for the best!--be a man but confiding,
Providence tenderly governs the rest,
And the frail bark of His creature is guiding,
Wisely and warily, all for the best.

All for the best! then fling away terrors,
Meet all your fears and your foes in the van,
And in the midst of your dangers or errors
Trust like a child, while you strive like a man:
All's for the best!--unbiased, unbounded,
Providence reigns from the East to the West;
And by both wisdom and mercy surrounded,
Hope and be happy that All's for the best.

SLAVES.

They are slaves who fear to speak,
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think;
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

The Restrictive Rule--Per Contra.

NO. III.

MR. EDITOR,—In our last we promised to consider some of the evil consequences resulting from the abolition of the Restrictive Rule of the Constitution. Let us remark, however, before we proceed, we do not claim that there are no difficulties connected with the itinerancy. As with individuals, there is no man, from him who has attained the highest moral eminence, down to the lowest sot, but what has both dark and bright spots in his character, so there is no form of government, good or bad, but what has its advantages and disadvantages. Here, as well as every where else:

> "Each pleasure hath its poison too,
> And every sweet a snare."

But, as in individual characters some are far more excellent, so in systems of government one may be greatly preferable to an other, especially under certain circumstances.

It is admitted, then, the itinerancy has its difficulties, and one of the most prominent, is, the sacrifices it requires of the ministers of religion. But, as the boys seem greatly to rely on "Apostolic usage," or example, to sustain them, we call their attention to the practice of the Apostles in regard to privations and afflictions. Take Paul, for instance: "And now behold I go bound in spirit to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befal me there, save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city (not in one city) saying that bonds and afflictions abide me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy." &c. (See Acts 20 & 22d.)

This is the spirit, and these are the sentiments of an honest and magnanimous minister of the gospel, whose whole life was dedicated to the service of the church without ever once attempting to sacrifice her interests to accommodate his own. Who would not, when looking at the disinterested and holy zeal Paul manifested in the cause of his Divine Master, be prepared for the triumphant termination of his ministry as recorded in the last chapter of Second Timothy;—"For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me at that day," &c. "Apostolic usage," indeed! If the boys were only under the influence of the spirit and practice of these great and good men, the church would never have been annoyed by their puerile efforts to overturn the foundations of her economy merely to accommodate their supposed ease. Passing strange that some people are so tremblingly alive all o'er to "Apostolic usage" so far as it respects how they went out, and how they came in; how they sat down, and how they rose up, but at the same time can see little worth attention in the high moral example set by those eminent men of God.

As to the consequences resulting from the abolishment of the Restrictive Rule, we remark,

1. This rule is a great preserver of the harmony of the church. There are few ministers who get along even one year without difficulties among the people, and may have the faculty of making disturbances wherever they go. In this case the Restrictive Rule, by seperating the parties, often restore harmony to the church.—Whereas, if a man could be continued indefinitely in an appointment, he would often find means to accomplish his purpose, to the distruction of the Society, for men would generally bear as long as there was a prospect of getting rid of their difficulty, by the limitation rule, but when this hope was cut off they would probably become desperate, and either divide or withdraw from the church. Abolish the restrictive rule and you abolish with it this great instrument in preserving the harmony of the body.

2. Do away this rule and you open a wide door for temptation, which I am afraid would have a deleterious influence upon the moral habits of ambitious boys. But open the way for them to stay in a location as long as they can make a bargain with the people, and so soon as they are safely moored in a "snug little harbor" they will hang to it like death and fetters to the tomb. In order to increase their friends and to extend their influence, one will be tempted to join the Odd Fellows, an other the Free Masons—do almost any thing to hook their anchor fast & firm. And we have more than one example, fresh before us, to shew that when ministers are reckless in principle, they have often the power, even with only a minority in their favor, of reducing Churches to the verge of ruin.

3. It would give the death blow to the itinerant system. The restrictive rule is the main spring in this machinery, break it and the thing is worthless. It would open the way for a few men of flexible morality, by craft and management, to worm themselves into the best livings in the church, and to drive all honest men from the concern.—But the boys say that to abolish the Restrictive Rule, so far from destroying, would greatly improve the itinerant system.—This is mere declaration, and either evinces much insincerity in making it, or a total ignorance of human nature. Their proposition, in our judgment, so far from improving, would encounter most of the evils with but few, if any, of the advantages of the itinerant plan.

4. That the tendency of the new mode is to Congregationalism is evident to every one who is capable of looking beneath the surface. Indeed, some of the fraternity have honesty enough to openly avow their opposition to itinerancy, while the arguments of all, notwithstanding their flat denial to the contrary, look directly to a settled pastorate. Such a state of things would most assuredly ruin the church; first because the habits and tastes of the Methodist people are in favor of an interchange of ministers, and if they cannot be favored with this in the Methodist Protestant Church they will go where they can: Secondly, because there are comparatively few congregations able to support a stationary minister, and under the new dispensation they could not fail to decline rather than increase.

5. Where has our cause been the most successful, I ask? Just look over the history and statistics of the church and you will see that such Conferences as have the most efficient itinerancy have prospered the most abundantly; while those, at the East and South, whose itinerancy is merely nominal, make but little head way, and in some instances have even retrogaded. Let the boys, by their quackery, bleed the itinerancy to death, and we shall all soon be in the condition of the Boston and other similar districts.

Yours, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

Meadow Farm, O., April, 1848.

P. S. In our last we proposed declining to say any thing more on the Restrictive Rule after this No., as our friend Palemon had engaged in it, as we presumed he would cover the whole ground. But as he has quit, and there are some things yet which ought to be said, we may give several numbers yet. And Mr. Editor, as we waited patiently till the boys were all thro', before we said any thing, we now claim that it is your duty to make them be still, if they will not do it without, until we are done, and not publish for them, to the exclusion of our communications, until their turn comes.

The Convention of 1830, and the RESTRICTIVE RULE.

In reference to religious belief and action, the word "toleration" has no meaning in these United States. Each denomination has such perfect religious freedom that any one may cause its liberty to be destructive of itself. Any church is free to fix one or more balls and chains to its legs, and to ornament itself with a straight jacket. Thus, while exulting in freedom, from civil pains and penalties and the impossibility of their imposition by any power foreign to itself, a church may glory in pains and penalties self-imposed. These are unquestioned rights of American Churches. Those which are in self-bondage are as worthy of it as is a priest of self-flagellation. The merit is about equal. The example, consequences, and criminality, are very unequal. As to the example of the priest, few but priests will follow that; as to consequences, stripes are honorable; and as to criminality, if the priest does not complain, who may? It was his own act for his own good. His back will soon heal, as it has before, and then it will be his turn to applaud the self-flagellation of his brethren, as they applauded him. Protestants laugh at such folly, but laughter is surely out of place when it is known that superogatory stripes are self-inflicted for the benefit of others, and that too when there is no necessity for stripes at all. The priest may plead precedent or law, or the first rules of his order—just go and inform him that there is as much religion in a locomotive as in his precedents or laws or usages—he is as free a moral agent as a steam carriage. If he persist in his right of whipping himself—why he is free to continue the practice.

The Convention of 1830: It was not assembled for the purposes of endowing the ministry by denying it liberty, nor to make compulsory laws for the associated churches. Its declared intentions were to construct a constitution and government securing to ministers and members of the churches their rights and privileges. To constitute representative churches, one of the elementary principles of which should be the self-governing power. "Nothing is so indomitable, so stubborn, and so mighty, as a principle." Did the convention, then constitute self-governing churches? They did, if the Restrictive Rule is the church, for that governs all ministers (itinerant) and all stations and circuits. Here are two indomitable principles in conflict in these free churches. The first, "Whatever power may be necessary to the formation of rules and regulations, is inherent in the ministers and members of the church." That is to say—All legislative power in the church is inherent in the representatives of the church who from time to time may have that power. The second principle is in the Restrictive Rule, which has the inherent power to nullify any legislation contrary to itself.—What is to be done? We must contend for the representative principle. Legislation belongs to those who have it by appointment of the represented. "It is only by many struggles and defects, that great principles triumph."

It was a great mistake of the convention to suppose that the lapse of two or three years would disqualify itinerant ministers for future usefulness, in all places in which they might be pastors for those periods of time! It was, indeed, a marvellous error to suppose that ministers, and churches, and annual conferences, could not become competent to decide for themselves, and that, therefore, it was a duty of that convention to decide for them to the end of the world! It is a cause for wonder that a body of representatives who had dispensed with bishops, presiding elders, and the "full powers," should itself assume full powers over all generations to come! An ardent zeal for itinerancy, a dread of Congregationalism, a fear that there might be a coming short of Methodism, induced the borrowing of a law repealable at any time by any general conference of the M. E. C. So that, instead of rejecting a bad example, the convention very innocently adopted it, and made it as permanent as possible.

Some of the gains and losses by this rule are these: compelling the ministers of the churches to give place to each other at certain times, however much the ministers or circuits or stations or annual conferences, or the public, might deprecate these changes. Compelling, for aught the convention could know, the necessity in many cases, of a sort of moral suicide of preachers and churches. Now, we say not one word to impugn the motives of any member of the convention. It is impossible. All that is said is,—a great mistake was made! It is time that it was rectified. The impudence of this rule should cause its overthrow—to the aggregate church, to ministers, to general, and annual conferences, its language is, "Thus far may ye go and no further!" Are not our ministers and churches self-governed on the representative principle?—Yea, verily, if in this rule is found the power of the church to govern itself.

Our late worthy and venerable brother SNETHEN, was not favorable to a convention in 1830—he was not a member of it. He thought that we ought to have operated with the first conventional articles, until we had gained some experience. Of the rule under consideration, he said—"I can never approve of this rule while I have a spark of reason left." Changing for change sake, he utterly condemned. He would have had free annual conferences.

Shall our Annual Conferences be free—so free that each one may retain or reject this rule, as each may choose? This is all that is desired besides its repeal. Conferences will have this liberty. Let them take it—it is their "inherent" right—and, of course, their duty to take it, when the time comes.

We do not recollect any discussion of "the rule" in the convention of 1830. It passed as an adjunct of itinerancy. And the convention, or some of its members, thought it wise to constitute the adjunct an inseparable companion of itinerancy. Now, it is well to know that this adjunct is not an essential part of itinerancy, & may be seperated from it; so that the annual conferences, which are essential to itinerancy, may have the power of the rule, exercising the power at their discretion. Liberty must not be ruled out, of these bodies; for, as has been said, legislation can only belong to those who have it.

One question occupied the chief regard of the convention. The question of Slavery greatly agitated it for several days, and was very near causing its dissolution. The stormy elements were calmed by submiting the following by the writer—

"But neither the general conference nor any annual conference, shall assume power to interfere with the constitutional powers of the civil governments, or with the operation of the civil laws; yet nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize or sanction any thing inconsistent with the morality of the New Testament."

Perhaps no part of our constitution has been more frequently quoted and remarked upon than the above, (excepting always the restrictive rule) What was its intended meaning? The friends of human freedom disavowed all designs of resisting the civil laws—such a thought never occurred to them—but they had certain opinions, derived from the New Testament, condemnatory of slavery. What could they do but maintain those opinions, casting upon the slaveholders the responsibility of deciding for themselves what is the morality of the New Testament in these connections. This was their right. But the convention as such, in no wise approved of Slavery! Nor did any one desire it to do so.

The agreement was: We of the free States will not resist the civil laws—but this disclaimer shall not be so construed as to sanction anything inconsistent with the morality of the New Testament. But slavery is contrary to the N. Testament; therefore, we disclaim all that is said to sanction slavery. And, further, we hold slaveholders to an observance of the morality of the New Testament, as we are willing ourselves to be held.

Answer to "A Virginian."

NO. V.

Virginian asks "What do you mean by immediate emancipation, that you will go, and purchase a colony where we may send them—or do you mean amalgamation, that is admitting them to all the privileges of the white population, in marriage, particularly?"—By immediate emancipation we mean, that the slaves of the south shall be liberated from slavery as soon as it can possibly be done in a safe, and peaceable manner.—That the public mind be brought to bear upon the subject of slavery immediately. And that the slaves be brought up from goods, and chattels to persons, and instead of being under the absolute dominion of the slaveholder, and slave trader, he should be placed under law like any other rational being. By emancipation we mean that the slave should be placed, where he can receive a reasonable compensation for his toils, and if he is worthy of stripes let him be held responsible to the law, and not to the person called his master. We also mean that the slave be placed where he can if he chooses, marry, and bring up his family in the nurture, and admonition of the Lord, without being liable to be sold at the public sale, to the highest bidder, and forever be separated from his family. As for amalgamation, the Lord knows that there is enough of that going on at the south continually, and to such an alarming extent that the Hon. H. Clay gave it as his opinion if things continue as they now are it would not be more than 150 or 200 years before the colored blood would run out, or be lost in the white. And what in the name of reason can prevent amalgamation, so lorg as slavery endures, and the slaves wholly under the will, and auhority of their masters and drivers? That slavery is of the Devil I have no manner of doubt, and if he does not ultimately have all who will not repent of the wrongs they have done to the poor, suffering, and rejected slaves, there will be but little use of having a Devil. If the abolitionists are no better men by nature than their opposers—they have not, as has the slaveholder, an opportunity of screening themselves behind laws of their own make, and of carrying on their oppressive operations against any portion of their fellow men or women. And if their practice is no better than slaveholders on some other subjects, one thing is certain that their sentiments on the subject of slavery, and their practice as far as that subject is concerned is altogether better. But one from old Virginia is willing to read what the anti-slavery men feel disposed to write, and says "a free discussion upon the subject of slavery, if conducted in a right spirit would doubtless do good;" and in the same article he says he would endeavor to obtain some subscribers for the Recorder, "were it not so strongly spiced with abolition, editorially, and otherwise." Now Mr. Editor, I was thinking, and enquiring of myself how we could have a free discussion upon the subject of slavery without having some spicing of abolition? And if the Recorder is the only paper connected with our church where slavery men, and anti-slavery or abolitionists may meet and have this "free discussion" which will do good ought not this Brother, and all the south of the same views use their utmost endeavors to obtain subscribers for the Recorder. But this writer says, many abolitionists "so soon as slavery comes up, they almost literally boil over, with the foam of a wild, and terrible madness." Now Mr. Editor, I think that this writer is mistaken all of a "feet," and that he is trying to put the boot on the wrong foot. I ask, and let the history of our country for the last twelve years answer. Have the abolitionists or the adherents of slavery strove to put down the discussion of slavery—thrown down, mobbed, & destroyed the press? Which has opened its columns for discussion on the slavery question? Who have violated the laws of the land by searching the post offices for anti-slavery documents, and burning them in the presence of a large meeting of the citizens? Who have offered thousands of dollars for the apprehension, and delivery into their hands of distinguished ministers of the gospel, and other citizens of the free States because they dared to speak upon the subject of slavery? And who have lost their lives in this conflict with the powers of darkness? We will close our allusions to past history by giving an extract which was agreed to by both Houses of the Virginia Legislature of Feb. 16, 1836.

"Resolved, That the non-slaveholding States of the Union, are respectfully, but earnestly requested promptly to adopt PENAL ENACTMENTS, or such other measures as will effectually suppress all associations within their respective limits, purporting to be or having the character of abolition societies." But these days of tribulation are passing away, and when the "people of the south" get over "watching against the abolitionists, as a shepherd is against the wolves that would enter his fold," with their dogs, traps, or strichnine they will perhaps be enabled to hold a free discussion on the subject of slavery. I sincerely hope that our Virginian friends, will continue to read, think, investigate, and will write upon the subject of slavery, and if they know how to write without falling into the same evils which they say our anti-slavery friends have fallen into, we shall expect them to do so. The time is not far distant when ministers, and church members will realize that they will suffer loss in the eyes of a christian community by being connected with the system of slavery.

Yours in favor of freedom,

LICENSE IN INDIANA.—By a resolution of the last Legislature, each township in Indiana was to take a vote, on the first Monday in April, on the question of granting licenses to sell ardent spirits within its limits. All who do not write "no license" on their tickets, will be counted in favor of the continuance of the present law.

M. Cremieux, the Israelite.--J. Q. Adams.

One of the ablest members of the Provisional Government of France, is the celebrated Jewish advocate, M. Cremieux. He was a member, in company with Isambert, of the great Anti-Slavery Convention held in London in 1840. In his speech in that Convention, he vindicated the Jews from the charge of Slavery, and cited the noble example of the Essenes, who first declared Slavery to be a crime. "In this assembly of Christians," said he, "I, a Jew, demand the complete abolition of servitude. My enthusiasm is equal to yours. Abolish Slavery, proclaim equality; it is a noble and glorious mission. The glory of this mission belongs to two great nations, long divided by war, now uniting in the cause of the world's civilization. The words of England and France will be heard by the world. How sublimely have they been re-echoed already from that very Republic of America where so many private interests oppose the emancipation of the blacks! How many generous hearts are there beating only for the sacred interests of humanity. See their representatives in this hall, uniting with those of France and England. Yes! we shall attain the object of our wishes. The holy alliance—the united will of France and England proclaiming the abolition of human Slavery, who can resist? This is the happiest day of my existence, I shall dwell with delight on the recollection that I have been permitted to give utterance to my sentiments in an assembly like the present; and from this moment my life will acquire in my eyes more consistency and more real importance."

In transcribing these remarks of the French orator, our mind has recurred to a conversation which we held with the lamented John Quincy Adams, a few days before his death. He was expressing his great solicitude in respect to the question of free or slave territory. He longed, he said, to see a step taken by our Government which would place the seal of national disapprobation on the institution of Slavery. He referred to the late negotiations of England and Portugal on the subject of the slave trade, warmly commended the answer of the British Government to the demand of the Portugese commissioners that the treaty for the abolition of the infamous traffic should be limited to a brief term of years—the substance of which was: that the British Government could consent to no other period for the termination of the treaty, than six months after the abolition of Slavery throughout the world! "Here then," said he, "England is pledged, and France will soon unite with her, to put an end to Slavery throughout the world." He longed he said, to see our own country in a position which would enable her to join in the great work. Would that the venerable man could have lived to read the noble decree of the Government of regenerated France for the immediate abolition of Slavery! France and England are now united on this question. When shall our Republic join the "holy alliance," spoken of by Cremieux?

Emigrant's Friend Society.

The Emigrant's Friend Society, recently formed in this city, have just issued an appeal to the public, setting forth its object, and calling upon all persons benevolently disposed, to come forward and aid in carrying them out to a successful result. From this appeal, which is written with great force and clearness, we gather the purposes of this Society to be to circulate in the Old World correct intelligence respecting this country, and thereby disabuse foreigners of those false and extravagant notions which many have entertained of things in America, and suffered loss rather than received a benefit by removal; also, to expose and prevent the various frauds practised on emigrants by unprincipaled agents at the ports from which they sail, and thus counteract the cruel sufferings to which many are subjected during long voyages, from scarcity of provisions and frightful diseases; and also to endeavor to provide for poor emigrants, arriving at this port, suitable places of accommodation, where they may have an opportunity of securing personal cleanliness, and putting themselves in a suitable condition to go into permanent situations.

The plan contemplated by the Society is to select a suitable lot of a few acres, in the suburbs of the city, and erect thereon shanties or barracks, where emigrants may have temporary accommodations until they obtain permanent situations, the ground to be cultivated as a truck garden, on which they may work for their board. The cost, it is thought, will not much exceed two thousand dollars, and where is the citizen who will not cheerfully contribute to an enterprise so benevolent and wise? To those of our fellow citizens in whose memory is the vivid recollection of the moment when they first set foot on a strange land, and who, "know" the heart of a "stranger," a "word" is more than "sufficient," and those whose prouder lot is to breathe here their natal air, will scarcely be behind in this labor of love to the stranger, remembering they themselves are the children of "strangers in a strange land." Arrangements have been made by the directors for a personal application to their fellow citizens for subscriptions; but, as it will be saving of time and trouble, a favor will be conferred by those who are disposed to become members, by leaving their names, with the sum of one dollar, at either of the following places:—Society's Office, 23 North Front street; L. Herbert, Tobacconist, 74 North Second street; A. Traquair, Mayor's Office.

The Officers of the Society are: President—Joseph R. Chandler; Vice President—A. Traquair; Treasurer—George R. Graham; Secretary—D. R. Thomason. Directors—James Gowen, I, Glentworth, J. Young, John Thomason, R. S. Clark, and L. Herbert.

Most heartily do we approve the objects of this excellent Society. Let every citizen who can spare a dollar enrol his name as a member.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purgatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. GENERAL CONFERENCE
PROSPECTUS
Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continue longer, the Daily will bo furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowing one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

THE MINISTER'S CALL.

Go, saith the Holy Spirit,
Go spread the truth abroad,
Go, if thou would'st inherit
The favor of thy God.
Cast all the world behind thee,
Its pleasure, pomp and power,
Thy guide thou still wilt find me,
Even in thy darkest hour.

The vineyard lies before thee,
In ruin deep and wide;
Go spread the saving story
Of Jesus crucified.
Tell how to purchase pardon
He spilt his precious blood,
In Kedron's gloomy garden,
On Calv'ry's rugged wood.

Tell, too, how he has riven
The fetters of the grave,
And ever lives in heaven
The contrite soul to save.
A full and free salvation
Is offer'd now through grace,
Go spread the invitation
To Adam's guilty race.

Tell of the joys of heaven,
The glorious blood-wash'd throng,
The crown by Jesus given,
The never-ceasing song,
Of joyful adoration
To him whose precious blood,
From every land and nation
Hath brought them nigh to God.

Tell of the chrystal river,
That sweet life-giving flood,
The golden streets, forever
Lit by the smile of God;
The happy—happy greeting
Of friends who're gone before,
That sweet eternal meeting
Where parting is no more.

Tell of the unmix'd sorrows
That wait the sinners death,
The gloomy—doleful horrors
Of that sad world beneath,
The worm that never dieth,
The groans that never cease,
The tear that never dryeth,
The fires that still increase.

Where'er thou goest, oh, dare not,
To sooth the unholy throng,
But cry aloud and spare not
The soul that doeth wrong.
With tears and prayers most fervent,
Your ardent efforts blend,
God will be with his servant
Till all your toils shall end.

Br. Bassett: The enclosed Essays on "The Politics of Christianity," are by that eminent writer, Edward Miall, Editor of "The Nonconformist," one of the leading Organs of Dissent in England. I am persuaded that your intelligent Readers will be obliged to you for favoring them with these articles. There is, it may be, too little of Christianity in the politics of the day, and so it must be until politics shall be ruled by Christianity. May the time soon come.

The Politics of Christianity.

NO. I.

NEGLECTED WORTH.

Underneath the surface of Christianity—altogether out ef the search of those whose search has not been pushed beneath the letter—not to be got at without laborious and well-directed thought, there lie, in rich abundance, veins of practical wisdom, applicable to all the serious purposes of life, and capable of being turned to account in all the departments of human conduct. Great is the mistake of those who fancy that revealed truth casts light upon man, upon his powers, his rights, and his relationship, and his duties, only in that aspect of his being which looks towards eternity. That, no doubt, is the main object for which it was given—but in accomplishing its chief end, it could hardly, in the nature of things, fail of securing many that are secondary only, and incidental. Tell us the grand secret of the Divine administration as it affects our race, and you tell us, by implication, all the lesser things which have relation to its government. Show us what man is, what position he holds, and what he is meant to be,—show us this upon authority which cannot be impeached, and you put us in possession of materials which, fairly applied, will lead to the discovery of every principle by which he may most successfully be managed. Hence, reason would teach us to look into Christianity for the germ of every human right, the primitive elements of every human obligation. That field, so glorious to look upon, overlies many a hidden treasure—and, until our philosophy has learned to dig into its bowels for the ore of truth, not a little of the substantial worth of Christianity will remain neglected because unknown.

There are men, we know, who regard religion and politics as natural enemies. A temporary truce between them is the largest extent of argument they can tolerate. Christian principles carried into the domain of civil government, by Christian men, they treat as a blunder closely bordering upon crime—a rash and unwarranted blunder at best, which, in most cases, is meetly punished by a loss of spirituality and a shipwreck of character, "Touch not, taste not, handle not," is the pith of their advice in reference to all political movements. And worldly statesmen, wise in their generation, have heartily echoed back the cry. The maxims by which they are governed, the devices to which they resort, the ends they propose, must needs, in order to pass muster, be referred to any standard rather than that furnished by revelation. No doctrine could more exactly suit their purposes than that which releases them from the necessity of harmonizing their proceedings with the claims of Divine truth.

Strip this notion of the cant and conventionalism it which it is commonly duped, and you have before you one of the ugliest absurdities to which intelligent minds have at any time done homage. What is it but this? That the love of God and man which Christianity begets in the heart shall exert no moral influence over the cause of civil government—that true religion, which exalts and helps and cleanses human conduct in every other sphere, which sweetens all social relationships, and regulates all earthly responsibilities—must leave the department of magistracy untouched—that the citizen must lay by his piety in order to the discharge of his political duties, and either vacate the position assigned to him by a Providence, and renounce its obligations, or, by kind of spiritual Mesmerism, put his religious principles to sleep. This is what the doctrine means, if it means anything. On behalf of the politics—on behalf of the numberless myriads whose interests are vitally effected by political causes—on behalf of that embodiment which we call "The Church," whose position for good has been so often and so seriously interfered with by "the powers that be," we call upon any man whose good sense has not been drugged by this mischievous absurdity, to lend a helping hand in stifling it once for all. What is there, we ask, in the realm of politics that this stupid dogma should be allowed to girdle its borders, and prevent the entrance thereinto of heaven-born truth? Has it been the common refuge of intellectual and moral prostitution? The greater is the need, the fuller the scope, for the beneficent working of genuine christian life.

But the divorce of politics from religion has even been more baneful in its effects than absurd in its nature. We claim the attention of the serious of all denominations to the facts of the case. We ask, whether christian truth, as exhibited in the pulpit and the press, has established any powerful hold upon the masses? Is it not too clear, that the vast majority of the industrious poor are strangely indifferent, if not secretly opposed, to it? The natural distaste of human nature for the humbling doctrines of the gospel does not explain this melancholy fact—for that distaste is equally decided, and quite as operative, in the middle walks of life as in the lowest. Nay, more! other things being equal, it has been ordinarily found, that as "to the poor the gospel is preached," so among the poor it has the warmest welcome. How comes it that in this country, general experience is reversed, and that the class least open to worldly seductions, is also least disposed to spiritual things. The phenomena cannot be said to have its origin in any general law—for in the West Indies, the slave class prior to emancipation, the hard-worked laborer subsequently, constituted the most religious portion of the community. We suspect that in Great Britain, Christianity has failed in secnring the respect of our industrial population, because, the phase in which the Church has set it forth, has not been such as might serve to indicate a kindly interest in the rights & the liberties of the down-trodden many. Religious profession has stood by in silence whilst men in power selfishly spoiled the people—and instead of rebuking oppression, sided with the oppressors.—That Divine maxim, "Do unto others as ye would they should do unto you," was never practically embodied in the laws affecting the masses—and, unhappily, the representatives of evanghcal light and love, have never been earnest in their advocacy of social justice. The consequence, is what we have stated, that the general body of the working classes have conceived an aversion for revealed truth.

The contrast, in reference to religious knowledge and habits, presented by the West India peasantry to that of our own country, suggests the immense importance of making men understand the bearing which Christianity has upon their social and civil rights. Had the working people in Great Britain been wont to hear at the lips of the pious some defense of their rights—had they witnessed in political arrangements a genuine working out of the benign principles of God's truth—had they been taught to believe that injustice perpetrated upon them could look for no sanction from the living exponents of revelation—in a word, had they seen in evangelical communities of whatever name a readiness to sympathise with weakness rather than strength, to elevate the depressed, to notice the forsaken, to mete out equity to the wronged, and administer encouragement to the humble and downcast, Christianity would have had its strong hold in their respect and affections, instead of being, as now, looked at askance as a deceiver. The severance of politics and religion, so unnatural in itself, has induced the rejection of religion by the myriads whose interest political exclusiveness has betrayed, and well-nigh ruined.

May we, then, request an attentive and candid hearing, whilst discoursing, for a few successive weeks, on "The Politics of Christianity?" The subject to our thinking, is one of profound interest and incalculable importance. Our method of dealing with it may prove ineffective—but we do hope, before we have done, to leave an abiding impression upon the mind of our readers, that Christianity has a right to prescribe in the world of politics—that it does prescribe in its own inimitable manner—& that the surest way to national greatness and prosperity is to follow its prescriptions with implicit confidence.

DR. SCUDDER'S JOURNAL.

Decline of Heathen Rites and Institutions.

[Doct. Scudder gives the following account of efforts to abolish suttees, infanticide, slavery and human sacrifices, in several parts of India.]

May 6, 1847.—It is a pleasing circumstance that the abominable rites of the heathen are gradually coming to an end in different parts of this extensive country. The governor-general of India has lately published the following translation of a proclamation by the Gwalior Durbar, prohibiting the burning of widows within the territories of the king of Scindiah. "The political agent of Jeypoor, having collected the Shastrees, made inquiries of them respecting suttee, and they said that the custom was iniquitous, and then this custom was prohibited by the Jeypoor government. This Durbar had previously issued verbal orders, prohibiting the custom; and now a proclamation is issued, to the effect that the Amil should take precautions and call on the Zumeendars, Chowdres, Karoongoes and other officers, not to allow a suttee to take place in their villages. If a suttee takes place in any village, and the Zumeendar does not give information to the Sirkar, such Zumeendar shall be imprisoned for twelve years; and if any Amil, after having received information of a suttee being about to take place, does not prevent it, such Amil shall be deprived of his situation."

Female infanticide is also forbidden in Jeypoor. Efforts have also been made to abolish slavery and child-stealing in that country. To prevent all possibility of the traffic in children being practiced openly or covertly, it has been ordained that children who are with their masters of their own choice shall not be considered as slaves, but merely as servants during their own pleasure, and that the very term slave, shall be abolished. The purchase of children has hitherto been encouraged by the sect of Nagas. They repudiate marriage, and recruit their ranks by the adoption of disciples, chelas, whom they train up from their childhood in their own doctrine and discipline. It appears that they engage in money transactions with the Jeypoor Zumeendars, from whom they take boys in pledge on advancing loans, and having thus received them, settle accounts by receiving them as chelas.—The Zumeendars have the strongest aversion to the education of their children, but they are influenced thereto by the pecuniary demands against them and the oppression of the Nagas. When the period arrives, as is supposed, for the initiation and permanent alienation of their children, "they seek for other children among bad characters," who are ready to sell their children for a small consideration. Thus slave dealing continues to flourish; and the Nagas, when questioned regarding the possession of these children, state that their natural guardians have given them up voluntarily. It is stated that the chief inducement of the Nagas to lend money is the hope of obtaining children in return, and that the borrowing of money from them on the pledge of children is a great evil. It has therefore been ordained that no person shall in future thus purchase or sell children, on pain of punishment, that any one above the age of sixteen may of his own accord enter the Naga community, but that no child under that age shall be transferred to them without due authority from the Raj; and any attempt to infringe this enactment, will subject the giver and the receiver to condign punishment.

I wish I could state that human sacrifices have been discontinued among the Khonds of Goomsoor. They still continue, it is to be feared, to a frightful extent. The Khonds believe in two superior deities who rule the universe; the one being the all-benevolent, supreme Creator, and the other, whom they consider to be a female, the introducer of sin and death into the world. Of these deities, the former is worshipped by the non-sacrificing tribes without any bloody rites, although they suppose that infanticide is not unsanctioned by him. The latter obtains the chief adoration of the tribes who practice human sacrifices, and who regard it supremely essential that she should thus be propitiated, lest she might otherwise annihilate them. Her servants, however, think it possible that the murderous rites may safely be abandoned under the command of the great Creator; but cannot be forsaken apart from his ordination, without exposing the persons so acting to the vengeance of the goddess; and the great difficulty with the British government in dealing with the Khond tribes is, that when required to forego their bloody usages, they are at a loss to know whether the requisition proceeds from the beneficent power, acting by his servants; or in other words, whether they may venture to relinquish sacrifices without provoking their own ruin.

Death of a Missionary.—Rev. Joseph Islands, missionary among the Creeks, died at North Fork Town, in the Creek nation, March 8th. He has for many years been a laborious and sucessful Moissionary of the Baptist denomination among this tribe of Indians.

BLACK-EYED BOY.

Two or three years ago, I went into a town in the State of New Hampshire, to give a temperance lecture. There were many persons in the village who drank intoxicating liquors. But many came to hear me, and I noticed, just as I commenced speaking, a little bright-eyed boy, just about seven years old, who came into the hall and sat down near the door. He listened very attentively; and when I spoke of the cruel treatment of wives and children from intemperate men, I saw him more than once take his handkerchief, and wipe away the tears. I told them the pledge would prevent all this, and make men kind and pleasant; and I told the children to sign it if they would prosper and be happy in the world. This little fellow was almost the first to put his name down, and when I asked him who he was, they told me he was called Black-eyed Joe, and that his father was one of the worst drunkards in town.

It was his custom, every morning, to mingle rum and sugar with water, and pass it round to every one of the children, who took a little as well as their father and mother. He would drink again at eleven o'clock, at noon time, at four o'clock and at supper, so that when evening came he would always be intoxicated, cruel and revengeful; and sometimes he would beat his wife, and sometimes his children, or shut them out of doors in cold storms. It was this that made Joseph weep, when I told of cruelty to children, and it was this that induced him to sign the pledge.

He went home from the meeting and determined to keep his resolution. The next morning, as usual, the father took out the brown jug, mixed the pitcher of poison, and handed it to Joseph first. He shook his head and declined taking it.

'Drink, Joe!' said his father.

'I do not wish any again, sir,' replied Joseph.

His father looked at him for a moment, and then said roughly—'Did you go to that temperance meeting, Joe?'

'Yes, sir,' he replied.

'Did you sign the pledge?'

'Yes, sir.'

'What did you do that for, Joe?'

'Because, father,' said Joe hesitatingly, 'if ever I am a man, I don't want to be as you are.'

His father blushed and turned pale, stood confused a moment and then opened the door, and dashed both jug and pitcher to pieces, saying—

'You shall have a father that you won't be ashamed to be like."

From that hour he has never taken anything that can intoxicate; and is happy himself, and renders his family happy besides; and I will venture to say that Joseph will have an answer ready for any one who asks him, 'What good will it do to sign the pledge?'

'Uncle Edward, you may put my name down,' said Henry, 'and I thank you for telling me that story.'

So saying he put on his skates, ank went upon the ice with a swift motion, to tell the story of Black-eyed Joe, to his companions.—Cold Water Army.

Temperance among the Choctaws.—The Choctaw nation have, by a severe statute, forbid the importation of intoxicating drinks into their country. And in order to the rigid execution of this law, they have appointed in each of the four districts composing the nation, a number of officers, called by them, "light-horsemen," to perambulate the country and destroy all the alcoholic drinks found in their districts, and, if deemed necessary, to inflict corporeal punishment upon those in whose possession they are found. The remains of the "big jug," and the staves and hoops of the "red head," plentifully scattered about the trails and roads in the nation, attest the general faithfulness of these officers. The consequence is, that but little drunkenness is found to exist at the present time in this tribe, compared with other portions of the Indian country. R.

A Moral for Young Ladies.

"Listen," said my uncle Toby, "and you shall have a moral and example. When the wasp now in the window entered the room, you flew at it with all kinds of violence. I wonder it didn't sting every one of you. Now, in future, let a wasp, when it comes have its little bout, and make its little noise. Don't stir a muscle, don't stir a lip, but be as quiet as the statue of Venus or Diana, or anybody of that sort, until the wasp seems inclined, as at this moment, to settle.—Then do as I do now." Whereupon dipping the feather end of the pen into the cruet of salad oil, he approached the wasp, and in the softest and tenderest manner possible, just oiled it upon the body—the black, and yellow like grooms waistcoat—when down it fell—turned upon its back, and was dead in a minute. "There, girls," said he, "see what kindness and a little oil does.—Now, here's my moral and example. When a husband comes home in all ill-humor, don't cry out and fly at him; but try a little oil, in fact, treat your husband like a wasp."

Women Under Paganism

In many Pagan countries the birth of a daughter is regarded as a calamity, and an occasion of sorrow. In some tribes female infants are immediately exposed to certain death, that their parents may not have the trouble and expense of bringing them up. When the daughter is allowed to live, she is regarded as an inferior being; is frowned upon by her parents and other relations; sold to the highest bidder, in marriage; and then becomes the slave of her husband. As respects matrimony, she can rarely be said to have a choice; she is given or sold to those who are willing to take her. Such is the disgrace of celibacy in Hindostan, that many women have been known to marry decrepid and dying old men just before they drown themselves in the Ganges. Many women are buried alive with their deceased husbands, or consumed on their funeral piles. In China, women have been seen yoked with an ox or an ass, while the husband held the plough and sowed the seed. In Hindostan it is said that until recently not one female in twenty millions was acquainted with the commonest rudiments of Hindoo learning. The American Missionaries affirm that in the Island of Ceylon, when they first visited it, not a single female in a population of two hundred thousand could read: and that it was considered pernicious if not absolutely impossible, to educate a female; and heavy calamities were expected to befal thy woman who dared to aspire to the distinction of being able to read or write. Among all the Aboriginal tribes of our own country, the women do the drudgery, and the men spend their time in war, hunting and idleness. In many Pagan countries, the life of the woman is at the mercy of her husband, who, if she offend him, may kill her with perfect impunity, or at most, at the expense of a small fine.

As might have been expected under such degrading oppression and wrong, the women of Pagan and Mahommedan nations, are generally low, sensual, vicious, and unworthy of confidence. To most of them existence itself is, in reality, and felt to be a curse.

The Indian and the Hostess.

We find in Harper's School District Library, the following laconic story related of an Indian, who called at an inn in the dusk of the evening, and requested the hostess to furnish him with food and drink, stating that he had no success in hunting, and could not pay till he had better fortune. The woman refused, and began to scold him, calling him a lazy, drunken, good-for-nothing fellow. A man who sat by, noticed the poor savage, as he turned away from the unfeeling shrew, and generously ordered her to furnish him with a good supper, for which he himself would pay. The Indian having finished his meal, thanked his benefactor again and again, assuring him that he should never forget his kindness.—He added, that he had a short story to tell, should the woman be willing to hear him. The hostess, now made good-natured, readily consented. The Indian addressing his benefactor, said, 'I suppose you read your Bible?' The man assented. 'Well,' then rejoined the Indian, 'the Bible says, 'God made de world, and den he took him, and looked on him, and say, all very good.'—Den he made de light, and looked on him, and say, all 'very good.' Den he made land and water, sun and moon, grass and trees, and he took him, and looked on him, and say all 'very good.' Den he made man, and he took him and looked on him, and say, 'all very good.' Den he made woman, and took him and look on him, and he no say any such thing more.'

A Woman can Keep a Secret.

The following authentic story will invalidate the often repeated charge against women, 'that they cannot keep a secret.'

Some years since, a lady called at a glover's shop in the ourskirts of the city of London, and purchased a pair of gloves for her immediate wear, observing, at the same time, that she was on her road to Barnet—that she had left her gloves at her friend's house where she had called, and that she was apprehensive of being benighted if she went back for them. The glover fitted on the gloves, and the lady, after paying for them from a purse well stocked with bank notes, stepped into her carriage, and proceeeded on her journey. She had scarcely reached Finchley Common when a highwayman stopped the carriage and demanded her money. He entreated her not to be alarmed, as he had no intention on her person—if she surrendered her property it was all he wanted, declaring, that distress, and not his will, urged him to do this desperate act and he was determined to remove his pecuniary wants or perish. The lady gave him her purse, and the desperado rode off.

After he was gone and her fright had somewhat subsided the lady imagined that in the highwayman she recognised the voice of the glover she had just before dealt with. The conceit struck her so forcibly, that she ordered her servant to turn back to town, not choosing, she said to venture further over the heath.

On her arrival at the glover's she knocked and gained admission, the glover himself opening the door. The lady desired to speak with him in private. The glover showed her to a back parlor, when she exclaimed: 'I am come for my purse of which you robbed me this evening, on Finchley Common!' The glover was confounded; and the lady proceeded—'It is no use for you to deny it. I am convinced, and your life is at my mercy. Return my property and trust to my humanity!' The glover overcome with guilt, shame, and confusion, confessed the crime returned the purse, and pleaded his distress.—The lady, after suitable admonitions, gave him a ten pound note, bade him mend his way of life, and keep his own counsel, adding that she would not divulge his name or place of abode. She kept her word, and though the robbery was stated in the papers, the discovery was omitted; and it was not until recently, that a minute account of this singular transaction was found among the papers of the lady alluded to. Even in the private memorandum, the name and residence of the glover was omitted, and the street in that particular, rests with the lady in the grave! —Balt. Enterprise.

Narrative.

The Spanish Widow.

There lived in the province of Galicia, a lady so perfectly beautiful, that she was called by all travellers, and indeed, by all who beheld her, the "Flower of Spain." With these excellent charms, she possessed all the virtues which so rarely are to be found united to such extreme personal loveliness. She had, therefore, many wooers, especially a certain old knight of Castile, as coarse in mind as he was ungainly in person.—Being very wealthy, he fully expected this beautiful creature would gladly become his wife, the more particularly as she was of poor, though well-bred parentage. But she preferred to allow her affections to rest on a young gentleman of small estate, but amiable character, and being married to him, they retired to the provinces, and spent three years of perfect happiness as is permitted frail motals to enjoy. At the end of this period, he was obliged to go to Madrid, on the business of a lawsuit, and was unfortunately murdered on the way, leaving his unhappy widwith one little boy, and in rather straitened circumstances. Shortly after the old knight again proffered his hand, which she decidedly rejected; he neither respected the sacredness of her grief, nor her forlorn state, but molested her so continually, with letters and presents, that but for her fatherless child, she would have been content to die.

At length, she determined to withdraw to some remote village, to free herself from this odious persecution. A few days before the time she had fixed on to remove to her country lodgings, her servant, Maria, happened to open the door of a closet in her mistress's bed room, when out fell the dead body of a man; and the police being summoned by her shrieks, they soon recognized it to be that of the old knight of Castile, though his countenance was so blackened & distorted, as to appear scarcely human. It was evident he had perished by poison, and as the unhappy lady could give no account of the matter, in spite of her hitherto fair and unblemished reputation, she was thrown into prison as his murderess. The persecution she had suffered from the deceased knight was generally known, but was now attributed to a dishonorable cause, and the murder of her husband never having been cleared up, she was considered by many persons as guilty of both crimes, and the whole province was shocked that so beautiful a creature should have thus brought disgrace upon her sex, and upon human nature. At her trial the court was crowded to excess, and the lady had nothing to offer but assertions of her innocence, the servant, Maria, having suddenly disappeared, the public advocate proceeded to pass sentence of death.

It was the custom in those days, for a woman who had committed murder, to be first strangled and then burnt in the market place; but before this sentence could be pronounced, a witness was moved by remorse to come forward in her behalf. This was the servant, Maria, who had hitherto been disguised in the body of the court. She stood on one of the benches, and earnestly desired to be heard. She then confessed that she had been prevailed on by the bribes & promises of the old knight of Castile who declared he intended to marry her mistress, to secrete him in the closet in her lady chamber, but solemnly declared she knew no other cause of his death, except that on one of the shelves she had placed some sweet cakes mixed with arsenic, to poison the rats, and that the knight being rather gluttonous, might have eaten of them in the dark, and so died. At this probable explanation, the court was instantly moved to declare the lady's innocence with one voice. She reviving a little at the noise, and being told of this providential discovery, only clasped her hands, and then in a few words, commended her son to the guardianship of good men, exclaimed—"I can never survive the shame of this unhappy reproach," and with a deep sigh expired on the spot.

Wherefore do Ye Tempt the Lord?

Exodus xvii. 2.

A farmer named Higgins, an inhabitant of Baltonsborough, in Somersetshire, died about the end of 1831. From the time of his marriage in 1793, he became extremely anxious to have a son; but his wife presenting him with three daughters in succession, he became very disconsolate, & even enraged at his repeated disappointments; & vowed with an oath of imprication, that should his next child be a daughter, he would never speak to her. Before the birth of his fourth child, he impiously repeated the same solemn vow: the child however, to his inexpressible joy, proved to be a boy; but the father's satisfaction was of short continuance, for the child, as soon as it began to take notice of surrounding objects, was observed to avoid him, and never could be induced, even for a moment, to remain in his arms. As the boy advanced in years, and the time of articulation arrived, his shyness towards his father became more and more apparent; and it was soon observed, that while he conversed freely with his mother and sisters, he never addressed a word to his father, or uttered a syllable in his presence. His shyness was at first thought to be accidental as his father was much from home; but when the boy had gained the full power of speech, and still observed a constant and marked silence towards him, it became but too evident that Higgins was destined never to hold any conversation with his son. The afflicted parent often entreated him to speak to and converse with him, but neither entreaties, threats, nor promises, were of the least avail; he even promised him the half of what he possessed, if he would converse, or even speak to him, but it was all to no purpose. The mother also often desired him to oblige his father by talking to him; but his reply was, "No, mother, do you not think I would talk to father if I could? Whenever father approaches me, my voice begins to falter; and before he comes within hearing, the power of speaking entirely fails me." It is remarkable, that the inability of speaking applied to all other males, as well as the father, and continued so for thirty-five years, up to the period of his father's death. Immediately after this occurrence, he began to converse with all around, males as well as females, and he still continues to enjoy the full powers of speech. How sinful and dangerous to cherish or express dissatisfaction with the arrangements of the all-wise Providence of God! Wo to him that striveth with his Maker. —Whitecross' Anecdotes of Old Testament.

One Cause of Insanity

Indulgence in reading works of fiction is assigned by the intelligent Physician of the Mount Hope Institution, Boston, as one of the causes of insanity. Without detracting from the merits of works of fiction, there is no reason to doubt that their perusal by the young, particularly females, is hurtful and dangerous to a degree little dreamed of. Parents owe a stern and solemn duty to their children, to watch their reading, and to preserve their opening minds and hearts from the vitiating influences of much of what is called popular literature. The opinion below is worth pondering:

"Another fertile source of this species of derangement has appeared to be an undue indulgence in the perusal of the numerous works of fiction, with which the press is so prolific of late years, and which are sown broadcast over the land, with the effect of vitiating the taste and corrupting the morals of the young. Persons cannot too cautiously guard their young daughters against this pernicious practice. We have had several cases of moral insanity, for which no other cause could be assigned than excessive novel reading. And nothing is more likely to induce this disease than the education which fosters sentiment instead of cherishing real feeling—such as results from the performance of active benevolence, and the sacred duties of ordinary life, and of religious obligations—which awakens and strengthens the imagination, without warming the heart; and, to borrow the language of an eloquent divine, places the individual 'upon a romantic theatre—not upon the dust of mortal life.'"

Religious Intelligence.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Congress, O., April 25th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: For the encouragement of our friends, and with a view to the performance of duty, permit me to say, that while the Great Head of the church has abundantly blessed his word, and gloriously revived his work in other places, a mercy drop has fallen here. During the almost universal declension in religion for the last three years, probably no field of labor proportionably, partook more largely of the spirit of decline, and consequently none underwent a greater change than this. But not to dwell upon the dark side of the picture nor suffer ourselves to give a detailed account of what cannot now be avoided, we still rejoice that after a thorough sifting, there were found yet remaining a few that had not bowed the knee to Baal, "upon whom was not found the mark of the beast."—The majority of these received us willingly at the beginning of the year, young and inexperienced as we are. We went to work in the name of the Lord, filling the regular appointments, encouraging the members, and urging them to the discharge of duty and holiness of life.

At our first quarterly meeting which was appointed so as to meet our president's visit, we had a good meeting. Some interest awakened, but owing to some things that transpired about this time, the attention of the people was diverted from the proper object, and the good desired was not realized; yet, we trust our labor in the Lord was not in vain. At our second quarterly meeting we were favored with the assistance of Brs. Steadman and Moody until Sabbath evening. We had a good time. Our lovefeast on Sabbath morning was particularly interesting to many. The meeting was continued, except occasional omissions, every evening for two weeks. The church was revived, two were reclaimed, and one sinner converted. After closing the above meeting as soon as practicable we commenced a protracted effort at this place which continued about the same length of time, and resulted in the conversion of about twenty, including those that had once made a profession. May they all be "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." Our thanks are due to the friends of the Methodist Epis. Church for the christian spirit manifested and the assistance rendered at this meeting. Would that christians universally, were united in feeling and effort, for the promotion of the common cause of our great Redeemer.

Yours truly,

Br. Bassett: The Lord is still with us on Cicero Circuit. At nearly all the appointments drops of mercy are beginning to fall as harbingers of an abundant shower of grace. From the date of my last letter till our quarterly meeting, five were added to the church.

Our quarterly meeting commenced under somewhat discouraging circumstances. The weather was extremely cold, which prevented the brethren from other points of the circuit from being in attendance. Owing perhaps to the same cause we were disappointed of expected ministerial help. But the Lord sent us Br Pattee on Saturday and Brs. Paris and Bodell on Sunday. Br. Pattee labored like a true yoke fellow till Monday morning, when he left us to go to his appointments. The other brethren labored faithfully also till about noon on monday. And the best of all is God was with us in his spirit's power. The meeting closed on Monday night, and as the result the little society in that neighborhood was strengthened by the addition of 23 of their friends and neighbors to their number.—This has been the most general and powerful work of the Spirit that I have been permitted to witness since my labors commenced on this circuit. Praise the Lord. I want to see such a work all around the circuit. The additions to the membership amount in all to 54.

Brethren pray for us,

Palermo, Oswego Ct., N. Y., April 14, 1848.

Br. Bassett: The satisfaction I have taken in perusing your paper promps me to contribute my share of religious intelligence, for the comfort of those who are with me in the battles of the Lord. Though this year so far has been a season of sorrow and of trial, yet the Lord has been our helper, or we should have fainted. Our seceding Brethren having left but a small portion of influence in our favor, it was like sowing against wind and tide, to think of marshaling the Lord's host in the Methodist Protestant Church again, and look for better days, but I trust your unworthy brother in Christ, felt something like David of Israel; the cause is of God and must prevail, if our trust is in Him. I commenced my routine of labor on the circuit, our congregations soon became large, and the brethren began to look for better days. The brethren often said to me, brother, will you stand by us? And we all seemed to partake of the spirit of working for God. Our first quarterly meeting came on. Our good brother Hogan the president, was on the spot, filled with the spirit of his mission, and preached with great success. Sinners wept aloud, and God's children were made to rejoice. Here the cloud began to break, and the glimmerings of day began to appear. After Br. H. left me, I returned to the spot where our quarterly meeting was held, and labored two weeks, the result of which was, God was with us, many souls were born into the kingdom, and many more who had like Peter, sinned, could truly like Peter weep, & come back to their father's house again. Glory to God. And again the Lord has visited us on other parts of the circuit. The hand of oppression has been taken away in many places, and peace prevails. On the north part of the circuit, six miles from Oswego village, the Lord made bare his arm where the brethren told me the first time I went there they could not do anything, the cause was so low. But glory to God, it is the darkest hour just before day. I went there a few weeks ago and spent two weeks in laboring for the Lord, and the brethren took hold like Sampsons, and you may believe it was a good time. The Lord made bare his arm to save sinners. from the old silver-locked heads of families down to the youth, and made them trophies of redeeming grace. A goodly number have been added to the church, together with one worthy minister who is waiting for the reception of the church, all which prompts us to hope on, to fight on, until the victory shall be gained, and glory end what grace begun. There are many more who probably will unite with us eventually. Dear brethren pray for me, pray for the circuit, and let your souls go out for Zion still.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel.

WESTERN REGORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

☞New subscribers this week, 4. Discontinuances, 3.

Correspondents.—We are under many obligations to our Philadelphia Correspondent. He will receive our thanks for a series of papers on the Politics of Christianity, the first of which we give in this week's paper. Let them be attentively read.

S. W. W., our poet of the "Western Woods" is again welcome to our columns. Wish he would often send us favors.

Oberlin Evangelist.—We learn by several exchanges, that the publication of this excellent paper has been resumed. We have deeply sympathised with the publisher in the severe loss he sustained two months ago, in the destruction by fire of his dwelling, store, office and materials, and especially his subscription book. We are glad he has been enabled thus soon to resume the publication of the Evangelist. His paper has not as yet reached us, though we have sent ours regularly during his suspension.

Rev. Wm. B. Evans.—It is with no little pleasure that we look for a visit from this brother, in a few days. He is remembered by many in this section of country, as having been a chief pioneer of the Methodist Protestant Church at its organization. He had a principal hand in the formation of Zanesville and Newark Circuits, and travelled the former for three years. His old friends will be much gratified to see and hear him once more, after an absence of more than 15 years. Br. E. is a member of the Ohio Conference, and Superintendent of Lebanon Station.—He is expected to preach at Gratiot on Sunday morning next, and at Brownsville at 3 in the afternoon. Word has been communicated to considerable part of both circuits. Br. E. must not forget that we too desire the privilege to provide for him the three P's, a pillow, a plate, and a pulpit.

Planets.—Those who take interest in observing the heavenly bodies, will think it worth their while to take notice that the planets Jupiter and Mars will reach the point of conjunction about the middle of this month. These are the only planets visible in the evening in our hemisphere, at present. Their position is about due west, at an elevation of about 45°, at 9 o'clock in the evening. They are, however, steadily declining, (or rather the earth in its path is steadily moving off from them,) so that in some six or eight weeks they will disappear in the west, not to be looked upon again until a future year. Jupiter will be readily recognized as the brightest luminary visible, just below Castor and Pollux, a pair of stars of the second magnitude, being the principal ones of the constellation Gemini. As Jupiter occupies twelve years in performing his circuit around the sun, it takes him a year to traverse one of the constellations of the Zodiac. Last year, he was in Taurus. He is spending this year in Gemini. Of course, one has to observe his position for weeks together, to be sensible of his progress amongst the fixed stars. Not so the planet Mars. Performing his revolution in a little short of two of our years, he traverses one of those constellations in the space of every seven or eight weeks. Consequently, any observer can, from evening to evening, be sensible of his steady progress, approaching to, and receding from star after star in his path. Mars has for several weeks been traversing the constellation Taurus, but has now entered Gemini. He is approaching Jupiter, and will pass him in a proximity of a little more than one degree north in about twelve days from this date. The position of Mars, at the time of this writing, is below Jupiter, towards the north, and about as far from him as the Twins are apart, a little above. Mars at the present is not half so brilliant as at his usual first appearance, in the eastern portion of the heavens, from the fact, that he is now in a part of his orbit much more remote from the earth. He now does not equal in brightness some stars of the second magnitude.

We have been thus particular in the above statement, as we trust some of our young friends instead of spending their evenings in light reading or unprofitable amusements, may be induced to direct some attention to the rational, interesting and ennobling science of Astromomy.

Whilst on this subject, we will add that the rings of the planet Saturn have for a season disappeared. The occasion of this is, that, in the present position of that planet, the rings, which though brilliant are very thin, are turned towards the earth, and when in that position, are not seen from the earth.

Foreign News.

Never perhaps was there a period in which the news from Europe by each successive arrival, was looked for with greater interest and solicitude, than at the present. The spirit of revolution, which recently broke forth in France, has spread like wildfire over a large portion, if not all the continent, and threatens the safety of every crowned head. Universal liberty is the watchword, and the order of the day. A most important crisis is just now on hand. What shall be the end of these things, is only known to the overruling Supreme. One thing however seems most highly probable. The upturnings of several kingly dynasties, and the shaking of others, under an overruling Providence, will hasten we doubt not, the overthrow of slavery. And it is humiliating to find that our own beloved country, which echoes throughout with songs of freedom, and professes to be the model Republic, is likely to be the last to "break the yoke, and let the oppressed go free."

We gave considerable foreign news last week There have since been three arrivals, with further intelligence; the Sarah Sands, the Acadia, and the America. We glean the following items.

Denmark, awakened and alarmed by the movements in neighboring countries, was making great preparations for war.

In Stockholm serious disturbances had taken place. Venice following in the wake of France and other countries had declared for a Republic.

The report of the Revolution in Lombardy is fully confirmed.

The Austrian Troops after a desperate struggle, in which they lost twenty thousand men, were withdrawn.

The King of Sardinia, at the head of thirty thousand troops, has crossed from Piedmont into Lombardy, declaring war against Austria. With his army, he marched direct to Milan. The Austrians have been defeated in every engagement.

Charles Albert, it is thought, will soon have 250,000 troops in the field, sufficient not only to liberate Lombardy, but to threaten Austria, even at the gates of Vienna.

All the Italian Dutchies are in a state of open insurrection.

Savoy has declared itself a Republic.

Liberal governments have been conceded to Baden, Wirtemburg and Saxony.

In Hanover, the triumph of the people is complete.

The King of Prussia has promised extensive constitutional reforms to his subjects, but in so doing has exasperated Russia, the Emperor of which charges him with encouraging the Poles in their insurrection for freedom.

The Emperor of Russia has issued an ukase, ordering every man in Russian Poland, between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five to remove into the interior of Russia. He is also concentrating vast armies of his Cossacks to crush the Republican efforts of Russian Poland.

Lord John Russel has repeatedly declared the English Government will throw its entire weight into the scale in maintaining order, and in suppressing rebellion. Additional troops have been sent from England to Ireland.

The great Chartist demonstration, advertised to come off at Bath, has been forbidden by the English government. The arrangements for the meeting, however, still go on. The carriages for the petitions, the banners, ensignia, &c., are being made, and the proclamation forbidding the people to attend, only increases the excitement. Petitions numerously signed by those opposed to chartism, remonstrating against the action of the government have been sent in. The Chartists themselves have determined by a unanimous vote to hold the meeting at the risk of life, and regardless of the threats and proclamations of Government.

The Chartist leaders have issued proclamations advising no arms to be carried in the procession.

Later.—The great Chartist meeting in London passed off quietly on the 10th. There were 200,000 persons present. The petition was presented to Parliament by a deputation from their number.

Ireland was quiet. The resolute preparations made by the government had overawed the disaffected, for the present, but the manufactory of arms still continued, and the peasantry were practising with fire arms, as if with a view to the future.

The Repeal papers are very violent in their tone. John O'Connel has had an interview with the Minister, Lord John Russell, and he asked for large concessions to Ireland; Lord John, however, refused to state the intentions of the government.

Denmark has commenced hostilities against Schlesing and Holstein. A fierce battle was fought near Fleusburgh, in which the Danes were victorious, but the loss was heavy on both sides.

The Polish committee in Posen have established sub-committees throughout the Duchy.—They invite the people to arms, and exhort them to sharpen their scythes for weapons. They have on all sides, driven away the Prussian troops, cut off the mails, tore down the eagles (the Prussian insignia,) & seized upon the treasures.

Holland and Belgium were quiet. Turkey acknowledges the French Republic. The Archduke Stephen has been declared King of Hungary. Serious disturbances have occurred at St. Petersburgh.

It is reported that Louis Phillippe had arrived in America.

The warlike preparations of France continued. Berlin, Rome, Palermo and Milan were tranquil.

Russia promises neutrality, if her possessions are not attacked.

Protestant Monitor.—This paper has been removed from Greenville, Ill., to Alton. The reason we discontinued our exchange with it, several weeks ago, was, that the editor made use of his columns to call one of his brethren, connected with the same church and conference with himself, "an ass," he having seen proper also to commence the publication of a paper. Personally, we have no knowledge of either of the gentlemen, or the circumstances which alienated them, but of this we are satisfied, that what we have above objected to, is not consistent with christian or editorial courtesy. And yet we know some one not 500 miles from here, who has left off acting as agent for the Western Recorder, and is doing that thing for the Protestant Monitor. If our friend, out west, will accept of this small admonition, we are willing to send again our exchange.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Death has again visited Coshocton Circuit and wrested from our embrace a sister beloved. Sister of the Dover Society is gone. She died on the 21st instant at the residence of Brother Downey in the vicinity of the place above named. Sister Downey was the daughter of Abraham Jones, Pipe Creek Circuit, Maryland District. From childhood she was taught in the principles of the christian religion. At about the age of 14 she was induced to give her heart to God, and it may be that some Brother whose eye may fall on this notice will recollect well having received her into the Methodist Protestant Church. She was joined in marriage to Brother Downey in the spring of 1837, in whose society she lived in Maryland until the fall of 1845, when they emigrated to Ohio and settled on a large and beautiful farm in the Dover Plains. At this place they lived until, while in her 28th year, after severe illness, death brought a release and she was permitted calmly to go to Jesus, leaving an affectionate husband with five small children and a numerous train of friends to mourn her loss. It would be vain to attempt a description of her character to those that knew her. There was always more beauty, more excellency of character exhibited by Sister Downey than we profess ourself competent to describe. But indulge us in saying that she was affectionate as a wife and mother. Her good sense enabled her ever to exhibit a course of conduct regulated by the strictest rules of propriety. She was cheerful in her manner, under almost every circumstance, so much so that in any company where it was her lot to mingle, a hallow of pleasure was caused by her winning manners. She was emphatically a Protestant Methodist. When a child she saw what it was for her parents to maintain their religious principles against the tide of opposition flowing against them in consequence of their being reformers. This caused her love to the M. Protestant Church, to be deeply fixed in mind and was the reason of her not uniting with any branch of the christian church in her new home until the last conference year when by her request in unison with some others, we were induced to form a small society in Dover. This was at first constituted of eight members, but before the year closed two had removed. During the present year seven more have been added, numbering 13 at the time of her death. Shortly before her death, she made mention of the little society, encouraged them to faithfulness, and gave them the assurance that she would still meet with them. She gave her husband her last affectionate counsel, then said she, "don't you feel the hand of death upon me?" The husband replied, "I trust not." Said she, "For the sake of my family I should like to live longer, but I have no fear of death."

LYDIA DOWNEY,

"I would not live alway; no—welcome the tomb,
Since Jesus hath lain there, I dread not its gloom,
There, sweet be my rest, till he bid me arise
And hail him in triumph descending the skies."

She requested that one of the brethren of the circuit be secured to preach a funeral over her remains, which service the writer attempted to perform on the 23d to a large concourse assembled in the Methodist Episcopal Church, from Prov. xiv: 26, after which her remains were deposited in the silent grave, having given us as her last articulate words "There's nothing sure but Heaven."

Farewell, Sister, for a time, we will strive thro' grace to meet thee in the same "sure place."—And to the friends of the deceased we would say we know full well that in the departed you have lost a true friend. An aged father and mother may be made deeply to mourn on account of their affliction. Brothers and Sisters may mourn the loss of her society among the numbers of their friends on earth. Many associates and friends may mourn her loss. A husband's heart is filled with agony while he meets the shock, well may you mourn. We feel to mourn with you, we were led to class her among the number of our friends on earth. Her house has been among the number of our homes while for near two years it has been our lot to labor among the kind friends of Coshocton Circuit. Much have we learned from Sister Downey about the history of different brethren of the Maryland District. Her kindness and affability of manner was calculated soon to cause the stranger to feel himself at home in her house, but she has gone from us. Let us through grace meet her in a more genial clime above.

Destructive Fire.

By passengers who came down by the cars yesterday, we learn that John Kugler's large distillery in Milford, was destroyed by fire on Sunday—loss estimated at $20,000—insurance, in the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Co. $5,000. Between 2,000 and 3,000 hogs, which were in the pens, were saved with great exertion. We did not ascertain the origin of the fire.—Cin. Com.

Dreadful Accident.—While Mr. Ethan S. Bates was driving along the Cumminsville road, yesterday, an omnibus ran into his buggy, throwing him out. He was run over, and trampled upon by the horses, and recieved, it is said, injuries from which he cannot survive.—Cincinnati Commercial.

The Court House of Bracken county, Ky., was destroyed by fire on Thursday morning last. The Sons of Temperance and the Masonic Lodge, who had rooms in the building, lost all their furniture, regalia, &c.

Lamentable Carelessness.

Last Thursday week, Norman Bemis was married to Miss Fast. Both resided near Liverpool Illinois. On the evening, the newly married couple rode some distance to spend the night with a friend. Bemis went a short distance from the house, where he was shot dead by a person dressed in female attire. The disguised person, Northrup, and others, intended cherevering the couple, and the gun was not thought to be loaded. Northrup gave himself up and was held to bail in $1000.

The Telegraph via Nashville is now in operation to this place, worked by the Columbian Instrument of Barnes and Zook, which operates beautifully. The Line is completed to Memphis with which place we will be in communication as soon as the Instrument arrives, which will be about the latter part of next week. The work south of Memphis is progressing rapidly towards completion.

Accident near Madison.

Madison Ia., April 19th.

A man named Avery, was cut to pieces this afternoon, on the Madison and Indianapolis Railroad, a short distance from this place, by the cars passing over his body. He jumped off, in front of the train, thinking it had stopped, but the cars being in motion, he was thrown lengthwise on the back, and cut literally to atoms. The deceased was an Englishman by birth, and has a wife and two children residing in Cincinnati.

A native of the Emerald Isle, the other day on hearing of the revolution in France, the flight of the king and his family, triumph of the democracy, and the establishment by the people of a provisional government, exclaimed—"By St. Patrick, and is not that just the thing that sweet Ireland wants? A provisionary government forever! By the powers, the only government she now has is a starvationary one.

Keeping the Sabbath.—When Commodore Stringham was at Rio Janeiro, in command of our squadron, some months ago, a great parade in behalf of the emperor occurred on Sunday. The Brazillian ships and men of war fired a grand salute, but the American ships were silent. The next day, Capt. Stringham sent an explanatory note to the proper minister of the court, saying that the Sabbath was observed in his country, and he hoped that it would be deemed a sfficient reason for not having fired the proper salute on that day, but that, with the kind and respectful feelings which he and his countrymen entertained toward Brazil, he would have the happiness of giving the salute on Monday, to which Capt. S. received a friendly reply. The salute was fired and the affair ended with perfect harmony.

Death from the Bite of a Cat.—A youth named Keeler, whose parents reside in Laurens st. died this morning after paroxysms of raving madness. The boy was bitten some six months ago by a cat, supposed at the time to be rabid, but no evil effects were observed at the time, or since, until a few hours before his death, when the symptoms of hydrophobia became apparent and assumed a most violent and distressing form.

Important to Consignees and Common Carriers.

It has been the custom of masters and owners of vessels engaged in the carrying trade, to retain and claim all property carried by them over and above the quantity specified in the bill of lading. Frequently controversies have arisen in relation to this subject, but as it has been pretty generally supposed that custom invested the parties claiming under it with title, the matter has been heretofore left uncontested. On Thursday last, however, a suit was brought before Justice Dickie, of this city, by Messrs. Mosher & Clapp, against Ralph Farnsworth and others, for the purpose of testing the legality of the practice referred to. The plaintiffs, it appears, last season shipped at Chicago, on board the defendant's brig Tuscarora, Capt. Pope, a quantity of salted hides, to the care of their agent, Mr. H. E. Haward, Buffalo. On discharging the cargo, it was ascertained that more hides had been put on board than were receipted in the bill of lading. The agent demanded the surplus, and tendered freight on them. Defendants refused to give them up, claiming them under the custom by which, if a cargo falls short of the bill, the difference is paid, and if it overruns, the vessel delivers only the amount receipted. The defendants called as witnesses, several business men on the dock, most of whom testified to the general prevalence of the custom in case where the difference was not large. Others, so far as they knew, it was uniform. The plaintiffs called no witnesses on this point, insisting as a matter of law, that no such custom, however uniform, could transfer the title to property from the owner without his assent. That the rule which admits a mercantile custom to explain a mercantile contract, made with a view to the custom for the purpose of showing what was intended by the parties, and to determine the duties of carriers and mercantile agents, had no application to this case.

The Court sustained this view, and rendered Judgment against the defendant, for the value of the property.—Buff. Com. Adv.

Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Company.—The Vincennes Gazette, of last week, contains the Proceedings of the Board of Directors of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Company. Delegates were in attendance from the counties of Dearborn, Jennings, Jackson, Lawrence, Monroe, Green, Martin, Davies, and Knox, in Indiana, and Lawrence, Marion and Clay counties, in Illinois. Abner T. Ellis was elected President of the Company, John Ross, Treasurer, and Benj. M. Monroe, Secretary.

The Company, in order to begin work, resolved that a thorough survey of the route from St. Louis to Cincinnati, by a competent engineer, was necessary, and that a sufficient fund for this purpose should be collected. The Directors in Cincinnati, Vincennes and St. Louis, were appointed a committee, for their towns and counties, to receive subscriptions for this purpose. The amount assessed to St. Louis was $2,000, and this amount, when collected, is to be credited to any amount of stock to be subscribed by citizens of the town.

The President of the Company was further authorised to memorialise Congress on the subject of procuring the right of way to said Company through the public lands lying on the route of the said proposed road.

The President was also authorised to open the necessary correspondence with such persons as he may deem advisable, for the purpose of procuring an engineer of distinguished ability.

Found Dead.—A man named Jacob Hetzel, was found dead in Washington Tp., on Friday night last. The verdict of the Coroner's Jury was "died of apoplexy."

The proprietors of the Springfield Republic announce their intention to commence a tri-weekly issue.

The Cincinnati Commercial of yesterday says, we saw a one dollar bill, yesterday, on the Columbus (Franklin) Branch of the Ohio State Bank, which had been altered to a five. It was so cunningly altered, that a broker did not hesitate to take it.

Albany Monday, April 24, 9 P. M.

Great Fire in Albany.—Fire broke out this afternoon, in the rear of the residence of N. Starks, on the southwest corner of Westerlo and Church sts. The entire block bounded by Westerlo, John and Dalius sts, was burned, including the church on Westerlo st. One or two houses on Dalius st have escaped. Almost all the houses on the south side of John st., between Dalius and church are burned. Also a store-house, owned by John Bogart, situated 10 rods from the fire, but took fire from the burning embers which were flying in every direction. All our city insurance companies, are sufferers. Mr. F. Pruyn was seriously injured in jumping from Stark's house. The fire was occasioned by live coals put in a wooden box. Three of the engines being disabled at a fire yesterday, the Mayor telegraphed to Troy for aid. The wind was raging wildly all the time, and the loss must be very heavy.

Coincidence in Deaths.—Died, at Portland, in Maine, on Monday, the 17th instant, the Hon. Asa Clapp, aged 86 years. Also, at Wiscasset, Maine, on the same day, Captain Nathan Clark, aged 80 years. [These two gentlemen were the respected parents of Messrs. A. W. H. Clapp and Franklin Clark, two Representatives from Me., who occupy seats side by side in the present Congress.] We learn from the eastern papers that Mrs. Ruth Healey, the mother of the Secretary of War, also died on the same day, the 18th of April, at Southbridge, Massachusetts, aged 83 years.

Building in Cities.—It is a curious fact that stone buildings in cities do not last as long as in the country. One reason is, that in cities the smoke and other injurious vapors assist to decompose the stone. Another reason is, that in the country the walls become covered generally with minute lichens, which protect the stone from the storms and the atmosphere. A remarkable instance of this is seen in St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The stone on the south and south-west side of this building is fast mouldering away, while blocks hewn at the time the church was erected, but left in the quarries unused, still retain the minutest marks of the chisel.

Liberty to the Waldenses.—The toleration granted by the King of Sardinia to the Waldenses, has been accepted by that interesting people with great joy. A letter is published from a pastor in one of the valleys of Piedmont, to the Rev. Mr. Gillies, the historian, which has this passage.

"Glory to God, and gratitude to King Charles Albert! Our complete emancipation, civil and political, was signed yesterday by his Majesty the King of Sardinia. The Vaudois are no longer helots; they are freemen. The letters-patent are now ready for confirmation, and will soon be promulged authentically."

Wreck of the Steamer Niagara.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

The Rochester Advertiser gives an account of the terrific storm on Lake Ontario, on Tuesday last, with the following fearful particulars of the loss of the steamer Niagara:—

At 9 o'clock, A. M., of that day, the magnificent steamer Niagara left Oswego for Rochester with 100 passengers, including a number of ladies. The gale rose, and continued to increase in violence until she got within about 4 miles of the pier at the mouth of the river, when the rudder of the steamer was carried away, and the boat became unmanageable. An attempt was made by force of steam to run the boat inside the pier, but there being nothing to steer with, it failed. By means of ropes, chains, &c., a temporary rudder was constructed, and a second and third attempt was made to gain the river, but without success, and the captain then gave orders to put out into the lake, in order that they might have abundance of sea-room.

The wind was now blowing a perfect hurricane, the boat rocking to and fro, and the waves dashing every instant over the deck. When the boat had got about eight miles from shore, to increase their perils, the smoke-pipe was carried away, and as a consequence the fire had to be put out. This was about 6 o'clock, P. M. Without steam to propel or rudder to guide the boat, it will be readily supposed that the alarm on board was great, which was doubly increased by the plunging of the boat, the rattling of the broken mirrors and dishes, the dashing back and forth of sofas, settees, chairs, tables, stands, &c., as the steamer rocked to and fro by the violence of the wind, while the waves continued to pour an avalanche of water in at every aperture! The situation was indeed one of extreme peril. The passengers were enabled to walk with the greatest difficulty, and in most cases were obliged to go upon their hands and knees in passing back and forth.

The anchor was immediately thrown overboard, and for some three or four hours the boat continued to drift with the winds and waves, being driven towards the shore, until about three o'clock yesterday morning, she grounded violently, about half a mile west of the pier and some fifteen or twenty rods from the shore, where she now lies almost a complete wreck. The passengers were kept upon the constant watch throughout the night, many of them suffering intensely from the water and cold. About sunrise yesterday morning they were all safely landed on the shore by means of the yawl, and properly cared for by families residing near at hand. For 24 hours they had not tasted a mouthful of food, and during a portion of that time had been drenched to the skin with water.

The Niagara was a magnificent craft, and one of the best, if not the best sea boat on the lake. She was built only three years since, and is valued at $60,000.

PRACTICAL PHILANTHROPY.—Forty families of colored persons are preparing to leave N. York city for the interior of the state, during the present Spring, to settle upon lands in Franklin and Essex counties, given them by Gerrit Smith.

FIRE IN LANCASTER.—We learn that a fire broke out in Lancaster, at a very early hour on Friday morning, which did considerable damage. A large brewery situated near the canal, a large smoke house well filled with meats, a dwelling house occupied by a Mr. Phillips and one or two other dwellings were destroyed. We have heard no estimate of the pecuniary loss. It is thought that it would have been much greater than it was, had not the firemen and citizens made extraordinary efforts to check the sweep of the flames. —Z. Cour.

Dreadful Accident.

On Saturday 8th, a man named Gray, who was employed to clean out one of the public wells in this place, came to his death in the following shocking manner. He was in the act of fixing himself in the bucket to go down into the well, when it was remarked to him the rope was not sufficient to bear his weight. (Some 4 or 5 feet of old material having been joined to the rope on the windlass to increase its length.) He remarked that he was willing to risk it; when he had begun to descend, the rope broke and he was precipitated to the bottom—between 70 and 80 feet! Through the energetic exertions of Dr. Burchard and other citizens, he was soon taken out, and strange to tell—life was not extinct, and the sufferer was in the possession of his senses.

One of his legs was broken off and frightfully mangled. It could not be set, and the extreme weakness of the patient rendered amputation wholly impracticable. He died on Monday morning about 6 o'clock, after extreme suffering, leaving behind him a wife and three or four small children.—Greenville (Ill.) Journal.

GERMANY.—A private letter received by one of our German citizens, which gives an account of the revolution in Prussia, states that in the conflict between the king's troops and the citizens, on the 19th of March, the carnage has been immense. The number of soldiers killed amounted to about 1,300, and more than one thousand citizens were slaughtered on that day. An expression of the king, "that he would forgive them," which he is said to have uttered, when the dead bodies of the slain citizens were carried in solemn procession past the palace, is said to have excited the wrath of the people anew, in consequence of which the king has either been forced to leave the city, or as others say, has been killed. The excitement throughout Germany is immense. At Hanan, near Frankfort on the Main, forty thousand people, able and ready to carry arms, were assembled on the 15th March. A committee called "Volkscommission" directed all their movements.—Voluntary contributions and patriotism kept up these immense gatherings, and we may expect by the next steamer events of the most soul-stirring character. Germany is rife for a grand revolution. The intelligence, industry and patriotism of her people, cannot be chained any longer by a few despots. Her course will be onward, until united and free, she will take such a stand among the nations of the earth, as she is rightly entitled to.—Pennsylvanian.

NEW YORK AND WASHINGTON TELEGRAPH.—The directors of the New York and Washington Telegraph Company, were in session on Friday to settle up their business for the past quarter. The reports submitted show a steady increase of business, and indicate the profits to be about $1,000 per month. By the terms of the constitution of the company, dividend cannot be declared until July next, by which time it is anticipated they will be able to extend their wire so as to cross the river at West Point, and from thence to New York, so as to make the communication direct. If this is not done, the company will lose the entire amount of business between the two cities the moment the opposition line goes into operation.—Phila. News.

Correspondence of the Watchman of the Valley

Accidents by Fire and Railroad.

ROCKAWAY, N. J., April 14, 1848.

A frightful casualty disturbed the quiet of a neighboring country place, last Tuesday evening. In the township of Caldwell resides a man named Stir or Star. On the evening just mentioned he retired to rest with his family.—About midnight a colored man in the neighborhood discovered the house to be on fire and nearly consumed. He rushed to the door and knocked vehemently to awaken the family, but without success. He then flung stones into the chamber window, and by this means aroused Mr. S., who now perceived the flames all around him. He sprang from the bed, shouted to his wife to follow him, and leaped from the garret window. His clothes were on fire, which he extinguished by rolling on the ground.

It is not known whether his wife heard him or not, but she did not follow him. Before any way could be secured of reaching the apartments occupied by the family, the roof fell in and all perished. Mr. S.'s wife, a son of seventeen years of age, a little girl of five years, and a child of seventeen months, were burned to death. Their remains were taken from the ruins the next day, and although greatly disfigured and charred, were entire, except one of the lower limbs of Mrs. S. which was entirely consumed.

The day before one daughter had gone out to a neighbor's house to spend the night, and only a few days previous, another daughter had gone out to service, or the probability is they too would have been consumed. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of people on Thursday, and an appropriate discourse delivered by Rev. Mr. Pitman of Patterson. The suddenness and awfulness of the casualty produced a great sensation, as you will readily believe.

The fire was entirely accidental, the son having thrown an arm full of brush-wood into the corner near some coals, which produced the distressing incident.

A short time since an incident occurred on the Railroad at the Newark bridge, which promised for a moment a sufficient horror of details.—There is a draw bridge to let vessels through, and when the bridge is drawn, a flag is raised to warn engineers of the fact. The New Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company had just placed an engine on the road of extraordinary power. It so happened, as was afterwards testified before the jury, that the flag was streaming in an exact line with the course of the train, which prevented the engineer's seeing it until he had nearly reached the bridge. Then it was too late to overcome the momentum of such a long train as is generally sent to Philadelphia. The engineer did what he could by reversing and putting down the breaks, but could not escape the catastrophe. The locomotive plunged into the water out of sight, and dragged after it the baggage car, which was broken. The first passenger car ran its fore wheels off and then stopped. It was a frightful venture to run.

Had the locomotive been a minute later, it would have leaped square into the sloop which was so near that the engineer sprang into her rigging as the locomotive went off. One poor fellow, who had escaped death by burning the day before in a steamboat, now sprang out of the car among the timbers of the bridge, and was so bruised and stunned, that he was drowned before aid could reach him.

I am told a jury has acquitted the engineer of carelessness and fault in the matter.

Many accidents are occurring on that road. Last summer, I saw the place where a boy's head was crushed by a car. Not many months since, two trains rushed against each other, dashing the cars to pieces, and doing much injury to life and limb. Many accidents occur from recklessness in climbing on the cars when in motion. This company has careful arrangements and have been prompt in doing all in their power to repair damages occasioned on their road even to the recklessness of the persons most interested.

Lady burned to Death.

An awful calamity occurred in Indianapolis last night. Mrs. West, the wife of Henry West, while sitting by a sick child, fell into a doze, and was waked about 11 o'clock by her dress being on fire. She caught a comfort and wrapped herself in it, but that being cotton, it also caught fire, and she was complely wrapped in flames. She was alone with her sick babe, but her screams soon brought a number of the family to her assistance, it was impossible, however to extricate her until her clothes were almost consumed. She was so badly burned that she died in about eight hours. Mrs. West was a member of the Presbyterian church—a lady of fine accomplishments, and much beloved as a Christian and a neighbor. Her husband was absent on business, but the sad intelligence was carried to him by express. He returned this morning to his desolate family; and although overwhelmed with the sad calamity, he seems to bear it with Christian resignation—casting his little ones and himself upon the protection of his covenant-keeping Savior.—Watchman of the Valley.

J. CABLE.

RAILWAYS AND THE SABBATH.—The subject of Sabbath desecration has been before the directors of the two great railway companies of Scotland—the North British, and the Caledonian. In the former, it was decided to continue the Sabbath trains by a vote of 57 to 40—which is much smaller majority than at a previous vote, that the friends of the Sabbath are greatly encouraged. In the latter board, the continuance of the Sunday trains was decided by the casting vote of the chairman. It is to come up again, and the public feeling in Scotland is so strong against this desecration, that it may yet prevail.

THE SULTAN'S POLITENESS.—The Rev. Mr. Calhoun, missionary from Syria, states that when Lord Cowley, the English Ambassador, was about to leave Constantinople, the Sultan, after eastern usage, asked what favor he could grant him. The ambassador replied,—"Toleration towards Protestants." This was followed by the memorable movement in behalf of Christians by the Sultan in Turkey.

FIRE AT GETTYSBURG, PA.—A large frame building at Gettysburg, occupied by Messrs. Salizgiver & Frey, John Laughlin, and Abner Townsley, as a paint and coach shop, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday last, with carriage bodies, materials, tools, &c., at a loss of $3,000 to $5,000.

WISCONSIN.—The Governor of this Territory has issued his proclamation, announcing that the Constitution recently submitted to the people for adoption, has been approved by a majority of 10,293 votes, out of 22,591 votes cast. The next step will be the submission of that document to Congress, accompanied with an application for entrance into the Union of States. Indeed, a bill providing for her admission is already pending before Congress.—Zanesville Courier.

Letter from Father Matthew—his Visit Postponed.

We have been favored by the Rev. Mr. Marsh with the following letter, which he received by the Hibernia. Its contents will occasion great disappointment among the friends of temperance. Subject as he is to authority, we can now hardly look for the Apostle of this great Reform, until he lands on our shores.

CORK, March 10, 1848.

Dear Rev. Friend,—When last I had the pleasure of addressing you, I fully calculated on being able to gratify my anxious desire of visiting the States this season. Circumstances have lately occurred, which will, I regret to say, compel me to postpone my journey until the fall of the year.

I AM COMMANDED BY MY SUPERIOR TO GO TO ROME PRIOR TO MY DEPARTURE FOR AMERICA, and I have hitherto been prevented from leaving Ireland by a severe attack of influenza. It will be out of my power to return from Italy in time to take passage in the "New World." Add to the favors already conferred, by apologising for me to the gentlemen of the committee, and to my other friends, and assure them that I shall have the happiness, God willing, early in September, of enjoying a personal interview.

With high respect,

Rev. dear Mr. Marsh, yours affectionately,

THEOBALD MATTHEW.

WHO IS BENEFITTED?—It is painful to read such accounts as the following. One man returned home a cripple probably for life, soon to be forgotten and left to make a living as best he can; while two more are maimed and disabled in an awkward attempt at manifesting their regard for the first. The first named individual may perhaps receive a pension at the public expense, but the latter have no claims even to that pittance. Thousands will thus be left to drag out their miserable existence, unpitied and forgotten, after being the lions of a day. We copy from the Cohocton Democrat.—Z. Gaz.

Mr. Charles McCloskey arrived in this town last evening, from a service of two years in the 8th regiment of U. S. Infantry, in which he gallantly represented this county in the glorious and ever memorable actions of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, San Antonio, Churubusco, and Molino del Rey; at the latter place he received several severe wounds, which disabled him from further service; we are happy to see however, that he is gradually recovering, and that his general health and spirits are excellent. He was saluted, this morning, by several rounds of cannon; in announcing which, it also becomes our painful duty to record, that Joseph Sawyer and John Richards, two young men of this town, whilst engaged in loading the cannon, met with severe casualties. They had rammed the cartridge about half way down, when it ignited, and the discarge tore off the right hand of Mr. Richards, above the wrist, and the left hand of Mr. Sawyer, also above the wrist, and severely bruising, burning and injuring them in the face and arms.

ANOTHER BOAT BURNED AND LIVES LOST.—The steamer Charter Oak took fire in her engine-room, on the 12th below St. Louis. The flames spread so rapidly that the passengers of whom there was a large number on board had to escape through the flames, and many were lost and others severely injured. The Captain and 1st Engineer were badly wounded.

There was about eight hundred tons of freight on board mostly Hemp, Hay and Tobacco. Boat and Cargo are a total loss.—Z. Cour.

MILITIA TRAINING.—A bill to abolish Militia Trainings passed both housed of the Pennsylvania Legislature. It imposes a tax of twenty five cents upon each individual liable to militia duty, in lieu of personal service upon training day. The fund thus produced, after the payment of all necessay militia expenses, is to be divided among the several volunteer corps of the Commonwealth.

LIGHTNING ON THE WIRE.—The injury done to the telegraph line by the storm of Tuesday last, was greater than we then supposed. Four posts were prostrated near Hopewell, two of which were completely shattered. One of these, placed about 50 feet from a dwelling-house, being struck by a thunderbolt, a boy upon the house-porch, was stunned, & the other members of the family within also felt the shock very sensibly.—Z. Cour. 14th.

CRITICAL STATE OF EUROPE.

The news brought by the Acadia, is full of fearful forebodings for the future peace of Europe, every portion of which seems in a state of complete combustion. Where or when the revolution, so suddenly commenced by France, is to end, requires more than human sagacity to determine. The news received by each successive steamer only swells our doubts, and involves in greater mystery the fate of the entire continent. By the last accounts the aspect of affairs in England look extremely critical, and we are prepared to hear, by the coming steamer, that a revolution has broken out both in England and Ireland.

Should this be the case, we must prepare to hear of one of the most bloody revolutions the earth has ever witnessed. It will be the last fight of monarchy to preserve its power, and it will be only yielded after a most desperate and sanguinary struggle. The letter which we annex, from the able correspondent of the New York Tribune, dated at London, gives a vivid foreshadowing of the dangers by which that Government is at present surrounded; and we commend it to the careful perusal of our readers. Should a revolution take place in England, we may expect immediately after its announcement, on this side of the water, to hear that Canada and the other North American Provinces of Great Britain have thrown off their allegiance and proclaimed themselves Independent. Under any state of things, we believe that sooner or later this will be the case; but we have no doubt the present state of things in England will tend to hasten the establishment of a new Republic on this Continent. As regards the probable effects of such an event so far as we are concerned, we are not prepared to say; but it is for us to pause & reflect well upon our position, and to prepare for any contingencies which may arise, calculated in any manner to effect us.

A revolution in England, it cannot be denied, would have a most embarrassing influence upon our commercial interests, as it would unquestionably cause a suspension and failure of all the great commercial and manufacturing establishments of that country. Fortunately for us, we are indebted to Europe, instead of their being indebted to us;—but the suspension of the demand for our cotton, tobacco, and other staples, would operate most seriously upon our prospects, and cause great embarrassment. It becomes us, therefore, to pursue, in all our transactions, a most prudent course, and to be prepared in time, in case the storm should come, for whatever results it may bring with it.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

Accident.—Death.—Shameful Carelessness.

On Saturday last, it was generally reported and believed that a man named Henry McGreevy, of New Lexington, Perry county, had fallen into the canal and perished, on Friday night. He had come to town, it seems, to the mill, and to do some trading, and suspicion was first excited by the team remaining in the mill yard of Cassel & Galigher all of Saturday. Prepartions were making to draw off the water in the canal, when the body was found with grappling irons, on Sunday, and brought to the shore. An inquest was at once held, and the jury found as follows:—

"After having heard the evidence and examined said body, we do find that the deceased came to his death by drowning, having, as we suppose, fallen from the draw-bridge of Cassel & Galigher, into the canal, which bridge, as it appears from the testimony, was left open by the carelessnes of the boatmen of the steamboat Ohio."

It seems that the mill-yard is connected with the mill by a draw-bridge, put there as private property, and solely for the convenience of mill customers. Its was agreed, when the mill-owners obtained the right to put a draw-bridge there, that they should always attend to its removal and replacement when boats were to pass. It seems, further, that there has always been bad feelings between boatmen and the mill-people in relation to it. The steamboat Ohio went through on Friday night, about midnight, her hands removing the draw and leaving it open! Nor can we discover that notice was given at the mill. In a dark night like that, a more certain and fatal trap could not be devised for the taking of human life. The boat had undoubtedly a legal right to go through, and there rested upon her officers and crew no legal responsibility to replace it. This they did not do, because they were not compelled to. Thus hedging themselves behind a legal quibble, they were privy, after a manner, to McGreevy's death. They did not intend this catastrophe, of course, but their thoughtless and most censurable neglect of prudence and disregard of the dictates of humanity have surely brought it about.

This is the second or third death produced on that bridge in this manner. It is a bad and fatal nuisance, and should be abated. Let the Grand Jury attend to it.—Zanesville Courier of yesterday.

The P M at Columbus, Ohio, gives us notice that E. M'Mahen, refuses to take his paper from the office. He is indebted to us for nearly a volume of our paper. Will our agent please see to this matter, and give us word?

By unaccountable oversight, we omitted to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from Br E. Y. Reese, Book Agent, Baltimore, a few weeks ago. We have responded by private letter.

Br. J. S. Thrap, you have paid us up for the books, and several cents over. Remember this next time.

Br. C. T. Kingsbury, J. F. D. received more than full credit in our paper of December 16, which see.

Br. Is. Garard, of Pt. William, Ohio, does not owe us, save for the present volume. It was unintentional that a bill was sent him. When, a few weeks ago, we commenced sending bills to those who were indebted for a year or more, we published a request, that if any error should occur in going over so many names, any subscriber would excuse us, and let us know, so that we might make the correction.

Br. R. Rose, E. Arbogast, owes us for 19 numbers. If he will pay you 75 cents, we will do as he requests.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, ethers have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encourraging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the fellowing list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. W. G. Fowler, Paintersville, O.	6.
Rev. V. Lucas, Johnstown, Pa.,	5

☞We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are heldt responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

Thes law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS.—The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year, for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

POET'S CORNER.

I WILL PRAISE THEE.

BY CAROLINE FRY.

For what shall I praise thee my God and my King?
For what blessings the tribute of gratitude bring?
Shall I praise thee for pleasure, for health, or for ease,
For the sunshine of youth, for the garden of peace?

Shall I praise thee for flowers, that bloomed on my breast?
For joys in perspective, and pleasures possessed?
For the spirits that brightened my days of delight?
For the slumbers that sat on my pillow by night?

For this I should thank thee: but if only this,
I should leave half untold the donation of bliss:
I thank thee for sickness, for sorrow, and care,
For the thorns I have gathered, the anguish I share,
For nights of anxiety, watchings, and tears,
A present of pain, a perspective of fears:
I thank thee, I bless thee, my King and my God,
For the good and the evil thy hand hath bestowed--
The flowers were sweet, but their fragrance is gone!
They yielded no fruit, they are withered and gone,
The thorn, it was poignant, but precious to me,
Twas the message of mercy, it led me to thee!

The Restrictive Rule--Per Contra.

NO. IV.

MR. EDITOR,—When those who formerly desired a modification of the government of the M. E. Church in favor of liberal principles, were investigating the subject, their opponents perpetually asserted that the itinerant system, which all admitted to be of vital importance, could never be maintained if you would admit laymen into the counsels of the church; that "local men had local views"—that in order to secure the benefits of the itinerant system it was necessary the clergy should rule alone with a strong and efficient government.

We do not intend, here, to reply to these old arguments of Methodist Episcopalians. If any one desires to see them answered let him refer to the "Wesleyan Repository" and Mutual Rights." But what we do mean to say, is, for a set of inexperienced young men, under the circumstances, to combine to disturb the church on this vital question, to say the least of it, is the very height of imprudence, and deservedly entitles them to the rebuke of all the well wishers of our cause. They have put it in the power of our numerous and sharp sighted opponents to point to their effort and say: ☞ "that is just what we predicted."

We are only at our outset, as a church, and have not yet had time to establish a permanent character, and such combined efforts to assail our fundamental laws augers ill, and subjects us to the charge of fickleness. Although we do not in full adopt the following maxim of Pope, yet, it contains much truth:

> For forms of government let fools contest,
> That which is best administered is best.

It would be decidedly better to sustain well, even a less perfect rule, than to be perpetually changing, and thus gain the character of instability. Sensible men, under such circumstances, would decline identifying their interests with us, for the want of confidence in the permanency of our institutions. In view of these facts, I must confess that I feel myself much mortified and greatly humbled to be compelled to notice such juvenile indiscretion.

Our attempt at self government, or to conform the government of the church to the same principles that regulate the state, is one which has attracted considerable public attention, and men of patriotic minds have looked to the effort with favor. But to see it put in jeopardy, before sufficient time is offered to test the efficiency of the enterprize, by the "tinkering" of a set of inexperienced boys, is, indeed, an outrage upon "Prudence," and rendered the title of our friend a great misnomer.

The late Joseph Mullvean of Coshocton county, a sensible lay-member of the Presbyterian church, attended the ministry of our preachers when they first began to form societies in his vicinity. In conversation with the writer, about the time, he remarked that he was entirely satisfied with the Presbyterian usages and means of grace, but that it cost more to obtain them than poor people were able to contribute. And as for attaching himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, he never could get his consent to sustain a government so despotic in principle. But this new organization, whose principles of polity were in conformity with the civil institutions of the country, and having a circulating ministry, he thought to be the best adapted to the tastes and wants of the American community of any enterprize of the kind which had came under his notice. Accordingly, he, with his family, and a number of his friends united with the church, and rendered much assistance in building up the cause in that quarter. These were the deliberate sentiments of a man of age and experience, who had acquainted himself with the character of our institutions. But it seems the boys can see no such adaptation of our system to the wants of the public, until its fundamental principles are modified or subverted by their great wisdom and experience.

It is not at all likely that if the boys could obtain a majority of the church, in favor of their project, that the minority could submit with any degree of complacency. It is not to be supposed that a set of men, three fourths of whom are still living, who were so wedded to a principle, as to guard it with such restrictions, would see their banners boken down, and innovations making on a subject, so dear to their minds, and acquiesce in quietness. The very position of this question should teach any experienced man that it cannot be approached without excitement. The fathers of the system, who adopted it after much experience and great reflection, cannot see the ruthless hand of inexperience upon it without feeling sensitive. Why then should the harmony of the church be put in jeopardy to gratify the ambition of a few aspiring young men?

An elegant writer, on polity, after giving the advantages and disadvantages of the different forms of government, remarks: "Should I still be asked which is the best government, I would answer, all good governments are not proper for all nations and times. In this respect regard must be had to the humor and character of the people." And thus adapting our systems to the sentiments and tastes of the public, the rights of minorities as well as of majorities should be respected, for very often by oppressing the former the whole system tumbles into ruins, because there is not sufficient strength to stand without them. And such is our ecclesiastical infancy and weakness that we need the united strength of all to steady our ark. And if the boys would only abandon such foolish and unprofitable controversies, and read and study their Bible instead, it would be more profitable to the church, and creditable to themselves.

Yours, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

Restrictive Rule Defended.

MR. EDITOR: After having carefully perused Prudentia's seven epistles to the churches on the Restrictive Rule, I find the only objection attempted to be made, is the removing a minister from his field of labor, so long as the people of his charge are willing to keep him, and he is willing to stay. We shall give you some of his arguments against the Rule in his own words.

In Article 5th he inquires why are ministers so frequently less useful a third year in circuits, than they were the two preceding? And he answers thus: From the very fact that they know it to be their last year and cease making an effort to extend their influence. O, what a plausible argument against the Rule, instead of being against the Minister.

But again, we have another strong argument against the Rule, which we give in the language of Prudentia. He represents a minister while a stranger in his appointment, as one not situated to be of use to the people of his charge, until he becomes generally acquainted; but he is represented as becoming acquainted, and the sphere of his usefulness being enlarged, and now according to the Restrictive Rule, he is to give up the field of his usefulness. A new minister enters into the labors of his Brother; but O, he is so unlike the other. He has not the same attachment to his flock the former minister had. He feels not the same watchful care. He does not visit the same; and when six years are spent by the two ministers the church is no better off than at the beginning. Our Brother Prudentia has given us a wretched picture of some of our ministers, in order to shew that a useful minister should not be removed, but it is evident from our Brother Prudentia's own showing that there is a dire necessity for the Restrictive Rule in order to remove those delinquent ministers, or the churches in their case would soon come to naught.

But again, our hero of the quill has given us another curious argument, intended not only against the Restrictive Rule but also in favor of a settled ministry. He tells us, the Methodist itinerancy is contrary to primitive usages; for St. Paul said he would not build on other men's works, and that the Apostles everywhere appointed ministers to teach and oversee without any limitation. They were settled Pastors, Bishops, Presbyters, &c., &c., and our author has taken some pains to give us scripture history in proof of his position.

I shall not attempt to say that the Apostles did not fix Bishops, Presbyters or Deacons to take care of certain churches, but as to the limitation I believe history does not give us any account. One thing is certain, that there must be one general oversight somewhere, that there must be some regular ecclesiastical rule to govern or all would be confusion and disorder. This much is certain, that the Apostles were itinerants, for the express command of our Savior was, "Go, preach my gospel to every creature." But how is it that they should be so careful not to travel on the same ground, not to build on each others works, and at the same time to fix settled ministers to build on the churches they themselves had planted? In this brief outline we have more to favor itinerancy than a settled ministry. We have our Savior's express command, go out into all the world and preach, but we have no command for a settled ministry. And it seems clear that this must be left to circumstances. And here we have in full view the nearest likeness between the Methodist itinerant ministry and the Apostles, that can be found in any other church. Our Brother Prudentia agrees with us that the Methodist system is a creature of circumstances, but he says the circumstances that gave rise to it now cease, but an attempt to make rules for the future action of the church is objectionable and such a rule is called a blind rule. Here we are at issue, and contend that the same circumstances that existed when the rule was first instituted still exist, and will continue to exist, so long as the waste places of our country are filling up with new settlers. I ask, what system of ecclesiastical economy, is so fitted to supply the wants, or reach the condition of the new settlements of our country as that of the Methodist itinerancy? But our Brother Prudentia says that to abolish the Restrictive Rule would not affect the itinerancy. Strange idea. Suppose according to his plan, the different ministers and the members of their charge agreed to continue, what power would a Conference have to make a change? The answer is plain. And suppose a minister should cease to preach, and another should become sick and die, where can the Conference find any to fill the place? What nonsense to talk of an itinerancy and abolish the Restrictive Rule.

In epistle No. 5, we have the following language from Brother P.

"I object to the Restrictive Rule, because it is founded on a false pretence. It assumes that ministers cannot be useful for a longer period than three years in one place." And upon this perversion of the intention of the Rule he shapes his whole rule of a most miserable sophistry, and concludes with the following ridiculous comparison. A man going on a farm for a short period, and because he knows he shall shortly leave, he will not use the same industry. And again he says it is like setting to work where he feels little interest beyond its permanency. What a strange comparison! A minister is at best but a dying man, sent to proclaim salvation to dying men.—And he is not certain he shall live three years. His business is to do the work of him that hath sent him, while it is called to-day, lest the night come when he can no longer work, and ere three years have elapsed he shall be called to give an account of his stewardship; nor shall his excuse of his not being permanently stationed justify his neglect.

If the whole of our Brother Prudentia's comparisons and arguments are carefully examined they will be found more a reproach to our ministers, than arguments against the Restrictive Rule. But if arguments worth attending to be offered, they shall be attended to.

Our Brother Prudentia informs us that one half the church is in favor of abolishing the Restrictive Rule. Suffice it to say that this news has come to us, as suddenly and unexpected as the late French Revolution.

Again, he informs us that the itinerancy of the Methodist Episcopal Church must be given up for a settled pastorate. Now Brother Prudentia, have a little patience. Their General Conference is just at hand, and you shall find your cause will get very little support from that quarter.

I shall now make a passing remark on Brother Burns's concluding paragraph. In speaking of the Restrictive Rule, he says, "Ministers are moved by the Spirit to preach the gospel, and is it not better to obey God rather than man?" Now from this we are to understand that the framers of the Church Constitution were not under divine influence, but all our boys that oppose the Rule are unerring in this respect, and it follows of course that every enthusiast that believes he is thus called, may go when he pleases without any regard to a Church Rule. (I cannot but smile at the idea.)

BOYHOOD.

MR. EDITOR,—I should like to know at what age boys who are taken into the ministry become men? Was Rev. G. Brown, Rev. C. Springer, and many others of their cotemporaries, boys in 1824 and 1828? Are Rev. Thomas H. Stockton Doctor Reese, &c., still boys? Are men to remain boys after ten and fifteen years experience in the ministry? How much strength of argument is there in this charge in a matter of controversy? As I am a boy I wish to learn. Again. At what age may a minister venture to discuss important matters in church polity? If some venerable Father will answer the above questions he will do a kindness to one who is still willing to be called J. Bulwer, A BOY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Battle between an Eagle and a Serpent.

In the month of August, 1834, I was sailing up the Ohio River on board the fine steamer Wacousta, Capt. Norman, when, as we approached a noted spot on the river called the 'Robber's Cave,' my attention was attracted by several loud screams. I looked about where the sound seemed to originate, and saw an eagle describing circles in the air in a most beautiful and graceful manner. As it wheeled around in its gyrations with mathematical precision, with outstretched but motionless wings, it ever and anon uttered the peculiar scream which first drew my attention. Whilst I was gazing in admiration at its elegant curves, it suddenly changed its motion and descended with almost inconceivable velocity in a perpendicular line to the earth! It went down, as one of the passengers described it 'like a dart.' Before we could express our astonishment or give any opinion concerning its object, it again arose and ascended to a great height, with a rapidity almost equal to that of its descent, bearing in its beak a large serpent! As it mounted up, the long body of the snake hung down from the beak of the eagle like the end of a large rope. It was not, however, lifeless. It squirmed in every direction, and made strong efforts for its deliverance. But in vain. The eagle held it with a death grip. The serpent resolving to sell its life as dear as possible, endeavored to impede the flying of the bird, and by dint of hard struggling succeeded in getting its body over the back of the eagle. The feathered pirate now became aware of his danger. His wings were his only means of safety. If these became bound, he must perish with his enemy. All his efforts however could not dislodge the snake. The wily serpent, anaconda like, drew itself more and tightly round him. It now had the advantage in the contest. The pinions of the eagle were pinioned. The snake, coiled like a rope around the body of its adversary, was enabled completely to fetter its wings and stop its flight. The struggle ceased. The eagle was conquered! They both began to fall, bound together as they were. They came down as rapidly as they had ascended and fell in the river. So interested were the officers and passengers in the singular contest, that the steamer backed water, a boat put off, and in a few minutes the two belligerents were laid upon our deck, dead! The snake had wound itself completely around the wings of the noble bird.

Whilst I stood gazing upon the two objects, my mind was forcibly impressed with the analogy between this incident and the effects of vice. At a distance sin is peculiarly attractive. Serpent-like it displays a variety of beautiful colors. It appears extremely fascinating; but when indulged in its results are fatal. It ensnares; it fetters; it destroys. Not only does it prevent man from soaring toward heaven, but it binds and weakens him and brings him to the grave.--American Cabinet.

THE BRIDGE.—Mr. Ellet, engineer of our bridge, has been here for some days past, and we have taken the occasion to visit the work on the Island. The Western abutment of the bridge is progressing rapidly, while the first wire cable is also being made. It is an immense work and not to be done in a day. We yet think, however, that a year more will finish the work. The present force lay a course of stone on the abutment, in five days, the course 2 feet thick.—Wheeling Times, 19th.

SIR MATTHEW HALE.

Ex. xviii. 21 22,—Thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness,—and let them judge the people at all seasons.

Sir Matthew Hale, in one of his circuits, had a buck sent for his table, by a gentleman who had a trial at the assizes. When Sir Matthew heard the gentleman's name, he asked, "If he was not the same person that had sent him venison?" And finding he was the same, he told him he could not suffer his trial to go on till he had paid him for his buck. The gentleman observed that he never sold his venision, and that he did nothing to him which he did not do to every judge who had gone that circuit; the truth of which was confirmed by several gentlemen present. The Lord Chief Baron, however, would not proceed with the trial, till he had paid for the present, upon which the gentleman withdrew the record. At Salisbury, too the Dean & Chapter having according to custom, presented him with six sugar loaves in his circuit, he made his servants pay for the sugar before he would try their cause.

Employments of Evenings.

It is a question of great importance especially to young men, how do you spend your evenings? If you have no regular employment, no fixed pursuits to engross your attention, and opperate as stimulus to the mind when unimployed, you must of necessity have many leisure and unoccupied hours; intervals when time will hang heavily on your hands, and suggest the necessity of some means to relieve it of its weight. The very time which is disipated in idleness, would, if devoted to study, enable many a young man to obtain eminence and distinction in some useful art.

A sexton's son became an astronomer by devoting a few hours every evening to the study of the stars, after ringing the bell for nine o'clock. Gifford was, in early life, an apprentice to a shoemaker, and spent his leisure hours in study.—His destitution was such, that he was compelled to work out his problems on a smooth piece of leather with a blunted awl. David Rittenhouse was a plough boy, and covered his plough beam and fences with his juvenile calculations. James Ferguson was a shepherd's boy, and learned to read and write while watching his flock in the field by night, and with no other light than the moon and stars.

THE USEFUL AND THE AMUSING.—A conjuror and a tailor once happened to converse together. "Alas!" cries the conjuror to the tailor, "what a poor unhappy creature you are!—If people should ever take it in their heads to live without clothes, you are undone; you have no other trade to have recourse to. Indeed, friend, I pity you sincerely; but, thank heaven, things are not quite so bad with me; for if one trick should fail, I have a hundred tricks more for them yet. However, if at any time you are reduced to beggary, apply to me, and I will relieve you."

A famine overspread the land; the tailor made shifts to live, because his customers could not be without clothes; but the poor conjuror, with all his hundred tricks, could find none that had money to throw away. It was in vain that he promised to eat fire, or swallow lead; no single creature could relieve him, till at last he was oblige to beg from the very tailor whose calling he had formerly despised, but whose occupation was both useful and necessary.

HEAR, HEAR!—Sheridan once succeeded admirably in entrapping a noisy member, who was in the habit of interrupting every speaker with cries of "Hear, hear." Brinsly took an opportunity to allude to a well-known political character of the time, who wished to play the rogue, but had only sense enough to play the fool.—"Where," exclaimed Sheridan, in continuation and with great emphasis, "where shall we find a more foolish knave or knavish fool than this?" "Hear, hear!" was instantly bellowed from the accustomed bench. The wit bowed—thanked the gentleman for his ready reply to the question—and sat down amid convulsions of laughter from all but the unfortunate subject.

To Careless Correspondents.

Send no more slovenly productions to this office, especially if they are accompanied with the apology that you were very much in a hurry when you wrote them, and the request to correct &c. In the first place, you should not write for the press in a "hurry," but should always take sufficient time for the purpose. If you cannot find time to prepare your productions, do you suppose that an editor can, and that he will be willing to employ his time each week, in altering the syntax, orthography and punctuation for bungling writers? Editors cannot, and will not do it.—W. C. Jour.

ON LISTENING TO EVIL REPORTS.—The longer I live the more I feel the importance of adhering to the rules I have laid down for myself in relation to such matters.

1. To hear as little as possible, whatever is to the prejudice of others.
2. To believe nothing of the kind, till I am absolutely forced to it.
3. Never to drink into the spirit of one who circulates an ill report.
4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed towards others.
5. Always to believe, that, if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.—Carns' Life of Simeon.

A NEW PROPELLER.—Yesterday we witnessed, on Chouteau's Pond, the application of a newly invented propeller, by Mr. J. Reeder, of this city. The invention consists in the application to the stern of the boat, of a propeller shaped and fashioned like the tail of a whale. It consists of a combination of springs, which are operated upon a crank, and which produce the same effect on the water as the tail of the whale does. The whole idea seems to be borrowed from the form and powers of this monster of the deep, to travel through the water. It is steered by small rudders (corresponding to the side fins of the whale) on the side. The small craft upon which it is applied glided through the water at a rapid rate, and the invention believes, that a vessel constructed on his principle, may be made to cross the Atlantic, from New York to Liverpool, in four or five days. The invention is ingenious and well worthy the attention of those who feel an interest in the advance of the age.—St. Louis Repub.

LIBERAL BEQUESTS.—Mrs. Elizabeth Huxham, of Philadelphia, has given by will $2,500 to Princeton College. $500 to the Prebyterian Board of Education, $500 to the Board of Missions, $1,500 to the Board of Publication, and $500 to the Board of Foreign Mission.

A PROPOSITION TO THE SLAVE STATES.—The Northampton (Mass.) Courier proposes that the territory newly acquired from Mexico, be given to the colored population of our country for their exclusive occupation, under the protection of the United States.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

The writer of the following communication in the Journal of Commerce speaks strongly against "unprofitable choir singing."

"In my going up and down in New England, these last few months, I have been confounded with what I have seen in the churches of almost all denominations, in relation to the important part of the public worship of God, which consists in singing. Would you believe it, in scarcely one church I have been in during the last six months have I heard any one sing, (save perhaps in the doxology, or in some extraordinary case,) except the choir! This does amaze me. If there be any part of divine worship in which all the people should take part, it is that of singing the praises of God. And of all portions of our country where I expected to find the whole congregation take part in this delightful act of religious service, New England is the very first. But I formed that even the all-souled Methodists are sinking down into that most wretched of all practices—of having the choir, often consisting in part or whole of hired singers, do all the singing, and the congregation sitting or standing in perfect silence. And this, too, emphatically in the land of singing schools! Shade of Ichabod Crane!—How in the world has this come about? What, in a land where every body has gone to singing school and learned more or less of the elements of vocal music, has it come to this, that it is impossible to train a congregation to sing fifty or a hundred good tunes, in which all who can sing may unite? What is the matter? Must the edification of the people, must the praise of God by the people—even by all the people—be sacrificed to the exact harmony, to refined and elegant music, uttered indeed very often by a "thoughtless tongue?"

"For my part I am not astonished to find religion in a very low state in the Churches of New England, so long as a most important part of divine worship—the most popular—is so conducted that the congregation has little interest in it than in listening with feelings very similar to those of spectators in a theatre. This is all wrong, I would rather, infinitely rather, have the wholehearted singing even if not scientific and accurate, of a good congregation of blacks in the south, than this lifeless, soulless, godless manner of conducting this portion of divine worship.—The fact that it exists is proof enough that there is but little spiritual life in the churches in these parts.

"I am no enemy to choirs, if they be of the right sort; but I do protest with all my might against their monopolizing the singing in the house of God. And I protest too against the foolish practice of allowing choirs to be introducing new tunes, on purpose to prevent the congregation, in consequence of not knowing them, from taking part in the music. Very few of the new tunes, now-a-days, can be compared with many of the old ones known to almost everybody. I do not hesitate to declare that if I were pastor of a church where such a state of things exists, as I have seen in very many of the best churches in N. England, during the last six months, I would instantly demand a dismission, and go to the heathen, rather than take another such charge.—I say this in sober verity. I believe there is a vast deal of downright wickedness in all this matter. I speak my honest opinion on the subject, without knowing, or caring to know, the opinions of others. I feel quite sure the great God whom we worship does not approve of this manner of publicly conducting his praise. I am inclined to think that David understood what was the divine mind on this subject. And when he exclaims so often, in the very Psalms which he composed for the public service of Jehovah, "Let the people praise thee, O God, yea, let all the people praise thee," he did not mean to say, Let the choir praise thee, O God, yea, let all the choir praise thee. No, no—he meant no such thing. Nor did the divine Being intend that he should mean so.

Louis Phillippe.

It is rumored in England that the ex-king of the French intends taking up his residence in Lancashire. That he is in treaty for Duxbury Park, near Chosley. Between the father of the present owner of Duxbury Park, Mr. Standish, and Louis Phillippe, valuable presents passed, and feeling of friendship exists between the present owner and the ex-king. In the House of Commons, on the 21st ult., in reply to certain questions, Lord Palmerston said that no apology had been offered to the French Government by Lord Normanby as had been reported, for England having given an asylum to the ex-royal family. In a private letter to Lord Normanby, instructions were given to him to say to the French Government, if complaint should be made, that the reception given to those persons was, and would be, such as is always given to those who have been unfortunate from any circumstances, and are obliged to seek refuge in England. That her majesty's ministers would act fairly, honorably, and openly, and under no circumstances would there be any ground for supposing they would engage in any intrigue hostile to the Government of France.

THE OLDEST INHABITANT GONE.—The Buffalo express, of the 7th, says: "Mr. Ezekiel Lane died day before yesterday. He was the "oldest inhaditant" of Buffalo, being 102 years of age. He was the first white man to visit the present site of this city, and erected the first house where now resides a moving multitude of more than 40,000. He was engaged in both wars with Great Britian, and drew a double pension for services rendered in defence of his country."

SERVED RIGHT.—A careless carman, yesterday morning, driving rapidly along Ninth street, ran against and knocked down a young man named Bridges, hurting him considerably. The driver was arrested, and fined, under the ordinance, $9 and costs, for his carelessness. He should in addition have been fined under the State law, which prohibits "driving over Bridges faster than a walk."—Cin. Com.

COUNTERFEITER CAUGHT.—The Marshall of Portsmouth, Mr. Squires, came to the city on Saturday morning, in pursuit of a man by the name of G. W. Spears, who had been passing—in the northern part of the State—counterfeit Lafayette bank notes of the denomination of ten dollars. He gave a description to Deputy Marshall Ware, who went in pursuit and very soon picked the gentleman up, and placed him in a state room on board the Scioto packet, under charge of the Portsmouth officer.—Cincinnati Com.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Mr. William Crawford was thrown from a buggy at Cumberland, (Md.,) last Tuesday, and had his jaw-bone badly broken, also his skull-bone considerably fractured. Very little hope of his recovery is entertained.

FIRST BOAT FROM OHIO RIVER.—The first boat of the Pittsburg and Cleveland line, by the cross cut canal, arrived at Clevelaod on the 12th, with a full cargo of sugar, molasses, iron, nails and glass.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. Deen, Grocer and Shoemaker, Putnam, and obtain a box of Dr. Le Roy's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Pills which is the best family medicine now in use. So says Mr. O'Neil the Agent.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisnness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. GENERAL CONFERENCE PROSPECTUS

Of a Daily and Weekly Pittsburgh Christian Advocate during the session.

We propose to issue, during the approaching session of the General Conference in this city, a "Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," half the size of our present large Weekly, containing full, accurate and authentic reports of proceedings, speeches and documents, together with all other matters of general interest occurring during the time.

TERMS—For a single copy, 'one dollar.' Any person sending us five subscribers shall be entitled to a copy for his agency; and one sending ten subscribers shall have three additional copies at his disposal. Advance pay, in all cases.

It is supposed that the General Conference may continue in session six weeks—that being near the length of the last two sessions. Should it continua longer, the Daily will be furnished to the end of the session at the above price. If it adjourns sooner, the Weekly paper will be substituted to make up the deficit of the six weeks of the Daily—allowiug one Weekly for two Dailies. Thus, if the General Conference adjourns in five weeks, subscribers to the Daily will receive three copies of the Weekly to compensate for the six Dailies wanting to complete the sixth week. The Delegates will be furnished a copy gratis.

WEEKLY SESSION PAPER.—We will also send, to such as may prefer it, the Weekly "Pittsburgh Christian Advocate," for six weeks, during the session of the General Conference, and until the whole of the proceedings are published. TERMS—thirty three cents for one copy—four copies for 'one dollar.'

It is desirable to have the names as soon as possible, that we may know how large an edition of each will be needed. The money may be forwarded by the delegates where convenient. Great care will be combined with dispatch, in both printing and mailing, that subscribers may receive authentic intelligence at the earliest possible period.

All communications to be addressed to Rev. W. Hunter, Editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa. Let those who send subscribers be careful to say they are for the session paper, and whether they are for the Daily or Weekly.

We respectfully request of our Methodist cotemporaries an early insertion of the above Prospectus—a favor which we will reciprocate if ever we have the opportunity.

Any paper inserting this Prospectus, and sending a copy containing it to this office, will be entitled to a Daily during the session of General Conference.

DYING IN ZION.

BY MISS PHEBE CAREY.

RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED TO REV. THOS. H. STOCKTON.

Fainter and fainter the music
Of thy voice falls, day by day,
For eternity's solemn shadows
Hang heavily over thy way.

Yet even as the faithful Hebrews
Unharmed in the furnace trod,
So thou, through the fire of affliction,
Hast walked with the Son of God !

But who for the cross, insulted
Will plead as thou hast plead,
When the night of the sepulchre closes
Its stillness over thy head ?

For, not lightly forgotten or spoken,
Thy words with a power are fraught,
That returns to thrill and vibrate
In each solemn hour of thought.

Not thine are the studied phrases
Of the eloquence of art,
But the power of truth and feeling,
Reaching the depths of the heart.

Thy pleading words to the sinner
Are earnest, effective calls,—
And the beautiful story of Jesus
How sweet from thy lips it falls !

Not the ritual's pomp is needed,
Nor the censer's incense cloud,
To make solemnly sweet the altar
Where thy soul in prayer is bowed.

How can we patiently, calmly,
Behold thy feet, whose tread
Is beautiful on the mountains,
Going down to the rest of the dead ?

Bearing thy sorrows so meekly,
Putting not back the cup :
Though the Savior has need of thy presence,
O how can we give thee up !

The Politics of Christianity.

NO. II.

LEAVEN.

When we said that Christianity prescribes in relation to politics, aware how liable the expression was to nerve texualists, we added, "in its own inimitable manner." A word or two respecting this manner—a few thoughts suggestive of the kind of process by which spiritual truth enters into, pervades and assimilates whatever affects our social well-being, will be the most natural, and, therefore, most fitting introduction to the work we have undertaken. The edifice we are about to survey cannot well be approached but through this avenue.

Let no man, then, look into the New Testament, the statute-book of Christianity, for "a model constitution"—he might as well search the open volume of Nature for the original type and pattern of every flower that blows. It is man's fashion, not God's to construct a complicated framework for the purpose of setting forth what his idea will come to if it will but work.—The creature makes laws for things—the creator puts laws into them. In human contrivances the form is provided for the power—in Divine, the power invariably developes the form.—We have our "Manuals"—our theories—our systems—our ingenious and elaborate paper plans of what ought to be—our checks and balances, provisions and prohibitions, charters and declarations of right, all marking out with minute distinctness, after the fashion of our respective judgements, the channels in which life of any sort may conveniently run. God does far otherwise. In His Book we look in vain for any traces of a normal state, or family, or even church. The outward shape, the visible manifestation which a given principle shall assume is left, as though unheeded—a matter of very inferior moment. But He plants in the heart of society a living truth—hides in the meal a small quantity of leaven—quickens beneath a mass of corruption, an indestructive and expansive principle—and gradually, silently, but surely, the truth puts forth blade, stalk and ear,—the leaven "leaveneth the whole lump"—the principle attracts towards, and assimilates to itself, the most untoward element with which it comes in contact.

Few errors, perhaps, have bred more mischief than that which mistakes the New Testament for a Handbook for the conscience—a compendious Directory, in which are to be found correctly mapped all the numberless varieties of human obligations. It was never intended to instruct man specifically in what he is to do—it insists chiefly and most earnestly upon what he is to be. It is not even in this respect a code of preceptive regulations—but an agency to bring about its own glorious ends. It is a history of facts embodying one moral—Love—pure, unselfish, constant, self-sacrificing, unquenchable love—and this history, with its doctrinal illustrations, is presented to human nature with a view to awaken a faint but distant echo—a response like unto itself. Kindle that central fire, and by the light of it, all human duty may be clearly read. The child, the friend, the father, the master, the citizen, the magistrate, the Senator—man in any earthly relationship may ask guidance at the oracle of a truly loving heart, and may obtain the counsel that he needs. And if the dim and scarcely visible image of Love, thus photographed upon man's being, needs but a glimpse at it, to set him right as to his social relationship, and to rouse within him an instinctive sense of the duties arising out of them, surely a reverent contemplation of the original type of that image, undistorted by any of the defects and accidents, which through the imperfection of the material, on which it is impressed, necessarily disfigure the copy, must needs do all that can be wished, to rectify misapprehension, to enlighten ignorance, to remove prejudice, and to qualify him, in all his associations with his fellow man, both to discover and to discharge, its appropriate obligations. Truth breathting love, once seen, can never be forgotten. Thenceforth, all other things are seen in the light of her benignant smile.

The clearest and most impressive idea, perhaps, of the insinuating, penetrating, assimilating energy of the Christian system, is to be gained from its own history. It begins its career in one of the obscurest corners, and under the lowliest worldly auspices, which this earth could well assign to it. Surrounding it on every hand may be seen various forms of social wrong, some of them hoary with age, many of them gigantic in stature. Without heeding them, without specifically denouncing them, without any show of plan or purpose in regard to them, it communicates from individual to individual, from soul to soul, its own purity and benevolence of spirit. One by one, silently, gradually, surely, ancient embodiments of injustice decay and die. This age sees one amelioration accomplished for humanity—that, another. As the world becomes more and more deeply imbued with Divine truth, the evil of practices long sanctioned by society becomes first dimly apparent, then gross and palpable, at last too hideous to be borne. The degradation of woman, the persecution of religious faith, slavery in all its forms, war under whatever pretence, have either disappeared, or are fast disappearing before the benignant influence of the religion of Jesus. We hear not the clatter of destruction—the noise of axes and hammers. The process as it goes forward attracts no great notice—but the "leaven" is at work—atom is imparting to atom its own activity—what is unalterably repellant of the gentle but efficacious influence is being extruded—what is susceptible of modification is being changed. Human nature in all of its developements—individual, domestic, social, political, international—under the power of simple christian truth, is throwing out upon the surface, ultimately to throw off altogether, its vicious humors—and the selfishness of man, driven by a living principle of love, first into sight, last into extinction, will cease at some future period, to shelter itself behind the political institutions of the age.

All men who believe in Christianity, believe this—all who reason at all must see that these effects are consequent upon this cause. Something, then, there must be in the cause, naturally and inevitably tending to such results. Were it not well for us to know it? Might not the work be greatly helped forward thereby ? Civil governments are in the main nothing more than certain organizations of national opinion, & change in their forms, habits, and spirit, as that changes. Political ameliorations commence with the enlightenment of individual minds. Some devout worshipper, with a question in his heart, goes to the oracle, and waits, and listens, until a clear response is obtained. He tells the newly discovered truth to others. It gains credence. It spreads. It establishes itself as a conviction in the public conscience. At length it puts down all opposition, and ascends the throne, to sway the decisions of men thenceforth forever.

"The leaven leaveneth the lump." The object we have in view in the articles that are to follow is to ascertain from the generic nature of the "leaven" what ought to be, and will be eventually, the character of the "lump." The study if rightly pursued, may conduce to many useful ends. It will save us from serious practical mistakes. It will do more. It will exhibit the loveliness of Christianity in novel and striking aspects, and it will open up to her disciples another and wider sphere of activity and influence than that to which they now almost exclusively confine themselves.

Reader, can aught but good result from taking politics within the circle of God's truth, and calmly surveying them under the light from heaven ? Purifying and strengthening, like the king of birds, our eyesight at the orb of day, may we not be better able to discern good and evil, now strangely intermingled ? We think we may.—Come with us, then, to the contemplation of these original, elemental, active, all-assimilating principles, which contain within them the germ of every blessed change in which this world is destined to rejoice! Come, converse with justice in its inner sanctuary—with benevolence in its birthplace and home! Subject or ruler, citizen or statesman, your notions of political right, privilege, power, and duty, will lose nothing either of breadth or depth, or integrity, by being submitted to the test of divine revelation.

From the American Pulpit.

Freedom of the Pulpit.

BY REV. DANIEL WISE.

If freedom to utter honest convictions, on all subjects relating to human duty, should be allowed anywhere, it should be permitted in the pulpit. The pulpit is the God appointed place for the utterance of the Divine will to man. There his ambassadors stand, responsible to him alone for their faithfulness in declaring the grand truths already revealed in the divine word. Those truths are avowedly opposed to the most pleasing passions, the most cherished lusts, the most tempting appetites of mankind. Their effectual proclamation will, of necessity, excite opposition from the guilty, who are determined not to abandon their follies; and the preacher, in order to his usefulness, must be sustained in the free utterance of those truths, without regard to the animosities of the guilty, who may wince under his faithful admonitions.

Nor must the pulpit submit to dictation. It must not suffer this, that, or the other man, to prescribe its topics, or to proscribe particular truths. To do so would be a suicidal act; it would degrade the preacher into a mere performer, and sink the house of God into a place of amusement. The preacher would no longer be the messenger of God, standing up to summon men to the "righteous and the true," but a mere hired servant of wicked men so wedded to their wickedness, as to be unwilling to have it rebuked. His preaching would soon cease to oppose any sin, for as each sinner in his turn complained, because his sin was touched, he would cease to condemn it until he had lost his liberty to touch any one of the ten commandments!

The pulpit should, therefore, stouly resist all dictation. It should fearlessly claim and exercise the right to discuss any truth taught in the Bible, according to its discretion; and, when the people, who sit luxuriously on their cushioned seats within the sanctuary, refuse the preacher this right, we should prefer the temples of nature for his churches, and the friendly root of some old tree for his pulpit, where, with free lips, he may speak the stirring thoughts of a freeman, rather than to stand a base-hearted slave in the carved desk of the proudest cathedral in Christendom! Freedom, unshaken freedom, to oppose all vice and to sustain all virtue, is the right of the pulpit.

We have penned these thoughts, because we have observed, of late, that a portion of the political press have impudently condemned the pulpit, for giving expression to the teaching of the Bible concerning WAR. For merely asserting the utter and absolute opposition of Christianity to war, these noisy politicians have denounced such ministers, as hypocrites and meddlers; and all this, forsooth, because there happens to be a war existing between our country and a poor, feeble sister republic.

Now we protest against this attack upon the rights of the pulpit. If the preacher believes war to be wicked, and if he sees it denounced by the spirit and word of the gospel, it is his undoubted right to say so.—What, if he does thereby indirectly condemn the authors of that war? Shall he cease on that account? Will political men dare to assume that the pulpit must be silent on those moral evils which have their connivance and approbation?—Do they expect such a bowing of the knee to political idols from the ministry of the nineteenth century? We tell them, if such are their expectations, they have mistaken the men who fill the pulpits of New England. Thank God, the spirit of Roger Williams, and of the heroes of the May Flower still lives and still speaks in our pulpits! And it will live. Politicians may bluster and denounce; they may threaten and curse, if they please—but chain the pulpit they cannot; and more—let them, in their party relations, dare attempt to trammel the freedom of the pulpit, and as sure as the love of liberty lives, the people, in defending the pulpit, will break their political chains, grind them to powder, and, mixing the dust with water, compel these disappointed politicians to drink the mixture.

Narrative.

From the Presbyterion of the West.

A TALE OF THE LATE FLOOD.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Your readers have heard much of the disastrous effects of the late floods, but thousands of instances of real and crushing calamity, have fallen upon the poorer and humbler classes, of which the world will never hear. The most touching and distressing case of which I have heard, was related to me by a lady in L—, the other day.

A negro man in that city, by years of patient toil and economy, had purchased his freedom. But his wife was still in bondage, and his children, by consequence, doomed to become slaves. He resolved to make them free. They were the property of an excellent christian lady, who, although very poor, agreed to release them on the payment of a sum far below their real value. The poor negro's heart almost leaped for joy at the prospect of liberating his family. His plan was soon laid. A gentleman on the banks of the Ohio, wanted a large quantity of wood chopped, which he offered to Tom, to cut on the shares, as they term it.

For a number of months, Tom had plied his axe most faithfully. Many a tall cotton-wood had yielded to his manly arm; and many a long rank had he deposited on the bank, to supply the Steamboats, as they passed. Time and again had he estimated the value of his cords, and when at last, he had completed the full amount necessary to purchase his beloved family, the measure of his happiness was almost full. Not a man in the State, perhaps, had a lighter heart or wore a more cheerful countenance than poor Tom. Already, in imagination, he had a hundred times counted down the sum, and received in return the inestimable prize. Little did he dream, poor fellow, of the disappointment that awaited him!—Not only had he, in anticipation, secured the price of his family's freedom, but he had also made some provision for their support. A field of corn had been raised, and several pigs fatted, and all the arrangements made to take his family to a cabin near the river, where he prepared to support them by means of his axe. But the price of wood was a little depressed, and Tom thought the wiser course, was to hold on a little, till the winter rise would come, & with it a brisker demand for his wood. Still he did not relax in his industry. Day after day he plied his axe, and rank after rank was still added to his already well stocked wood-yard. You may easily imagine the mingled emotions of pride and exultation with which he contemplated the result of his industry, and the change it was soon to effect in his circumstances. But what was his concern, when he saw the swelling waters of the turbid & resistless stream, beginning to roll out over its lofty banks, and hourly enroaching upon the treasure, in which was rested all his hopes! That vigorous arm, that had leveled so many proud patriarchs of the forest, was now paralized. His axe was no longer heard to resound from the wood, nor the falling tree to crash beneath his strokes. His axe now stuck idly in the stump, and the anxious negro sat mute with despair, as he saw his long ranks one after another rise from their place, and float off with the majestic tide! In a few short hours, the labor of thrice as many months, was irrecoverably lost. His wood was gone, his corn, his pigs, his all. He moved not till he saw all was lost. And now with heavy head and bursting heart, he hastens away to communicate the heavy tidings to his wife. Her mistress saw him as he approached the house, and in his countenance she read the sadness of his heart. She waited not for him to open his message of grief, but eagerly enquired the cause of his distress. The poor negro could scarcely restrain his feelings enough to utter his tale of woe, but with stifled sobs and streaming eyes, he disclosed the extent of his loss.

I need not relate the rest. You will expect as a matter of course, that the sympathies of the good lady will be deeply moved—that the simple, affecting recital of such distress, will make an irresistable appeal to her heart. And your expectation shall not be disappointed. Such was the result. Her magnanimous reply was—"Dry up your tears Tom—you have labored faithfully and you shall not lose the reward of your toil. Your wife is free, and you may take her when you choose."

The reader will imagine the scene that followed.

A Useful Lesson Conveyed in Rhyme.

We know not the author of the following lines, which appeared originally, we believe, in the Providence Chronicle. They are worthy of the pen of Miss Gould or Oliver Wendell Holmes. They inculcate, happily and wittily, an important lesson that should come home to the business and bosoms of all mothers and nurses.

THE BABY'S LAMENT.

O mother, dear mother, no wonder I cry,
More wonder by far that your baby don't die;
No matter what ails me, no matter who's here,
No matter how hungry the "poor little dear!"
No matter if full or all out of breath,
She trots me, and trots me, and trots me to death!

I love my dear nurse, but I dread that great knee;
I like all her talk, but, wo unto me!
She can't be contented with talking so pretty,
And washing, and dressing, and doing her duty;
All that's very well; I can bear soap and water;
But, mother, she is an unmerciful trotter!

Pretty ladies, I want just to look at your faces;
Pretty lamp, pretty fire, let me see how it blazes;
How can I, my heart going bibbity bob?
And she trots me the harder the harder I sob.
O! mother do stop her, I'm inwardly sore,
I hiccup and cry, and she trots me the more,
And talks about 'wind,' when 'tis she makes me ache;
Wish 'twould blow her away for poor baby's sake.

Thank goodness, I'm still ; O, blessed be quiet !
I'm glad my dear mother is willing to try it ;
Of foolish old customs my mother's no lover;
And the wisdom of this she can never discover ;
I'll rest me a while, and just look about,
And laugh up at Sally, who peeps in and out,
And pick up some notions as soon as I can,
To fill my small noddle before I'm a man.

O dear, is that she, is she coming so soon ?
She's bringing my dinner with tea-cup and spoon;
She'll hold me in one hand, in t'other the cup,
And as fast as its down she'll just shake it up ;
And thumpity thump, with the greatest delight,
Her heel it is going from morning till night ;
All over the house you may hear it I'm sure,
Trot—trotting ! just think what I'm doomed to endure!

Were children accustomed from infancy to hear nothing but corect conversation, there would be but little need of their learning arbitrary rules of grammar—they would naturally speak and write correctly. Hence it is, that children of educated people are generally so much more easy and graceful in their conversation than the children of the uneducated. Our language, like our manners, is caught from those with whom we associate; and if we would have the young improve in this important part of education, we must be careful that they hear no vulgarism from us.—St. Louis New Era.

Training of Children.

The most esential qualifications for training a child well, are not of a nature to be communicated by books or lectures on education. They are, 1st, The desire to be right in the matter; 2d, Sense: 3d, Kindness, and 4th, Firmness. Where these are wanting the wisest admonition in the world will be of no other use than to relieve the mind of the person who throws them away.—The doctrine of an eminent writer, (of a generation now nearly gone,) that a child should be reasoned into obedience, had, in its day, more of a misleading efficacy than might have been tho't possible; and many a parent was induced to believe that a child should be taught to give its obedience, not because it was obedience, but because the thing ordered was reasonable; the little casuists and controversialists being expected to see the reason of things as readily in real life as in the dialogues between Tutor and Charles. The common sense of mankind has now made an end of this doctrine, and it is known now, as it was before the transit of that eminent person, that obedience—prompt, implicit unreasoning, and almost unconcious—is the first thing to be taught to a child, and that he can have no peace for his soul without it. That first and foremost rule of exacting obedience, is so far from being subject to the condition of showing reasons that I believe a parent with a strong will, although it be a perverse one, will train a child better than a parent of a reasonable mind, tainted by infirmity of purpose. For as "obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams," so an authority which is absolute by virtue of its own inherent strength is better than one which is shaken by a reference to ends and purposes, and by reasonable doubts as to whether they are the best and most useful. Nor will the parents' perversity, unless it be unkind or ill-tempered, occasion the child half so much uneasiness in the one case, as the child will suffer from those perversities of its own which will spring up in the other. For habits of instant and mechanical obedience are those that give rest to the child, and spare its health and temper; whilst a recusant or dawdling obedience will keep it distracted in propensity, bringing a perpetual pressure on its nerves, and consequently on its mental and bodily strength.—Taylor's Notes from Life.

Agricultural.

From the Horticulturist.

The Kitchen Garden—Selection and Improvement of Soils—Burnt Clay, &c.

THE KITCHEN GARDEN is at once the most humble and the most useful department of horticulture. It can no more be allowed to stand still than the sun himself. Luckily, (or unluckily,) man must eat; and, omniverous as he is, he must gather food from both the animal and the vegetable kingdom.

Now there are, we trust, few of our readers who need an argument to prove what a wide difference is very often found between vegetables grown in different gardens; how truly the products of one shall be small, tough and fibrous, and those of another, large, tender and succulent. Sometimes the former defects are owing to bad culture, but more frequently to unsuitable soil.—It is to this latter condition of things that we turn, with the hope of saying something which, if not new, shall at least be somewhat useful, and to the point.

Nothing, in any temperate clime, is easier than the general cultivation of vegetables in most parts of the United States. With our summer sun, equal in heat and brilliancy to that of the equator, we can grow the beans of Lima, the melons of the Mediterranean, the tomatoes and eggplants of South America, without hotbeds, and with such ease and profusion that it fills a newly arrived English or French gardener with the most unqualified astonishment. Hence, in all good soils, with a smaller amount of labor than is elswhere bestowed in the same latitudes, our vegetables are produced in the most prodigal abundance.

But now for the exceptions. Every man cannot "locate" himself in precisely that position where the best soil is to be found. Circumstances, on the contrary, often force us to build houses, and make kitchen gardens, where Dame Nature evidently never contemplated such a thing; where, in fact, instead of the rich, deep accumulations of fertile soil, that she frequently offers us in this country, she has only given us the "short commons" allowance of sand or clay.

The two kinds of kitchen gardens among us, which most demand skill and intelligent labor, are those which are naturally too sandy or too clayey. It is not difficult, at a glance, how these might be, and ought to be treated in order to improve them greatly. But we have observed—such is the force of habit—that nine-tenths of those who have gardens of this description, go on in the same manner as their neighbors who have the best soil,—manuring and cultivating precisely in the ordinary way, and then grumbling in quite a different mode about short crops, and poor vegetables, instead of setting about remedying the evil in good earnest.

The natural remedy for a heavy clay soil in a kitchen garden, is to mix sand with it. This acts like a charm upon the stubborn alumina, and, allowing the atmospheric influences to penetrate where they were formerly shut out, gives a stimulus, or rather an opportunity, to vegetable growth, which quickly produces its result in the quantity and quality of the crops.

But it not unfrequently happens that sand is not to be had abundantly and cheaply enough to enable the proprietor of moderate means to effect this beneficial change. In this case, we propose to the kitchen gardener to achieve his object by another mode, equally efficient, and so easy and cheap as to be within the the reach of almost every one.

This is, to alter the texture of too heavy soils by burning a portion of the clay.

Very few of our practical gardeners seem to be aware of two important facts. First, that clay, when once burnt, never regains its power of cohesion, but always remains in a pulverised state; and therefore is just as useful, mechanically, in making a heavy soil light, as sand itself.—Second, that burnt clay, by its power of attracting from the atmosphere those gases, which are the food of vegetables, is really a most excellent manure itself. Hence, in any clayey kitchen garden, wherebrush, faggots, or refuse fuel of any description can be had, there is no reason why its cold compact soil should not be turned at once, by this process of burning the clay, into one comparatively light, warm and productive.*

The difficulty which stands in the way of the kitchen gardener, who has to contend with a very light and too sandy soil, is its want of capacity for retaining moisture, and the consequent failure of the summer crops.

In some instances, this is very easily remedied. We mean in those cases where a loam or heavier subsoil lies below the surface. Trenching, or subsoil-plowing by bringing up a part of the alumina from below, and mixing it with the sand of the surface soil, remedies the defect very speedily. But, where the subsoil is no better than the top, or even worse, there are but two modes of overcoming this bad constitution of the soil. One of those, is to grasp the difficulty at once by applying a coat of clay to the surface of the soil, and mixing it with the soil as you would manure; the other, (a less expensive and more gradual process,) is to manure the kitchen garden every year with compost, in which clay or strong loam forms a large proportion.

It may seem, to many persons, quite out of the question to attempt to ameliorate sandy soils by adding clay. But it is suprising how small a quantity of clay, thoroughly intermingled with the loosest sandy soil, will give it a different texture, and convert it into a good loam. And even in sandy districts, there are often valleys and low places, quite near the kitchen garden, where a good stock of clay lies, (perhaps quite unsuspected,) ready for uses of this kind.

In the Journal of the Agricultural Society of England, is a case quoted (vol. ii, p. 67,) where the soil was a white sand, varying in depth from one to four feet; it was so sterile that no crops could ever be grown upon it to profit. by giving it a top-dressing of clay, at the rate of 150 cubic yards to the acre, the whole surface of the farm so treated was improved to the depth of ten or twelve inches, so as to give excellent crops.

Since a soil, once rendered more tenacious in this way, never loses this tenacity, the improvement of the kitchen garden, where economy is necessary, might be carried on gradually, by taking one or two compartments in hand every year; thus, in a gradual manner, bringing the whole surface to the desired condition.

A great deal may also be done, as we have just suggested, by a judicious system of manuring very sandy soils. It is the common practice to enrich these soils precisely like all others; that is, with the lighter and more heating kinds of manure; stable dung, for example. Nothing could be more injudicious. Every particle of animal manure in too light a soil ought, for the kitchen garden, to be composted, for some time previously, with eight or ten times its bulk of strong loam or clay. In this way, that change in the soil, so much to be desired, is brought about; and the whole mass of clay-compost, made in this way, is really equal in value, for such sandy soils, to the same bulk of common stable manure.

Whatever the soil of a kitchen garden, our experience has taught us that it should be deep. It is impossible that the steady and uniform moisture at the roots, indispensable to the continuous growth of many crops, during the summer months, can be maintained in a soil which is only one spade deep. Hence, we would trench or subsoil plow all kitchen gardens, (taking care, first, that they were well drained.) whether sandy or clayey in texture. We know that many persons, judging from theory rather than practice, cannot see the value of deepening soils already too porous. But we have seen its advantages strongly marked in more than one instance, and therefore recommend it with confidence. It is only necessary to examine light soils, trenched and untrenched, to be convinced of this. The roots in the former penetrate and gather nourishment from twice the cubic area that they do in the former; and they are not half so easily affected by the atmospheric changes of temperature.

Old gardens, that have been long cultivated, are greatly improved by trenching and reversing the strata of soil. The inorganic elements, or mineral food, of plants often become so much exhausted, in long cultivated kitchen gardens, that only inferior crops can be raised, even with abundant supplies of animal manures. By turning up the virgin loam of the subsoil, and exposing it to the action of the atmoshere, its gradual decomposition takes place, and fresh supplies of lime, potash, etc., are afforded for the vigorous growth of plants.

We have only room for a single hint more, touching the kitchen garden. This is, to recommend the annual use of salt, in moderate quantities, sown broadcast over the whole garden early in the spring, and more especially on those quarters of it where vegetables are to be planted which are most liable to the attacks of insects that harbor in the earth. We are satisfied that salt, spread in this way, before vegetation has commenced, or the earth is broken up for sowing seeds, at the rate of ten bushels per acre, is one of the best possible applications to the soil.

It destroys insects, acts specifically on the strength of the stems, and healthy color of the foliage of plants, assists porous soils in collecting and retaining moisture, and is an admirable stimulant to the growth of many vegetables. In all the Atlantic States. where it is easily and cheaply procured, it ought, therefore, to form an annual top-dressing for the whole kitchen garden.

* A simple mode of burning clay in the kitchen garden is the following: Make a circle eight or ten feet in diameter, by raising a wall of soil a couple of feet high. Place a few large sticks loosely crosswise in the bottom, and upon those pile faggots or brush, & set fire to the whole. As soon as soon as it is well lighted, commence throwing on lumps of clay, putting on as much at a time as may be without quite smothering the fire. As soon as the fire breaks through a little, add more brush, and then cover with more clay, till the heap is raised as high as it can be conveniently managed. After lying till the whole is cold, or nearly so, the heap should be broken down and any remaining lumps pulverized, and the whole spread over the surface and well dug in.

WHAT TEMPERANCE DOES.

About four years ago, an acquaintance of ours signed the pledge. He had been intemperate for many years—had spent about two thousand dollars—all he owned—and involved himself in debt to the amount of about five hundred dollars. Now he has so far regained by strict temperance as to extricate himself from debt, and purchase a small tract of land containig 80 acres, together with a good stock of horses and cattle, and all the necessary farming utensils.

WATTS' VERSION.

The barn of Dr. Isaac Watts near Chilicothe, was struck by lightning on Friday the 10th, inst. There! said an old fashioned Presbyterian lady of my acquaintance, to whom the fact was read by her daughter, there! said she, there are people who don't believe in judgements, but if that waa'nt a judgement on the Dr., for writing those Psalms and Himes, I would like to know what it was.—Cist's Adv.

The Ocean Steamers now on the stocks in this city, as we have ascertained, by personal inspection and calculation, will cost at least five millions three hundred thousand dollars. This is but the first letter of the alphabet in a newly opening career. Already our internal steam navy exceeds that of all Europe, probably of the whole world, and in ten years our ocean steam marine will be the finest in existence. Our immense line of coast, the facilities for building and employing steamers, and the almost certain prospect of becoming the carriers and messengers of other nations about to plunge into war with each other, must inevitably create a vast fleet of American ocean steamers.—*N. SHOCKING.—The little son of Rev. Erastus Hopkins was scalded to death at Northampton, Mass., last week, by jumping prematurely into a bathing tub of boiling water, which was in preparation for him.

MAIL ROBBER CAUGHT.—Messrs. Long and Goodin, United States Deputy Marshals, arrested in this city on Saturday, a man named James Murray, charged with mail robbery—he having taken the mail-bag from the steamer Daniel Boone, which he broke open and robbed, about two weeks since. He is now in jail, having been committed for trial, by Judge McLean.—Cin. Com.

Correspondence.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Waynesburgh, Pa., May 4th.

Br. Bassett: Notwithstanding that I am unable to labor in the vineyard of my Divine Master, it does my soul good to know that the good cause in moving onward.

On Sabbath last, I had the pleasure of hearing a plain, practical, and energetic sermon delivered by Br. Joseph Fordyce, (at the Round School House,) from Rom. 1. 15–16. At the close of which he gave an invitation for candidates for baptism to come forward—ten presented themselves, eight of whom were heads of families and of respectability. I took my seat upon the bank of the Ten mile Creek. I gazed upon the vast multitude which lined the beautiful creek, numbering some four or five hundred souls. How solemn the people all appear, God is here.—What melodeous sound is that which falls upon my ear, the multitude are hymning the high praise of God by the water's edge, my mind travels back to Jordan, the baptism of my blessed Master is in the eye of my mind, it is carried forward. O, how much like heaven. The minister with a feeling heart gives out the last lines of his hymn; here it comes:

"He now is fitting up your home;
Go on—we'll meet you there."

My soul and all that is within me says, Amen The redeemed on their way home, say, Amen Our friends who are now before the throne say, Amen. The candidates for baptism, say, Amen. Angels look down and delight to repeat the chorus, Amen. But the best of all Christ says, Amen. Ah, methinks, we shall be soon congregated at the bar of God. O, my gracious Redeemer, who among us will be able to stand. I looked upon the silver current as it rolled by, marching on with its silent murmur to the great ocean. Yes,

"Time, like an ever-rolling stream,
Bears all its sons away."

We shall all soon be in the great ocean of eternity. But here comes the minister with his candidates to receive the holy ordinance. Just here, the quotation of Br. Reese from the prayer of the poor sable son of Africa fell with great force upon my ear, it is a favorite with him, so it is with me, here it is, "And may the wings of Jordan's dove, as it hovers over Zion, be wet with the dues of every clime."

Did I possess the strength that I once did—had I the voice that I once had, I would delight to raise the cross of my Divine Master in some benighted land. But God in his providence sealed up my voice. Let it be so, God's ways are right. I cannot now understand it, but I shall hereafter. O, for grace.

But what mournful intelligence is this coming? Death is in our ranks. Brs. Springer, Brown and others will drop the sympathetic tear, when they learn that another PIONEER and fellow-laborer in the cause of Mutual Rights has been taken from labor to reward.

Just about the time that Br. Joseph led forth his candidates to administer the holy ordinance by immersion, his father (Rev. John Fordyce,) stepped across the Jordan of death, and took his upward flight to glory and to God. Adieu to our father, until we meet in the palace of God and the home of the Redeemed. Peace to his ashes. But we must drop this, we are not writing an obituary.

The superintendent of this circuit, Br. P. T. Laishley, has been for some time severely afflicted, which has prevented his laboring. The circuit is at this time without any regular minister upon it. It appears the harvest is ripe, but none to gather the crop. Great God, why is it, that all the preachers who travel this circuit become thus afflicted? Would it not be well for both preachers and members to petition a throne of grace that the cause may be removed? there is a wrong some where. God does not willingly chastise his people.

Jordan's waves for the last twelve months have been dashing furiously about my feet, thus far have they been permitted to come, and no further. Praise God, that they have not broken over my head.

I am yours, P.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Mr. Editor: I wish to take some notice of a certain epistle that appeared in the "True Wesleyan" of Feb. 19, being the 8th No. of vol. 6. It appears to have come from the pen of Rev. J. Sims, of Palermo, N. Y. Wishing him or his friends all the good they deserve, I will try not to disguise the truth for his injury, neither for his benefit. Having had some little opportunity of observation, as well as public report, I would take the liberty to say, it is well known by many of other denominations, that seceders from their bodies having gone to the Wesleyans, and engaged in that enterprise, have imbibed the spirit manifested by this Mr. Would be———, viz. to seek every opportunity to build themselves up upon the downfall of others. This indeed, seems to be the cause, why he has thrown the epistle referred to before the people. And when this was not enough, and he could not otherwise succeed, other Arnolds or Hulls have been influenced to lead the van. They have in this country, apparently borne the character of those spoken of by the great apostle, who "crept into houses and led captive silly women." 2 Tim. 3. The first charge he makes upon the brotherhood in the gospel is that the M. E. and M. P. Churches have combined their forces to persecute the Wesleyan enterprise of establishing a pure church, or propagating those sentiments so fraught with the interests of the slave. And finally, we have gone so far, he says, as to go from house to house, persuading some and commanding others not to go to their meetings, or listen to their doctrines, as we were so afraid of their influence, and the truthfulness of their doctrines, I would say, to me this seems unkind, and I am reminded of the course of the Mormons and the Millerites. They were so eager to glut themselves with public favor, and draw the world after their fanane example, that every thing that did not fall in with their measures, eat up their doctrine, and call it corn, were combined in persecuting them. And further, he lets his accent rest upon the M. P. preachers as having 'persuaded some and commanded others,' and by so doing have caused his labors here to be seasons of trial, (from the fact that they have hedged up his pathway) for his advance has not been probably what he wished it to be. And in view of this statement, I have gone myself to the places where he says these things took place (he having himself told where they were done,) and the people say that there was never any such thing done, and they deem it unkind for a man claiming to be a Christian minister, to spread such things before the world, and if he was trying to promote truth and religion, he would not do it. I would here say, so far as our ministers have advised their brethren, under the influence of the proverb, that "Unless the sheep he first divide,

The wolf can never harm;"

so far, I am glad to learn, (though by an enemy) that they are at their post. And further than this, I have no earthly knowledge on the subject, save by the way of this Mr. Would be———. We have had men among us who claimed to be ministers, who have suffered the wolf to go where he pleased, and laughed to see him in the midst of the flock. And when this was not enough, would get a lambskin and wrap around them and go off with the wolf to prowl for game in other parts, wherever they could find victims to prey upon. And if a word is said by those they have left behind them, in view of these pernicious ways, persecution, would be their cry. It looks to me that this has been (more or less) the cause that has set this little Mr. Would be———, to burning so terribly.

But he says they 'commanded others.' Now I have yet to learn where men in the M. P. Church get such authority, for it is not in the Discipline, and it is a matter of which I have never heard until this gentleman has brought it forth from his treasury of knowledge, & his conception of the matter must be, I think something like Ephraim's. * * * * * But in conclusion, he boasts of final success and victory over his enemies. This masterly leader is so wonderfully skilled and guarded, and strives so hard to promote peace throughout his parish, that in charges to his parishioners (on their receiving membership,) says, You must be upon your guard—persecution will come—you will meet with open hostility from the professed christian world—all will be said and done that can be, for your overthrow! And having thus prepared and alarmed his members, he is prepared to say through their church organ, The battle is begun—our enemies are strong,—and the cry of 'persecution' is raised, thereby to excite public sympathy, thus making capital out of wind, instead of true coin.

Now, Mr. Editor, as a man, and I trust as a Christian, I have advised my own brethren, together with some of theirs to avoid these evils referred to, and be as willing to let live, as they are to live. And was this Mr. Would be——— inclined to do so, all would be well. O that men would strive as hard for principle and holiness, as they will for party, and promotion, then would the trumpet of the Gospel be filled with the Master's own breath, and turning from the heights of Moriah as it flows, and all the world would hear and follow its divine influence. Skeptics would blush, and infidels tremble. It is my prayer to Almighty God that these things might come to "a perpetual end," the watchmen see "eye to eye" together with the brotherhood, and become one mighty phalanx, joined against the powers of darkness. Amen.

Congregational Singing.

Mr. Editor: In your paper of the 4th inst., I observed an article upon Congregational Singing, from the Journal of Commerce; for the insertion of which, I feel under obligation to express my thanks to you; for the evil which the writer describes, and repudiates, is of so obvious a character, as it exists here in the west, that it ought to awaken the churches to a just sense of the mockery of God, to which they are accessory, unless they use the influence they can exercise, and the power conceded to them by their rulers, to abate the nuisance; for such I consider it. I cannot agree with you, in supposing any apology was necessary for the writer, as you seem to suppose, by the two lines at the top, "speaking strongly against unprofitable choir singing." "Unprofitable?" It is blasphemy! or perhaps more properly mocking God. How often do we hear a hymn, calling upon all to praise God with their voices; or such as these, "Come we that love the Lord, and let our joys be known;" "Let those refuse to sing, that never knew our God;"—or "Ye tribes of Adam join, with Heaven, and Earth, and Seas, And offer notes divine, To your Creator's praise;" or thus, "Let every creature praise the eternal God;" or again, "Let every tongue thy goodness speak, Thou Sov'reign Lord of all."

How often I say, do we hear such lines, sung only by those in the Gallery; (a portion of whom at least, make no pretensions to know God in the sense of the Psalmist.) in a half learned tune, while the balance of the congregation are compelled to be silent, because the chorister chooses to set a tune which they cannot sing, that he may show off the choir, or his own skill. If you, Mr. Editor, have escaped the infliction of such impositions, I have not. I am not opposed to having choir singing under suitable arrangement; but am compelled to believe, our churches would worship God more spiritually, were the singing conducted in a more becoming manner.

I must confess I know not how the evil is to be abated, in those congregations, where the people have no voice, except when called together to register the decrees of their rulers; but it does appear to me, that in congregational churches, a remedy might be applied, were it not for that mighty power, Fashion.

WABASH DISTRICT.

Mississinaway Ct. Grant Co., Ia.,
Apr. 24, '48.

Br. Bassett: For the first time, I send you a few lines, for insertion in your paper. I came directly from Conference to this circuit—preached twice—and finding a parsonage, made some arrangements, returned and moved on with my family. Three days after, I set out upon the labors of the circuit. I found nine old preaching places, three flourishing societies, one that had numbered 26 members, entirely shipwrecked, and a few fragments scattered about in various places. I felt rather discouraged, but knew that for the last 2 or 3 years on account of sickness and other embarrassments experienced by ministers, they had had but little ministerial help, and that probably this was one reason that so great declension had taken place. I was in hopes that if the work was thrown into small form, and attended to with energy, that by the blessing of God it might be revived again. I threw it into a two week's circuit, gathered up, old and new, sixteen appointments, and went to work, calling upon the Lord for help. And, glory to his name, I soon had the satisfaction to see the work greatly revived among the membership. Glory to God, this gave me encouragement. Since, the work has been progressing, and we still find the Lord present, to wound and heal. The old society which was entirely fallen, is rising again, and six of its prodigals have returned, with a prospect of more shortly. Six more have joined in other places, and the prospect is good for a general revival. Our second quarterly meeting is just over. Glory to God, it was a glorious time. One accession was received. Thank God for one. I trust that the brethren who had promised to attend this meeting and failed, were so engaged in revivals that they could not leave their work. My third quarterly meeting will come on the 10th and 11th of June, at Johnson's school house, on the Mississinaway, four miles above Jonesburg. We plead for ministerial aid, as we are all alone. Brethren in the ministry, one and all, are invited to come. Pray for us.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, May 11, 1848.

New Subscribers this week, 9. Discontinuances, 2.

To Correspondents.—We still have on hand six or eight articles ahead on the Restructive Rule. Writers will have patience, and we will endeavor to treat all by rules of justice. We desire that those who wish to write further on this subject, will please send us all they design to forward us before the 1st of June, for we learn that a large proportion of our readers would prefer to have the present discussion give place to something more interesting or edifying.

Rev. W. B. Evans.—We had the satisfaction of spending last Sabbath with our old friend at Gratiot and Brownsville. Large audiences attended his ministrations. Br. Evans will attend the Quarterly Meeting of this Circuit next Sabbath. He will preach at Springfield Chapel on Tuesday 16th inst. at 3 P. M., and on Thursday, 18th, in Zanesville at candlelight.

☞We regret to say that several numbers of the Daily Pittsburgh Christian Advocate failed to reach us, and we have had to make up our statement in part from secular papers.

Arrival.—The Zanesville Courier has intelligence by Telegraph of the arrival of the Britannia at Boston. She brings word that civil war is likely to take place in France, and that Ireland is still very highly excited.

Another Failure.—Information is received of the failure of the Erie Bank, Pa. That's bad.

The Washington Riots.—It is truly gratifying to learn that through the praise-worthy efforts of the men in authority, sustained by law abiding citizens of Washington, the recent disgraceful attempts to destroy the press of the National Era, were utterly frustrated. It was with more than ordinary pleasure that we received the next number of that excellent paper, after it had been put in such imminent peril. Dr. Bailey, the Editor, gives due credit to the citizens and authorities of Washington, to the President of the United states, and Officers of the Departments, for their influence and exertions to maintain the supremacy of the laws. He also renders due praise to various gentleman of the Southern Press, for the just and dignified stand they took in vindicating the liberty of the press.

Praiseworthy.—The last number of the National Era, contains a letter from Samuel Lewis, Esq., of Cincinnati, written on the 24th ult., just as he had received word of the riotous proceedings at Washington, threatening the destruction of the press and office of that paper. Mr. L. authorized Dr. Bailey, in case the mob should carry out their threats, to draw on him at sight for one hundred dollars, and one hundred dollars per month for two months to come, making $300, to rebuild and continue the publication of the Era. He adds, "I can wear old clothes, and go back to my bread and water fare, but I cannot live to see the last vestage of liberty destroyed by a mob." In the same paper is given a letter from a gentleman in Baltimore, offering to raise funds in that city for the like purpose, if necessary. The spirit of liberty is not to be killed off by mob violence.

Rev. S. Elliott.—We have received a communication from this brother, occupying three full sheets, intended as a reply to the letter of Br. G. M. Scott, which appeared in our paper of the 13th ult. It seems that Br. Elliott was placed in charge of Columbia Circuit by last Muskingum Conference, & Br. S. was appointed assistant minister. We believe there had been no report made from Columbia Circuit the present year, till the receipt of the letter of Brother S. We published the letter by way of information, it being a candid statement of the condition of the circuit. It bore that things had worn a somewhat discouraging aspect for a year or two past. The religious declension he ascribes to a complication of causes, amongst which is, an almost universal dissatisfaction in reference to the superintendent—that this cause was now removed, since the said superintendent had seen cause to step on board the new vessel, called the "True Wesleyan."

Now in admitting the letter of Br. Scott, it never occurred to us that any serious disparagement or injury was being inflicted upon the said Br. Elliott. He had a right, at his choosing to step on board the said vessel—we have not a particle of regret that he did so—we wish to respect him none the less--we shall say no harmful word of him therefor. And we apprehend that Br. Scott did wisely in announcing the fact here, before the usual glorification should come out in the columns of the "True Wesleyan." For we are so western in our feelings, that we think western news should not first come from the east. Had we discovered in the letter of Br. S. any disposition to injure Br. E. we should have suppressed it, or erased the objectionable part. If the brother thinks himself injured, he shall certainly have the privilege of reply. But the dear man must not expect us to publish nearly a dozen pages in answer to a dozen lines! Besides, a chief part of his communication is a treatise on abolition, an excellent thing in its place, but about as appropriate here as would be a temperance lecture, or a sermon on war.

Our brother does not as we discover, accuse Br. S. of misstatements, but of unqualified statements. The first is that "the first two quarterly meetings passed off without any thing special;" whereas, Br. E. says that at the first meeting, he himself was very much refreshed and encouraged in preaching, and also enjoyed himself well in lovefeast. This he thinks was something "special," and we have no doubt Br. S. will admit the correction.

At the second qr. meeting also, Br. E. states, his "spiritual enjoyment was a good deal more than ordinary," and he adds, "we had a very pleasant communion season." Why brother, those two quarterly meetings were so good, perhaps the third and fourth would have been better still.

In regard to the "almost universal dissatisfaction," alluded to, Br. E. thinks the statement is not correct, for he had ascertained that five classes out of nine had no objections to his return for a second year, and that many had a strong desire for his return. He furthermore thinks that the Circuit never had a preacher they loved very well—that all the preachers that have been there (naming several) have got their moral or ministerial character, if not both, stained, before they got away. These, he states, "have all passed off, and are gone, but a poor Elliott, who is here yet, to have all the blame attached to him." Not so fast, brother. You too, shall go with whole bones. We'll not allow another hard word to be said about you if we can help it. And we bid you, fine sailing in that new vessel.

We are gratified that Br. E. seems very good natured in his communication, and acknowledges that he has been well used by the Meth. Prot. Church.

Question Answered.

Some of our M. P. readers will recollect, that in the publication in our paper a few weeks ago, of a letter from Br. G. M. S., of Columbia Circuit, a P. S. was appended propounding to the President a question for solution. We should have given some attention to the question, but that it was addressed to that functionary, and we presumed he would respond. He has not seen proper to do so. We therefore take the following article from the Boston Olive Branch, in which it will be seen, one of the editors of that paper does up the problem in quite a pointed style, and we think, very correctly. But we are not apprised of the President's views.

Church Records.—Church membership is a sacred privilege, and those who enjoy it, and wish to retain it, ought not to be deprived thereof, except on conviction, at a proper tribunal, of some offence which, by the laws of the church, renders them improper persons to be continued in fellowship. And every member's name should be duly recorded on the church's books, as a security to his rights. We were not a little surprised, therefore, to see the following question proposed by a correspondent of the Western Recorder:

'Where a class is in a confused state, so that it can scarcely be told who is on the Lord's side and who is not, would there be any impropriety in it, or would it be a violation of discipline, to commit the class-book to the flames, and organize another?'

One would suppose from this question, that the only record of the church-membership of those belonging to such a class, was the class-book itself. And if so, there would certainly be an impropriety and a breach of discipline in committing it to the flames; for, according to the 'discipline,' no member can be deprived of membership, except by due trial and conviction of fault.

Every member's name should be recorded on the church-books; as well as on the class-books: and if so, burning the class-book would not in the least affect his membership, and could be of no use in settling difficulties. The preachers, stewards and leaders should see that things never get into such a state of confusion that it cannot be told 'who is on the Lord's side.' But if by neglect of the proper officers of the church, things have attained a bad state, proper measures, in accordance with the rules of the Disdipline, should be be taken at once to see every thing put right. It may require some labor and patience; but it should be done. But we have no faith in burning class-books. Let things be commenced right and continued so, and it will be easy to determine who is on the Lord's side.

The question proposed in the Recorder was not to us; but we have had reason to know that others were liable to fall into the same error. And we speak for those who are concerned.

Philadelphia Conference.—We are indebted to Br. W. S. Stockton for copies of the Minutes of the first three Sessions of this Conferenne, a very neat pamplet of 24 pages. J. T. Ward was received at the last session by transfer from the Maryland Conference, and J. H. Nichols from the N. J. Conference. T. H. Stockton was transferred to the Ohio Ann. Conference, and W. T. Eva to the Md. An. Conference; two churches were recieved, one at Reading Pa,, and one in Kensington. There are five houses of worship in the District, and three more are in contemplation, to be erected in the ensuing year. We are gratified to learn of the seeming promise of this infant Conference.

General Conference, M. E. Church.

This important body of Ministers convened in the Liberty Street Church, Pittsburgh, on Monday, 1st instant, and was called to order by Bishop Hedding. Religious exercises were conducted by bishops Hedding, Waugh, and Morris, after which the names of Delegates were called, 134 being present. J. M. Trimble, of Ohio, was elected Secretary, on the second balloting, and two assistant Secretaries were also chosen.—Bishop Hedding then delivered a short address, in which he stated that this was now the eleventh General Conferenee since he had been engaged in the ministry. He manifested much emotion in referring to the facts that the members of previous General Conferences had mostly passed away, and that he must soon go; that heretofore he was a junior, and had some one to go before him, but now he was the senior of his colleagues, and took the lead according to usage. Rules of order were agreed upon, and standing committees ordered.

Tuesday, May 2.

Bishop Morris presided. Various memorials were presented and acted on. One of these was from a church in St. Louis, asking relief, and expressing its determination not to adhere to the church, South. A like memorial was also presented from an African M. E. Church in St. Louis, seven members only of which adhered south, and their house of worship was given to the 7. Dr. Green, a Delegate from Canada was introduced, and took a seat upon the platform. Bishop Hedding, in behalf of himself and Bishop Janes requested an examination into an act of their administration during last year, the propriety of which had been called in question. The case of J. N. Maffit, is believed to be referred to.—The case was referred to committee on Episcopacy, as requested.

Wednesday, 3.

Bishop Hamline presided. Dr. Dickson, Delegate from the British Conference appeared today. Likewise Dr. Pierce, Delegate from the M. E. Church, South.

Thursday, 4.

Bishop Janes presided. The appeal of J. C. Green, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was presented. The Annual Report of the Book Agents was read and referred. A great number of memorials and other documents were presented.

Friday 5.

Bishop Hedding presided. The Episcopacy made recommendation that a Delegate Conference be established, consisting of one Delegate from each Annual Conference, to receive and try appeals. Almost the entire session was occupied with the consideration of the report of a committee, which was finally adopted as follows:

Whereas, a letter from Rev. L. Pierce, D. D., delegate of the Methodist E. Church South, proposing fraternal relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the M. E. Church South, has been presented to this Conference, and whereas there are serious questions and difficulties existing between the two bodies; therefore,

Resolved, That while we tender to the Rev. Dr. Pierce all personal courtesies, and invite him to attend our sessions, this General Conference does not consider it proper, at present, to enter into fraternal relations with the Methodist E. Church South.

(Signed) G. Peck, Ch'n.

The following amendment offered by Doctor Tomlinson, as also adopted:

Provided, however, that nothing in this resolution shall be so construed as to operate as a bar to any propositions from Dr. Pierce, or any other representative of the Meth. E. Church South, towards the settlement of existing difficulities between that body and this.

Christian Wreath.—We have received the May number of this excellent Monthly. It contains a beautiful mezzotint, representing the Dying Hour. The "Wreath" is a work which we can conscientiously recommend, as at once handsome, good and cheap. It discards chaffy, light reading, and chooses the substantial and instructive, though not failing to make itself entertaining. Published by J. Van Court, Philadelphia, $1 per year.

Sears' Magazine.—The May number is received. It contains a portrait of John Winthrop, founder of the city of Boston and first Governor of Massachusetts. Also several views of oriental cities and mountain scenery; Jerusalem, Mounts Ebal, and Gerizim, Mt. Camel, Nazereth, Promontary of Mt. Carmel; likewise, views in Switzerland and Russia. The number is interesting and instructive, containing various historical and descriptive articles, and others in Natural History and Natural Science. R. Sears, Publisher, N. York. $2 per annum, in advance.

Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati Railroad.—We are informed by one of the Directors that this road is making fair headway, that six miles of it is under contract, and a good portion of it graded; that two companies of engineers are re-surveying the balances of the line, shortening distances and lessening grades; that two routes one east and one west, are being surveyed, both of which show less of curvature and elevation than any other roads in the United States; that the one will be selected which can be built cheapest, and on which the greatest amount of subscription can be obtained. The citizens of Columbus are holding meetings preparatory to commencing operations on the other end of this road.

The Columbus and Xenia Railroad, which is the connecting link between this road and Cincinnati, is to be completed forthwith.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Unmitigated Scoundrelism.—During Wednesday night some villains fastened a couple of chesnut rails across the track of the Peterbero' and Shirly Railroad at Townsend, Mass., a short distance apart, for the purpose of throwing off the morning passenger train. A gravel train, however, was first upon the road, with the cars in front of the engine, and the whole were smashed to pieces. The ruins formed a pile 20 feet high. Two brakemen were killed, and several others injured.

Phalanx Broken Up.—A correspondent of a Boston paper announces that the "Northampton Association of Industry" was abandoned under the pressure of a debt of forty thousand dollars, and that Hopedale has relinquished the community principle, and goes upon the individual plan.

Philadelphia, May 1, P. M.

Fatal Railroad Accident.—An accident occurred this morning on the Reading Railroad, some distance from Philadelphia, caused by the boiler of the locomotive exploding. The accident occurred at a place on the road where a party of workmen were employed laying sills and making other repairs. The chief engineer, Mr. Nagle, and the foremen, Mr. Christopher Gaffney, were both instantly killed, their bodies being terribly mangled by the concussion. Four others, near at the time, were unfortunately very badly wounded, some of whom it is feared will not recover. The cause of the explosion is not explained, but is supposed to have resulted from a sudden interruption which the locomotive met with in passing over the track.—Baltimore Sun.

Utica, May 1, 1848.

A collision took place yesterday, on the Utica and Schenectady Railroad, one mile west of Herkimer. The up freight train, and the down passenger train, both at full speed, came in contact, and the violence of the concussion was so great, as to cause the destruction of both engines. Two men were killed, and two others mortally wounded.—Baltimore Sun.

Later.—We announced by telegraph on Tuesday, that a fearful collision of trains occurred on the Utica railroad, at a point a mile and a quarter west of Herkimer, on Sunday, at 1 o'clock, P. M.

The down train was running at a moderate speed, the up freight train heavily laden was dashing forward with unprecedented violence. It encountered the passenger train with such force as to uplift the engine and throw it completely on its back, crushing the tender and baggage wagon, and lifting the latter on end so as to let it fall over the telegraph wires, knocking them down.—One of the passenger cars was crushed by the one before, which came half way into it.

Mr. Wm. Smith, of Herkimer, and Mr. Welsh, of Utica, were instantly killed. One of them had his face and head crushed, and the other had both legs taken off. Mr. Bennett, of Albany, had both legs broken at the thigh, and there is but little hope of his recovery. Mr. Smith, of Jefferson, had both legs broken. Mr. Crittenden was in the baggage car, and had his head cut in two or three places, and was scalded by the water from the engine which was thrown back.

The escape of the passengers in the cars is inexplicable to them. Though the cars were crushed into each other, no one of the passengers inside was seriously hurt—only those standing on the platform or otherwise exposed.

Accident.—Mr. Isaiah D. Swallow, of Templeton was grinding an axe on a stone run by water, and the belt slipping off, he tried to adjust it, but it caught him by the feet, drawing them out from under him so quick, that his brains were dashed out upon the floor. A man in the mill had just cautioned him to take care of the belt, and but an instant elapsed before he was dead. Mr. S. has left a wife and one child.

A Long Train.—A merchandise train of 113 cars came down over the Northern Railroad on Monday last, fifty of them loaded with splendid and valuable mast timber from the Shaker settlement at Enfield. Some of the masts were over 109 feet in length. On the Saturday preceding, a considerable amount of the same timber went down, the freight upon which we are told was nearly $500.—Concord Democrat.

A Fearful Conflict and Loss of Life.—The Liverpool Albion of a late date, says:

"By the arrival of the Sidney mail we are informed of a most severe battle having taken place on the 4th of September, at the Freejee Islands, between the chiefs and the people of Albau and Rena, in which the latter were defeated, but escaped with a number of their adherents to Juva harbor, about seven miles west of Rena Roads, where they intended to settle, all the habitations of Rena being burnt to the ground by the chiefs of Albau. The number of slain on both sides amounted to upwards of eight hundred, the bodies of whom still remained exposed there. Fortunately for the missionsries, the scene of warfare occurred at some distance from their location."

Fatal Accident at the Broadway Theatre.

On Saturday evening, just before the commencement of the play at the Broadway Theatre one of the curtains caught fire, and in the confusion of extinguishing it, Mr. Samuel Pray, the Assistant Gas Engineer, lost his life. Several persons were on the stage at the time, and they all escaped, as it were, by miracle. The first appearance of the fire was noticed about the middle of the act-drop. It spread rapidly to the ropes, which burnt off and the drop fell upon the stage. Mr. Pray was in the Gas house when the alarm was given. He rushed on the stage, and throwing off his coat, seized upon the large Brussels carpet, and was smothering the still burning act-drop with it when the drop-curtain was cut loose (with the intention of preventing the fire from spreading into the auditorium) and the barrel or roller struck the back of his head, shattering the skull terribly. He partly raised himself and fell backwards against Colonel Mann—his last and only movement. It was thought that life was not extinct, however, until sometime after he had been taken to the hospital. Mr. Pray was a very worthy, hard-working man, and has left a wife and six children, who were entirely dependant upon his daily labor for support. Mr. Pray was foreman for Mr. Driggs, and superintended the erection of the gas apparatus in our building. He and Mr. D. had only been gone from our office about twenty minutes when the accident occurred.—N. Y. Sun.

State of Paris.—Mons. Vattemare, now in Washington, has received the following letter from his wife in Paris:

Paris, March 20, '48.

My Dear Husband: Paris is very quiet, and we are calmly looking towards the elections.—Were it not for the present financial crisis, nothing would be perceivable; but money is extremely difficult to procure, and it is with great difficulty you can get change for a bank-note.

The deficit left in the public treasury by the late government is considerable, and, had it been suffered to remain another year under Guizot's administration, France would have been forced to repudiate her debt; but, happily, God did not permit, and we must now hope that with time confidence will be restored, and then all will be better than ever. The people continue to behave admirably well, and ask nothing but peace, tranquility and work. You see, my dear, that every thing is safe, and that you have no reason to torment yourself as you did in the time of the revolution of July. Remember that Paris is just as you left it, with the exception that now we are Republicans, and therefore proud to be more entirely united to the Americans.

Mary Vattemare.

Another Fatal Railroad Accident.—Two Men Killed.—The following telegraphic communication to the Albany Evening Journal, announces another fatal railroad accident:

Rochester, May 1—10 A. M.

We are pained to announce another horrible railroad accident, which occurred on the road between this city and Buffalo, this morning about 4 o'clock. The eastern train of cars which left this city about 3 o'clock for the west, ran off the track near Bergen, killing Jerry Guile, the engineer, and Harvey Backus, fireman, of the train. Several of the train were seriously if not fatally injured.

A Magnificent Donation.—We record with sincere gratification a donation by a citizen of Washington to the city of Georgetown, (the place of his birth,) for purposes truly rational, liberal and beneficent.

A message was transmitted (on Friday last,) by the Mayor to the Boards of Aldermen and Common Council of the city of Georgetown enclosing a communication from the counsel of Wm. Corcoran, Esq., transmitting an instrument of donation by Mr. Corcoran of $10,000, to be held in trust by the Corporation of Georgetown for the benefit of the poor of his native town.

From the Georgetown Advocate we learn this sum is to be invested so that the interest upon it be applied to two very worthy objects—the annual purchase, at summer prices, of wood to be distributed in winter to the poor of the town; and the other half to the benefit of the Orphan Asylum of the town.

A Crisis in Ireland.—The European Times, received by the last steamer, says:

"The repeal movement has reached a crisis which it must be confessed it has never hitherto attained; a perusal of the Irish intelligence in our paper of to-day will bear us in the assertion, that the present posture of affairs in that country is most complicated and perilous, and that no lengthened period can elapse before the English government and the majority of the Irish people will have joined issue on the subject of repeal."

☞The Boston papers announce the death of Mrs. Julia Webster Appleton, wife of Samuel Appleton, Esq., and only daughter of Hon. Daniel Webster.

Submerged Telegraphic Wires.—The hitherto inability to send the electric fluid across telegraphic wires when submerged, has been triumphed over by J. J. Cravens, who has discovered a mode and applied it with perfect success at the crossing of the Passaic River, on the New York and Philadelphia line. He is also about to apply it to crossing the Hudson from Jersey city to New York.

Cannibalism in Ireland.—At the late Galway Assizes, a man named John Connelly plead guilty to a charge of sheep-stealing. The self-convicted criminal was sentenced to three month's imprisonment and hard labor. Mr. Dopping, the resident magistrate, stated in open court that he knew, of his own knowledge, that the prisoner and his family were starving when the offence was committed—that one of his children had died; and he had been credibly informed that the mother ate part of its feet and legs after its death! He had the body exhumed and its appearance corroborated the information fully.

More Fires.—The barn of Mr. Joseph Parsons, in Baltimore county, 3 miles from Baltimore, on the Falls road, was destroyed by fire on Saturday morning last, about 2 o'clock. Six horses, together with quantities of grain and provender were consumed—loss estimated at $1,000—no insurance. About half an hour afterwards, the dwelling house of Mrs. Mary Mane, one and a half miles from town, on the same road, was found to be on fire; it was, with its contents, entirely destroyed. This destruction of property was undoubtedly the work of incendiaries, who are prowling about the outskirts of the city, wantonly setting fire to buildings at every opportunity, in order to entice the fire companies from town for the purpose of getting up fights and destroying apparatus.

Nature teaches us that we are dependent—that we are like cog-wheels, pushing each other along by filling up mutual voids.

Anti-Slavery Feeling at the Capitol.

The Capitol, after a week of great excitement, growing out of the abduction of slaves, has subsided into its usual quiet. There is, however, great feeling in the community, and it has been fanned by the debates in the two Houses of Congress. Some of the Southern Members seem much more enraged than the people whose slaves were carried off, and a good deal has been said of hanging lynch law, &c. But happily there has been nothing of this, and to the credit of the city, in spite of all their fury and foam, threatenings in and out of Congress, there has been nothing worse than large assemblies and fierce threats. The Paesident, I am assured has done his duty, and I take great pleasure in saying so. Hearing that some of the 'Southern bloods,' in the Departments, were for raising a storm and riot, he ordered them, and all in the public service to desist, upon pain of dismission. The city authorities seasonably interposed and after three nights, each more boisterous than the last, quiet was restored. For the credit of the seat of Government, I rejoice at this auspicious result, A free press may speak against the institution of Slavery here at the seat of Government, and before Congress, and all the assembled powers of the nation.

Alas, for the poor runaway slaves! Fifty of the eighty taken away have been sold and carried off to Georgia, by one of those traffickers in human flesh, who grow rich by buying and selling negroes. It was these slave dealers, indeed who attempted to instigate a mob to destroy the New Era Office. There are a good many of them here, and in the neighborhood, and you may see them scent men about the negroe sales, as the vultures follow in the wake of retreating armies, to feed on the flesh and blood of dying men. It is disreputable to the General Government that S avery exists in the District of Columbia at all. It is still more discreditable that the slave trade is tolerated here at all, and positively disgraceful that any free negroe is liable to be caught up by any harpy, and put in prison, upon the bare suspicion of being a slave. If he can prove his freedom it is well, tho' every possible obstruction is often thrown in the way of his doing this. If he cannot, why then he is sold into slavery to pay his jail fees, and such practices are not uncommon at the seat of Government!

It is said that the eighty slaves, whose abduction has caused all this excitement, were taken away rather by Kidnappers than Abolitionists.—The guilty persons had exacted the money from each, and might have designed any thing but their release. Many wish, heartily, that all these slaves were free, but none sympause with the clandestine and ridiculous attempt to set them free by deception and delusion.

Sons of Temperance.—The Vicksburg Sentinel says that the increase of divisions of the Order of the Sons of Temperance in Mississippi is unparallelled. They are being organised in all parts of State.

"I promise your Honor, if you will pass a light sentence on me, I will reform and become an honest man," said a criminal, who had been convicted of theft. The promise made an impression on the Judge, and passed as light a sentence as possible. "May the hangman choked me, but that Judge is a fine old fellow! I must send him something!" exclaimed the criminal as he left the court; and behold, the next day the Judge received from an unknown hand a valuable gold watch, of which he had been robbed two years before.

Drowned.—A Frenchman named Thiebaud Cordonneir, who came aboard as a deck passenger, at Lousville, on the 22d ult., and entered for Pittsburgh, was drowned on Sunday morning, the 23d, off the steamer Eureka, a little above Patriot, Ind., in attempting to draw a bucket of water. Deceased was a heavy set man, and probably 38 years of age. From the direction on his trunk, he seems to have come into this country via New Orleans. His trunk will be retained until some reliable information can be had of him. In the mean time, any communication respecting him may be addressed to the boat, care Mr. Jas. Graham, No. 116 Liberty street, Pittsburgh.

On opening his trunk, it was found to contain his passport, dated at Bretton, on the Upper Rhine in 1847, giving his name, size, age, color of hair eyes, &c., to the most minute particlars. His trunk also contained 92 fivefranc pieces, 2 American half dollars, a small gold cylinder escapement l'epine watch, with gold chain and key, and a quantity of excelent clothing. The body of the unfortunate stranger had not been recovered.

Revolutions & Railroads.—The intended insurrection in Belgium was defeated by the arrangements upon the railroad. Several thousand Belgians and Frenchmen left Paris to raise the standard of insurrection. A conductor of the railroad train, with anti-revolutionary propensities, instead of stopping at Valenciennes, the last town on the French territory, from which the invading legion was to march on foot into Belgium, proceeded directly into Guievrain, notwithstanding the cries of the legion. On the arrival of the train at Valencennes, where the French engines as usual, approached, and was attached to the train. The train was in the act of moving on, when the alarm was given by some one in the station that the whole party was betrayed. About one hundred immediately jumped off the carriages; but the engineer, having had instructions, proceeded at the top of his speed across the frontiers, and did not stop until he and his cargo safely arrived at Guievrain.—The train ran directly into the Guievrain station. Here were drawn up a body of troops and 12,000 peasants who surrounded the invaders and took tde whole detachment prisoners. Several other detachments entered Brussels. Some retired on learning the fate of their comrades. One met the military, and after fighting with gallantry for a while, were assailed with "a little more grape" from the artillery, when they fled, leaving about four hundred of their number behind in killed and wounded.

The Steamship Washington which left New York on Thursday morning for Northampton and Bremen, returned on Saturday afternoon, on account of an accident which occurred to a portion of her machinery. She was piloted back by Captain Yates, of the Jacob Bell steamer. On the morning after leaving New York a loud thundering noise was heard in the larboard cylinder. The engineer stopped the engines, and on examination found that a crack, four inches long, had taken place in the piston. After mature consultation it was deemed unwise to proceed on the voyage out. The ship was 156 miles at sea when Captain Johnson prudently resolved to return.—N. Y. Sun.

Terrible Explosion and Loss of Life!

At ten o'clock yesterday morning, the Fire Works Manufactory of Mr. Claudius C. Williams, on Vine street, above Fifth, was blown up and afterwards consumed by fire! The report of the explosion was heard in every part of the city, and had the effect of an earthquake in the immediate vicinity—jarring buildings and even breaking windows, and scattering fragments in all directions. The roof of the house was blown off, and the eastern wall cast into the yard adjoining. Almost instantaneous with the explosion, the wreck of the building was enveloped in flame, and despite the daring and almost superhuman efforts of the fireman, was destroyed down to the second story. The firemen approached in an almost incredibly short space of time, and notwithstanding the cry of "powder in the cellar" was raised, and drove the spectators off, they walked up to the flame, and fearlessly fought it down, heedless of the appalling warning cry which sent terror to all hearts save their own.

The most terrible part of the tale is to be told. There were several persons in the building at the time—two of whom lost their lives, while others were injured. The following personal details, we have reason to believe, are correct:—

John McClum, an apprentice to Mr. Williams, was engaged in making rockets, and immediately after the explosion, his clothes blazing, and his face blackened and burned, leaped from the third story window, in the rear of the building. He was carried into a store on Fifth street, and after surgical attention, was conveyed to the Hospital, where he died in a few hours, in the greatest torment.

Henry Solomon, a young man from Lexington Kentucky, who was in the house awaiting the return of Mr. Williams, was killed on the spot.—His body—the head and arms burned off, and a blackend cinder,—was found upon the stairway, in the second story, after the flames had been subdued.

A son of Mr. R. A. Madison, who had stepped into the alley on his way to market, was buried by the falling wall, and dangerously injured, his head and face being mangled.

Mrs. Williams, had an ankle broken, and was otherwise injured by leaping from the second story window.

Miss Merrill, a sister-in-law of Mr. Williams was also injured by jumping from the same window.

Mr. William's loss is estimated at $2,500, on which, of course, he has no relief in insurance.—He was preparing for the grand display for the benefit of the Mechanics' Institute. Messrs, Seybold and Wilson, each occupying stores below, lost considerable by water.— Cincinnati Commercial.

Destructie Fire in Philadelphia.—On Sunday morning, about half-past 12 o'clock, a most destructive fire broke out in the carpenter shop occupied by Joseph Connelly, in the rear of Bonsall street, between Ninth and Tenth, and Lombard and South streets, Philadelphia, which soon spread to two or three other frame buildings, occupied by Michael Porter, carpenter, and Captain Sherman. These, with the entire contents, consisting of a large quantity of worked lumber, and the tools of some dozen journeymen carpenters, were entirely destroyed. The fire next communicated to the following five two story brick dwelling houses on Bonsall street:—1, 3, 5, 9, and 11, occupied by John Spellman, painter; Joseph Smith, George Fite, tobacconist; Wm. Tooley, and Thomas Poole, which were all more or less damaged, the occupants suffering to a considerable extent in the injury done their furniture, &c.

Five small three-story brick dwellings, in Jos. Govitt's court, occupied by John Patterson, plasterer, Margaret Arnett, Thomas Tooley, and David White, gardener, were also entirely destroyed, the poor tenants narrowly escaping with their lives, losing all their clothing and household property. The back buildings of 6 dwelling-houses belonging to "Jefferson Row," on Lombard st., from 6 to 11, occupied by Geo. Helmuth, clerk; Frederick Hoyt, tailor; Jno. McAuthur, builder; Bernard Sharky, clerk; David Miller, and John Austin, were much burned, except the latter, which was only slightly injured. The total loss of property will probably exceed $10,000.—Mr. Connelly's loss, it is said, will reach $2,000, while Mr. Porter's is also equally heavy. Messrs. Smith, Tooley, Fite, and Poole, will probably suffer to the extent of $100 each. The carpenter shop, occupied by Mr. Connelly, and 1, 3, and 5, Bonsall street, were owned by Robert Govitt. The shop occupied by Mr. Porter, and dwellings 5 and 11, with the entire court, were owned by Jos. Govitt, both of whom are partly insured. The fire was unquestionably the work of an incendiary.

Summary Process.—Since the killing of Davis, in Charleston, Ind., the citizens held a meeting and passed a resolution requesting the keeper of the grocery, where the murder was committed, to refrain from the further sale of liquor. The citizens then entered the grocery, took the liquor into the street, and emptied it on the gound agreeing to pay all damages to the vender. They then passed a series of resolutions declaring that thereafter no liquor should be sold within the limits of the town.—Cin. Com.

Banks.

The Susquehanna Bank seems to have recovered its former standing, and so far as we can learn, is going on prosperously, although its notes are at a discount of 2a2¼ per cent.

The Mineral Bank, Md., has also made such arrangements as to enable it to resume its business. We quote its notes at present at 2 per ct. discount.

Erie Bank.—The notes of this institution are at present at a discount of 5 per cent in this city. The cause assigned for this depreciation is said to be the large amount recently brought here and paid out by the country merchants.

The Bank of Wooster, Ohio; the Bank of Lewistown, Pa,; and the N. Hope & Delaware Brdge Co., N., J., are still down, and likely to remain so for some time, if not forever.

Within the last week or two, we have noticed a great many of the small notes of the Belvidere (N. J.) Bank, in circulation in this city. Indeed after the relief notes, these and the notes of the Commercial Bank of Perth Amboy, N. J. seem to form a goodly portion of our city paper currency.—Van Court's Philadelphia Counterfeit Detector for May.

The law forbidding the sale of a less quantity of liquor than 28 gallons, has passed Massachusetts Legislature.

COUNTERFEIT COIN.

The public are cautioned against $2,50 pieces counterfeit gold coin. Also, five and ten dollar pieces, which have become very plenty. Some of the 5s are dated in 1843, and tolerably well done, but light in weight. The $2,50 pieces are made of white metal, probably of silver, and galvanized. Well executed, and calculated to deceive. There are also spurious $10 gold pieces, dated in 1840. It is said they can be detected by the ringing.—There are also counterfeit sovereigns, very difficult to detect, dated 1824, of full weight and good color—worth about $4,25. The genuine is worth $4,83.

Look out for counterfeit Spanish Dollars, which are in circulation. A little care will detect them, as well from their appearance as their sound.

Counterfeit Mexican Dollars, dated 1844. They are difficult of detection by sight, but they have a somewhat greasy feel, and a bad sound when two or three are jingled together.

Also, counterfeit American Dollars, Halves and Quarters. The Dollars purport to the coinage of 1843, so admirhbly executed as to be with difficulty detected, even by a close comparison with a genuine coin of the same date. The die appears to be a perfect fac simile of the original, but there is a slight difference between the color and polish of the metal, and those of the genuine silver; the spurious money being a little bluer in tint, and more glossy in appearance. The Halves are dated 1838, the face of Liberty well done, reverse not so well. Lighter in weight than the genuine. Also, Halves, Quarters, and Ten Cent pieces, made of pewter, are in circulation.—Van Court's Count. Detector.

Destructive Fire.—A fire broke out on Saturday morning, in the confectionary and awning establishment of Mr. Nicholas Morris, southwest corner of Sixth and Race streets. The fire was doubtless the work of an incendiary, as evidences of both burglary and arson, were apparent on the premises. The corner door showed the marks of an 'ousider,' and some matches were found upon one of the sills. The villians made entrance into the kitchen, by taking a panel from the shutter, and there set fire to the premises. There being no fire-walls in the block, and the garret extending to the entire length of the same, the flames spread with great rapidity, and either destroyed or injured six tenements.

M. N. Morris, had his entire stock of goods and house-hold furniture, together with about $400 in bank notes, destroyed;—entire loss $1,500;—no insurance.

The buildings belonged to Mr. S. Langdon, and were partially insured.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Arrival and Departure of Trains at Boston.—Nineteen passengers and three freight trains leave the Worcester Railroad Depot daily, and as many arrive, making in all, forty four trains.

Recently five young Irish women, on their way to Honesville, Pensylvaina, were on presenting their railroad fare, found to have been imposed upon by some scoundrel, who had passed off upon them $15 of counterfeit money. It was every farthing they had; and they were about being left, when a company of Sullivan county lumbermen interposed, and generously contributed $15 of good money to the unfortunate strangers. Such evidence of true nobility is highly creditable to the noble hearted backwoodsmen.

Mrs. Sarah Day, late of Clinton county Ohio, died yesterday morning, on Western Row, above Seventh, very suddenly. She was sick but one hour—disease enlargement of the heart—Cin. Com.

The extensive flouring mill and steam distillery, four miles north of Springfield, Ill., owned by John A. Keedy, was destroyed by fire on the 21st inst. Loss estimated at $20,000. Had the distillers alone been destroyed, community would not have suffered any loss.

Cautious indeed should we be of unkindness, since the thing trodden on to-day, may be to-morroy in a condition to crush ourselves.

Br. J. Scott, you overpaid us 25 cents on the lot of pamphlets. You must make this off from us soon as you have any chance.

Br V Lucas, we are sorry that we cannot furnish now the books you ask for. When we receive another supply, we will try and remember you.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encourging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	17
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chaneyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	5

Rev. T. Finkbine, Cincinnati, O.,	7
Rev. W. G. Fowler, Paintersville, O.	6.
Rev. V. Lucas, Johnstown, Pa.,	5
Rev. W. Hatfield, Alum Creek, O.	5

☞We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

This law declares that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite,, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

Journeyman Tailor Wanted.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

Fourth Volume of the American Pulpit.

The American Pulpit is a Monthly Magazine, published in the city of Worcester, Massachusetts. It contains thirty-two pages in each number, and will be well supplied with that kind of Literature which is adapted to Ministers and Theological Students, such as Sermons, Sketches, Essays, Biographies, &c. &c.

The leading Sermon, will be of the highest order; and all the Sermons, we intend, shall bear the stamp of superiority. They will be sought, and obtained, so far as it is possible, from the most eminent Divines, on the American Continent. Arrangements are already made to accomplish this end; and no reasonable pains or expense will be spared, to make this department of the Pulpit superior to anything of the kind in existence.

The Sketches will be of the first class. We have accepted the proposals of an eminent minister in England to supply this department, partially—the Rev J Burns, D D, of London, author of "Pulpit Cyclopedia;" &c &c. By securing the correspondence of Dr Burns, the patrons of the Pulpit will enjoy a fine opportunity of comparing British and American talent in the same pages.

In the Miscellaneous Department will be found, Essays, Biographical Sketches, Poetry, and such et ceteras as shall enhance the value of the work.

The Pulpit is edited by

REV J D BRIDGE,

who will spare no pains to render it not only a welcome visiter to the Minister's study, but a 'profitable' one.—The work is evangelical in its character, and will avoid all controversy, except with sin and the popular errors of the day.

Its patrons, hitherto, have been gathered from all of the orthodox denominations in the country, all of whom the Publisher hopes to return. And we wish it distinctly understood, that Ministers in all the evangelical denominations are invited to become contributors to the pages of the Pulpit. We solicit from them, Sermons, Sketches of Sermons, or Criticisms, on any subject within the compass of Homiletics; and, that no one may feel embarrased in his desire to accept this invitation, we shall dispense with the "List of Contributors" which has formerly appeared on our cover. We do this not out of any disrespect to any of the worthy names in that List, but that others may not be deterred from contributing, because not numbered in the distinguished catalogue.

By far the largest amount of matter contained in the Pulpit will be 'original;' but it will also be enriched by choice 'selections' from Books and periodicals.

Terms--One Dollar Per Annum, in Advance.

The Pulpit will be mailed regularly during the latter part of the month preceding that of its publication, so that it may reach its destination, in ordinary cases, by the first of each month.

We solicit Agents for the work. We will allow them a reasonable and just compensation for their services, and we authorize all the ministers of every evangelical denomination, and all laymen who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and who desire the extension of his kingdom on earth, to co-operate with us in extenhing the circulation of this work.

All orders for the work and all remittances for the same should be addressed to

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less

POET'S CORNER.

From the Greenville Journal.

A LAY FOR THE TIMES:

Across the eastern Ocean,
Along its bounden shore—
A voice, a voice is ringing,
And deep'ning to a roar:
'Tis sounding through the mountains,
Adown the rolling Rhine;
'Tis echoed in the valleys,
From Alp to Appenine.

'Tis waking from their slumbers,
The men of iron hand:
Who give it their first welcome,
From this, a chainless (?) land;
Through earldoms and through princedoms,
To count and peasant son;
Through dukedoms and through kingdoms,
It still keeps ringing on.

'Tis heard among the people,
From cot to castled tower;
Who rise like mighty spirits,
Saying, this is now the hour;
As when the Roman Commons,
Cried out in majesty:
"Tribunes; we will have tribunes,"
Or farewell liberty.

No heroine of Corday,
No spirit need arise,—
To strike at other Marat,
In bloody sacrifice:
For France unfurls her banners,
And listens to the voice;
Which sounding through Switzerland,
Bids every hill rejoice.

The serfs of Russia hear it,
And wait with anxious eye—
The coming that is glorious,
Which looms upon the sky;
'Tis booming on and onward,
Even to yon southern clime;
Yea southern hearts are glowing,
With this new note of Time.

A blast from Freedom's trumpet,
Is thundering o'er the sea;
And nations to their monarchs,
Have said, we will be free.
This is the loud tone ringing;
A diapason roar—
Awaking slave and tyrant,
On European shore.

Then farewell to the Bourbon?
What boots a kingly frown?
Justice is fredom's sceptre,
Republics want no crown;
And farewell to the noble,
To heraldry, 'good bye;'
For equal rights are blazoned
On panelled coach for 'aye.' AMERICA.

Communications.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Restrictive Rule.

REPLY TO J. B. NO. IV.

The remaining premises, as stated by Br. Joseph, viz:—"the Restrictive Rule frequently proves detrimental to the interest of circuits and stations." Now we say for an individual to sustain this premises, in a logical manner, he must produce some argument to convince the mind that it is correct in itself, & this must be accomplished by analogical reasoning, or from experience, and if it is not done we must with every other individual who has mind to comprehend an argument pronounce it a failure. And as Br. Joseph has not attempted in but one case to offer an argument by way of analogy, and that was, the case of the government of the C. Presbyterian Church, and as for the weight of that argument we let our former communication answer,—and as for practical experience, which is the strongest argument that can be adduc in this case, it is all against him and in favor of of the restrictive principle; because "these men which have turned the world upside down," viz: the Methodist preachers, through the efficiency of our system have not only found way here but almost every where else in Christendom: hence we come to the positive conclusion that an active and moving ministry will accomplish more good, than a settled dronish one, such as the principles of the resolution require.

That the "Spirit of God" is essential to the spiritual welfare of the church no one will deny, but what has this to do with the matter under discussion? The question is not in regard to the benefits resulting from the operations of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts of the children of men, but rather it is in regard to the practicability, & the utility, of a system devised by human wisdom, in order that God's ministers may be coworkers with him, in the accomplishment of the greatest amount of good. If this be the question we can not see the necessity of Br. Joseph's bush whacking and drawing into the discussion matters which are irrelevant to the question.

'But days of miracles are past,' every child knows that, again "we must look for it in connexion with suitable, faithful and zealous efforts on the part of those engaged as co-workers with God." This is all right, and if there was more of the right kind of zeal and faith, amongst the ministers and members and less controversy and selfishness, the church would not be lingering along like a consumptive individual in a state of betweenity, neither dead nor alive. But we ask, does the restrictive principle in our constitution prevent a minister from being zealous, faithful, and humble? We answer it does not, but rather to the contrary, it has a tendency to stimulate them to good works, in the performance of their various duties as teachers, and in proof of this, what branch of the church has a more active and zealous ministry than that of the Methodist?

Now for the stale and thread-bare argument of Br. Joseph's, again, that is, that "certain removals present temptation to neglect that diligent application to study, which is necessary to make a minister a workman needing not to be ashamed:" this does appear to me to be as lame an argument, as any that could be offered against the salutary principle of restriction, as incorporated in our constitution. What! symply because a preacher knows he will not always have the same congregation to preach to, he becomes dronish, idle, and lazy, now the reverse of this is the truth of the case. Look around you, and if you want to find a minister of this cast you will not find him amongst the active itinerating class, but you will find him settled down as the pastor of some congregation, who crawls out perhaps once every Sabbath, and preaches a sermon as cold and dry as the north winds, and then takes another week's nap, and tries it again. For example we have a case in our mind of a minister who fed the same flock, for twenty-one years, and during this period he received into the church one for each year that he officiated as their pastor, a fruitful season this.

But upon the other hand, if you want to make a minister what he should be, intelligent, and useful, let him have every kind of a congregation to preach to, and it will tax his ingenuity, consequently develop his mental faculties and arouse his sleeping energies, give him an opportunity of seeing and hearing, by placing him in every community and amongst every grade in society, and he must soon acquire a store of practical knowledge, which at once, to a very great degree, qualifies him for the various dudies of his sacred office, and as it is an axiom with me, that it is opportunity and not nature that makes the difference in man; we maintain that our present system of removing ministers and preachers does in the nature of things place advantage in their possession, that under other circumstances they could not enjoy. For instance take some of our young men who has been raised in some secluded section of the country, and consequently has had no advantages and it matters not what his natural abilities are, they will never be brought to light without opportunity; and in order to carry out the example, we will place him on some of our back circuits, where perhaps there is not one of the standard works on divinity in the whole region of country, and owing to circumstances over which he had no control, he has not the means within himself to purchase, and under a system without restrictions, in this condition he might be continued for years, perhaps until the period for improvement may have gone by. But ah! say the friends of the resolution, the people will get tired of him and he will have to leave, but this is not very probable, as he may have moral worth and be as clear upon experimental religion as a sun-beam, and consequently this would be enough to give him a claim upon their confidence, and hence, may be continued in the same situation for years, and thus the very best natural abilities might remain undeveloped forever. But this state of things could never take place under our present system, as the individual would have to move, and each change would place new advantages and opportunities within his reach, and hence in a few years through the efficiency of the present system, the dwarf in acquirements will have grown to be a giant, and the church in the meantime will have lost nothing. We have said thus much to show you that the changing of ministers is not as likely to produce an idle—slothful—weak ministry as the system of settled pastorates as proposed by the resolution.

We would here like to notice another of Br. Joseph's arguments, and show you how he traps himself, and flies in the face of the Scriptures, hear him, "for to the churches is it said," 'all are yours, Paul, Apollos, and Cephas.' Well now Br. Joseph, why will not you and the friends of the restriction be willing to comply with the Scriptures, and let the church have the benefits of the labors of all her ministers, if not all at the same time, at least at different times? As the good book says, "all are yours,:" where is the reason or justice in saying that one congregation shall be confined to Paul's preaching exclusively, and never hear a word from Apollos or Cephas, but rather continue to operate under our present system, and change the ministers alternately, that the church may have the benefits of the preaching of all, whether Paul, Apollos or Cephas.

We cannot pass without noticing Br. Joseph's figure, it appears as though he has in these war times caught the war fever, and it has so operated upon his brain that he has concluded he holds the rank and commission of Captain, but unfortunately for him he is a poor tactician, from the fact that he wishes to enter into an engagement without "rule" or deception and defeat is always sure to overtake any officer who pursues a course of that kind, and in order to ensure success, any and every good officer enforces the most rigid "rule" and discipline. Again he objects to the changing of the position of the officers as injudicious, now this idea is wrong in a military point of view, and also in the light which Br. Joseph wishes to be understood, who does not know that it is the managing and manœuvreing of the officers and men, which constitutes General-ship and always leads to victory? We maintain that this is the very course which Methodism has always pursued, & the consequence is, that she has won more victories & accomplished a greater amount of good in the same length of time than any other branch of the church. In order to bring the figure to bear on the matter in controversy, we will suppose Captain Burns to be stationed with a portion of the army to defend a certain position, and owing to some cause the army at that point begins to give way and the enemy is about to make a break in the ranks, the Captain make ans effort to rally, but all in vain, the men continue to give way and unless something is done immediately, all is lost; the Annual Conference, the General-in-chief orders Capt.—to his assistance, and immediately the scale is turned and the victory is declared upon the side of Israel, such has ever been the result of our present mode of operation, and must forever continue to be, as long as officers & men continue to be faithful soldiers of Christ, the great Captain of our salvation.

"In answer to this call, we ask the history of any circuit or station," why this vague expression "any" why not give us a case at once directly to the point? We answer for the very best reason, because their is none upon record. 'If then it is contrary to Apostolic usage, not necessary to an efficient Itinerancy, and in many instances proves detrimental to the interests of circuits and stations; are not these considerations of sufficient moment to induce the church, as soon as possible to EXPUNGE it from the discipline.' This sentence is a fair example of all Br. Joseph's writings upon this subject, mere vague assertions, without the least argument to sustain them, and reckless expressions, such as "expunge" and contempt for wholesome and salutary principles of our constitution.

"Some no doubt, as heretofore, will raise the cry of alarm at the idea of commencing to find fault with our constitution and discipline." We answered this in part in a former number, by showing that no individual under any circumstances has a right to attempt the subversion of any government, but that they have the privilege of "consulting their own happiness," and leave the country or church, but says Br. Joseph, are not all the founders of our church revolutionists? no, the Episcopal government with the Bishop at its head remains as it was, our Fathers pursued the only legitimate course that was left them, and that was to consult their happiness, which they did and left the Episcopal tyrant standing unmolested.

"These fears and alarms should receive no more attention now," &c. We are not seriously alarmed, though we enter our protest against this fault finding spirit, and think it is little becoming the young brotherhood, "Josey" &c., and as for fire, we have none in the least, this reminds us of the fable, of the gnat and the bullock. The gnat alighted upon the horn of a bullock and said to him, if I weary thee I am about to fly away, to which the bullock replied, I did not know thee was there. You can make the application.

"But yet, it bears some marks of its having but a human origin." What an idea this, if Br. Joseph and some others should have the remodeling of this document, they would take from it humanity and error, and it would come forth a perfect instrument, as for our part we know we are fallible & consequently our acts must partake of our nature and forever have error enstamped upon their face.

"Or that the advocates of the rule present us with arguments fairly meeting and outweighing what has been, and may be presented against it," as for what may be presented, with regard to that, we have nothing to say, and how far we have succeeded in answering Br. Joseph's arguments we are willing an impartial public shall decide. FINIS.

"A BOY,"

ON THE RESTRICTIVE RULE CONTROVERSY.

HOLD! MR. EDITOR: Enough of the "Restrictive Rule" controversy.—What are the people about. First we have had Anti-slavery vs. Slavery; secondly; Anti-Sons of Temperance vs. Sons of Temperance; thirdly; the Anti-tobacco chewer's cause with all his anti-expectorant abhorrence; and now we have it hot-and-heavy, on the "Restrictive Rule," by writers who advocate its usefulness; and yet who do not know how to restriet their pens; and by "non-restricters," who certainly do not know how to exhibit much "restriction" in their articles. It would be well if one of the "restricters," could "restrict" his pen from dipping so very much into the spirit of wormwood and gall. The spirit that was manifested in the attack on a certain Secretary, and his last articles on the "Restrictive Rule," are not very fine manifestations of epistolary politeness, or of Christian love. Besides, he was not "a very old gentleman," when he engaged in the Episcopal controversy, and so nobly defended the principles of "Mutual Rights." We hope he will call to remembrance former days. I am afraid that he will cause his opponents to conclude that he is defending a poor cause when he exhibits so much extraordinary warmth and gigantic strength, in philliping a few raw and unfledged boys. O spare, spare the boys!—"What a fatal ca-tas-tro-phe it would be to send them to an untimely literary grave, or their memory to eternal fame?" I beseechingly implore, "spare the boys!" And for sake of peace save us from the unrestricted controversy.

Yours respectfully,

"A BOY,"
of the Ohio District.

P. S. "A Boy," is in favor of the "Restrictive Rule."

Monthly Concert in Four Languages.

A letter published in the Day Spring, dated Constantinople, January 4th, 1848, says: "Yesterday was the great Monthly Concert—the first Monday of the year, and a glorious day it was at Constantinople. Think of a great union prayer meeting, consisting of Armenians, Jews, Americans, English, Scotch, Germans, Catholics, and Grecks: and all sitting down at the table table of the Lord—Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Baptists, Methodists, Baptized Jews, and Protestant Armenians. The elements were distributed by a Jew, a German, and the two deacons of the Protestant Armenians. Prayers were offered in three languages—Turkish, English, and American. Remarks and exhortations were made in four languages—German, English, Armenian and Turkish. And hymns were sung to the same tune, and at the same moment, in three different languages—Armenian, German and English.

The first tune was Old Hundred, the same that will be sung in the Millennium; and the second was Martyn. There was no confusion, no discord. The harmony was perfect: while each with the spirit and the understanding, and with the greatest power and might was singing in his own tongue, wherein he was born, or with which he is now familiar, 'the high praises of our God.' The effect was overpowering. It was 'the voice of a great multitude,' redeemed out of many nations, kindreds and tongues; and it rose on high, like 'the sounds of many waters.' Our chapel was crowded with communicants—and our hearts were filled with emotions too big for utterance. Had Fisk and Parsons lived to see this day, like the aged Simeon, when his eyes had seen God's great salvation they would have bowed down their heads, and said with the greatest joy and thankfulness, 'Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.'"

Re-opening of an Ancient Marble Quarry.

The following interesting letter from Mr. Powers appeared a short time since in the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer.

Florence, Oct.2d, 1847.

My Dear Kellogg:—I have lately returned from a visit to a new marble quarry just opened in Maremma, about thirty-five miles from Leghorn; I say a new quarry, but it is a very old one having been worked in ancient times, possibly by the Etrurians. Judging from the great extent of the excavation they have made in the side of the mountain, vast quantities of marble must have been removed. The sides of the excavation are caved down quite level while the marks of the chisels & picks are distinctly visible. At a distance the cliff or ledge of rock appears like a natural formation, for Time has covered the surface with a black thin crust, very unlike marble in its appearance, but a blow from a chisel exposes the beautiful material underneath

This marble so closely resembles that of Paris that it is impossible to perceive the difference and I have no doubt that many of the statues and busts heretofore supposed to be made of Parian marble are actually of this very marble of the Maremma! if not what has become of the vast quanities taken out of these quarries?

Until within a few years the beautiful and picturesque region where this marble is situated is a wilderness; but it is known that in ancient times it was thickly populated. Remains of ancient buildings are still to be seen in the vallies and ruined castles crown the summits of the loftiest hills in the distance. Some of these hills are full of artificial caverns, excavated probably in search of copper and other minerals. One of these mines is within a few yards of the quarry; a very deep pit overgrown with briars and underwood, at the bottom of which is seen an opening, which leads to chambers and long passages, in various directions, to an immense extent. It is said to be a very interesting place, but I did not go down, for want of time. Some chissels and picks have been found there and at the quarry, which closely resemble those now in use! When you return we will visit this place at our leisure, for I am sure you will find it worth your while.

The sea is in sight of the quarry at about a mile distance, and so easy and even is the ascent we drove over the ground at full gallop. The road to the quarry from Leghorn is along the sea shore, and is a pleasant ride of only five or six hours. I intend to make the statue of Mr. Calhoun out of this marble, and it will, perhaps, be the first full sized statue made of it in two thousand years. I am now making a bust of Washington from this marble somewhat larger than life by way of experiment. It is nearly blocked out, and I am satisfied already, that the effect will be all that could be wished. It is singular that the owner of the quarry is a Greek, who has found the marble supposed to be peculiar to his own country here in Tuscany.

He can afford this marble for less than one-half the price of Carrara, on account of the great ease and small expense of excavating and taking it to the sea shore. The marble has a rich warm color, so desirable in statues and busts and it is most beautiful in columns—mantle pieces, and the like. The grain is coarse, like the Parian, but it works smoothly and takes a high polish. While looking at the new excavation, I was struck by the ancient and modern modes of doing the same thing. To my right arose the perpendicular uniform cutting of the ancient Etrurian pick-axe,—to the left appear fractures of the modern gun-powder—huge blocks scattered about, misshapen and indicating great waste of material, for by this way an immense quantity of marble is ruined. Still when we consider the mountain of it before us—enough to build nearly all the cities in Europe, we no longer think of this waste. But I could not avoid regret at seeing a mass of marble, some ten feet in length, and seven or eight in breadth, without a spot to mar its sparkling surface, shattered to pieces by a blast directly through the centre.

As ever, your friend,
HIRAM POWERS.

Truth Stranger than Fiction.

We have illustration of this apothegm too striking to be lost. Crossing the Hackensack bridge near Newark one day in the rail-road car, in company with governer D. of New Jersey, that gentleman observed that he had once witnessed a remarkable incident on that spot. He was in a stage-coach with some eight or nine passengers, male and female, and as they were crossing the bridge at this point, one of the former remarked that one evening thirty years before, he had been crossing the river at that very spot, in a stage-coach filled with passengers as now; that the bridge which then existed was a miserable rickety old stricture, ready to fall on the least provocation; that the waters of the river were at that time very much swollen in consequence of a sudden freshet; and that when the coach got about midway on the bridge, one of the supports gave way, precipitating all hands into the dark and rapid waters. After great ado, however, the passengers all reached the shore, with the exception of a little infant which had been swept from the mother's arms in the struggle, and which now seemed irrecoverably lost. The hearts of the passengers, however, were too deeply touched by grattitude for their own escape, and sympathy for the bereaved mother, to allow of their remaining inactive; and those of them accordingly who could swim, plunged again into the flood to make a thorough search for at least the lifeless body of their little compainion. The narrator himself was so fortunate as to grasp it by the clothes, at some distance from the place of the accident, and on taking it into the toll-house and instituting active measures for its recovery, it soon gladdened all hearts by opening its eyes and recognizing the face of the now overjoyed another. The gentleman narrated the little history with a smile of righteous satisfaction at the part he had played in it; but he had scarcely concluded, said Gov. D. before one of the ladies of our company begged him to excuse the liberty she was about to take, in asking him if his name were not Mr. So-and-so? "It is," replied the other. "Then," replied the lady, "I was the infant whom you rescued! My mother always remembered the name of the deliverer of her child, and taught the child also to remember it. But it is only now after an interval of thirty years from the time of the event, and here on the very spot where it occurred, that the child finds an opportunity of telling her deliver how faithfully that name has been cherished." So unexpected a denouement as this, said Gov. D. fills us all with the liveliest and most joyful surprise; and I am sure every one in the coach at the time will remember that journey as one of the most agreeable he ever made.—Evening Post.

DAILY MAIL.—We learn with much pleasure that the Post Office Department has accepted proposals for a daily (six times a week) mail service, on the route from Zanesville to Marietta. The service will commence in July next. We shonld have rejoiced to see the daily service also extended to Coshocton and Wooster.—Z. Cour.

A HEROIC ACTION.

It the middle of the great St. Lawrence there is, nearly opposite Montreal, an Island called St. Helens, between which and the shore, the stream about three-quarters of a mile wide, runs with very great rapidity; and yet, notwithstanding this current, the intense cold of winter invariably freezes its surface. The winter I am speaking of was unusually severe, and the ice on the St. Lawrence particularly thick: however, while the river beneath was rushing towards the sea, the ice was waiting in obeyance in the middle of the stream until the narrow fastness between Montreal and St. Helens should burst and allow the the whole mass to break into pieces, and then in stupendous confusion to hurry down towards Quebec. On St. Helens there was quartered a small detachment of troops, and while the breaking up of the ice was momently expected, many of the soldiers muffled up in their great coats, with thick storm gloves on their hands, and with a piece of fur attached to their caps to protect their ears from being frozen, were on the ice, employed in attending to the road across it to Montreal. After a short suspense, which increased rather than allayed their excitement, a deep thundering noise announced to them that the process I have described had commenced. The ice before them writhed, heaved up, burst, broke into fragments and the whole mass, excepting a small portion, which, remaining riveted to the shore of St. Helens, formed an artificial pier, with deep water beneath it, gradually moved downwards.

Just at this moment of intense interest, a little girl, the daughter of an artilleryman on the Island, was seen on the ice in the middle of the river, in an attitude of agony and alarm. Imprudently and unobserved, she had attempted to cross over to Montreal, and was hardly half way when the ice both above, below her, and in all directions, gave way. The child's fate seemed inevitable, and it was exciting various sensations in the minds, and various exclamations from the mouths of the soldiers, when something within the breast of Thomas Neil, a young sergeant in the 24th Regiment, who happened to be much nearer to her than the rest, distinctly uttered to him the monosyllables, "Quick march!" and in obedience thereto fixing his eyes on the child as on a parade bandarole, he steadily proceeded towards her. Sometimes before him, sometimes just behind him, and sometimes on either side, an immense piece of ice would pause, rear up on end, and roll over, so as occasionally to hide him altogether from view. Sometimes he was seen jumping from a piece that was beginning to rise, and then like a white bear, carefully clambering down a piece that was sinking; onward he proceeded, until, reaching the little island on which the poor child stood, with the feelings of calm triumph with which he would have surmounted a breach, he firmly grasped her by the hand.—By this time he had floated down the river nearly out of sight of his comrades. However, some of them having run to their barracks for spy-glasses, distinctly beheld them about two miles below them, sometimes leading the child with his hand, sometimes carrying her in his arms, sometimes "halting," sometimes running "double quick;" and in this dangerous predicament he continued for six miles, until, after passing Longueuil, he was given up by his comrades as lost. He remained with the little girl floating down the middle of the river for a considerable time; at last, towards evening, they were discovered by some French Canadians, who, at no small risk, humanely pushed off in in a canoe to their assistance, and thus rescued them both from their perilous situation. The Canadians took them to their home. At last, in due time, they returned to St. Helens. The child was happily restored to its parents, and Sergeant Neil quietly, returned to his barracks.—Sir. F. Head's "Emigrant."

Where do Men go who die at Chicago?

Some years ago, when Chicago was in its infancy, a stranger took up quarters at the principal hotel, and inscribed his name on the register as "Mr. J———, of St. Louis." For several days he remained there, engaged in transacting the business which had brought him to the place, and from his exceeding plain dress, manners, and general appearance, attracted but little attention. Soon Mr. J.———was suddenly seized with illness during which he was sadly neglected by his host; and the servants, taking their tone from the master of the house, left him to shift for himself as he best could. Thus matters went on, till one morning he was found past praying for. His papers were then examined, that the sad inteligence might be communicated to his friends; when, to the surprise of all, he was found to be one of the wealthiest men in western country. Arrangements were accordingly made for the funeral; but, before the last rites were performed, the subject came to life again, having been the victim of catalepsy, instead of the "grim King of Terrors."—All were overjoyed at his fortunate escape from so dreadful a fate, and from that time were profuse in their expressions of solicitude, elicited, however, if we may judge, by "documentary evidence," rather than by any personal regard. At length, some one ventured to ask how things appeared to him while in his trance, to which he thus replied:

"I thought I had come to the river of death, where I met an angel, who handed me a jewel to serve as a pass to the other side. On giving this to the ferryman, I received from him another which carried me forward another stage in my journey. Going on thus for several stages, receiving at the termination of each a ticket for the succeeding one, I at last reached the gate of the heavenly city.—There I found St. Peter, who opened the door at my summons, pipe in mouth, seated by a small table, on which stood a goodly mug of steaming whisky-toddy."

"Good morning, sir," said he, very politely.

"Good morning, St. Peter," said I.

"Who are you, sir?" asked he, turning over the leaves of a huge ledger.

"My name is J———," said I.

"Very good, sir; where did you live down below?"

"I lived at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," said I.

"Very well, sir; and where did you die?"

"I died at Chicago, in the State of Illinois."

"Chicago?" said he shaking his head, "there's no such place, sir."

"I beg your pardon, St. Peter, but have you a map of the U. S. here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Allow me to look at it."

"Certainly, sir," said St. Peter.

With this he handed down a splendid atlas, and I pointed out Chicago on the map.

"All right, sir," said he, after a moment's pause; "it's there, sure enough, so walk in sir; but I'll be blest if you ain't the first man that has ever come here from that place!" Thus ended Mr. J———'s account of his transition state; and no more questions were asked.—Spirit of the Times.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. LINES

On the death of Brother Joseph Newlove of Harmony, near Springfield, Ohio, by H. Rowan, V. D. M.

The following verses are designed to express the enjoyment and prospects of Brother N., and his desire for the salvation of his children and the prosperity of the Church.

TUNE—"Shed Not a Tear."

Farewell, my children, my children farewell,
Weep not for me, weep not for me,
I soon with Jesus, in glory shall dwell,
Weep not for me, weep not for me:
I with the ransom'd, the story shall tell,
My blessed Jesus hath done all things well,
O! I will praise him who saved me from hell,
Weep not for me, weep not for me.

"Be faithful," children, 'tis my last command,
Praise ye the Lord, praise ye the Lord,
Now I must leave you, my time is at hand,
Praise ye the Lord, praise ye the Lord:
My Savior calls me, and I must obey,
Why should I murmur? or why wish to stay?
No! no! but thy will be done, I will say,
Praise ye the Lord, praise ye the Lord.

Farewell, to Zion, the Church of my choice,
Class-mates adieu, class-mates adieu,
With the triumphant, I soon shall rejoice,
Class-mates adieu, class mates adieu:
A crown of life I in glory shall wear,
A palm of victory forever bear,
Eternal pleasures in heaven I'll share,
Class-mates adieu, class-mates adieu.

I now am ready, the angels are come,
All, all is well; all, all is well;
They will escort me to heaven my home,
All, all is well; all, all is well:
My work is finished—my race is run,
I've fought the good fight, the victory won,
Henceforth for me is laid up a crown,
All, all is well; all, all is well.

The Politics of Christianity.

NO. III.

Primary Object of Government.

Civil governments have been very prone, in all times and all countries to misread the main object of their mission. Their history presents us with the sublime of human depravity—bearing much the same relation to the ordinary wickedness of man, as mountain ranges to the level earth. Ought this to excite our wonder?—Place at the disposal of a will naturally selfish and corrupt, an organised machinery of power no matter for what purpose—and you may fairly expect the engine to be used, fully as often for the private ends of those who work it as for the advantage of the public for whom it was originally put together. There is nothing that man is so certain of turning to ill account as delegated power. Almost invariably, his pride cancels the primary conditions of the compact made with him, and claims as a right, vested solely in himself, what he ought to hold as a trust derived from the consent of others—and then, his selfishness, availing itself of the vast system of means at command, seeks indulgence for itself rather than benefit for the public. Hence, history, which embodies the deeds, not so much of peoples, as of governments, is but a continuous record of violence, fraud, and licentiousness on a large scale.

But the common character and practices of civil government, as, for the most part, it has been and still is, must not be taken as the true setting forth of its original meaning. Born of that necessity which was the daughter of the curse, its real mission was to bless mankind.—The Divine purpose stamped on its brow is 'good,' the good of the race—and human perversity has not been able wholly to make void the benign intent. The worst of governments is better than the absence of all government—the most grinding of State tyrannies, than the lawlessness of private and individual revenge. If injustice we must have—and the condition of human nature laughs at our escaping it altogether—let us have it in a few large masses, rather than in countless millions of atoms. The avalanche is less to be dreaded than the sand storm of the desert. With all the mischief it has done, civil government has yet rendered society a possible thing—and out of the soil which this possibility has fenced off, have sprung nearly all the causes as well as proofs of social progress. The institution must have been powerfully effective for good, which no amount of evil incident to the bad working of it has hitherto been able to destroy. But for the vitality which it possesses, in common with every other law of Providence, it could not have stood the wear and tear to which man's depravity has uniformly subjected it.

Besides, however, the direct sensible good, which civil government is meant to secure, Christianity, we think, teaches us to look into it for a still deeper significance. As an 'ordinance of God,' we are unquestionably warranted in including in it, and in assigning to it, moreover, a foremost place, in that vast and widely adjusted system of means which the Highest himself contrived for the moral government of our race.—We have powers, springs of emotion, sources of purest enjoyment, which voluntary obedience to law—the law of truth and love—alone can unseal. The great end of our being is intelligent and cheerful submission to government. The purest, the most refined, and the most enduring happiness of which we are capable, is inseparably connected with being and doing what the supreme Ruler would have us to be and to do.—May there not be a necessity, then, for some such institution as civil government to waken up our first notions of the relationship we sustain to authority as such, and to give daily exercise to those feelings which it was designed to excite? Could we have grasped, or duly appreciated, the idea of moral government, so far as to choose submission to it as our worthiest end, but for the rudiments of knowledge we have gained from early familiarity with forms of earthly rule?—Are not the several modes in which public authority is brought to bear upon us here the A B C of moral instruction? The rude types which illustrate to our unskilled thoughts subjects which, but for them, we could not have understood? picture lessons often miserably executed, for the childhood of humanity, to help us to our first conceptions of a spiritual and universal magistracy? Very much of God's message to man would be unintelligible to us, but for the accompanying prints furnished to us by Providence—and amongst them civil government is assuredly, not the least suggestive.

If, then, we consult the "oracle" as to the general object of civil rule, the answer is 'Good'—the good of the governed—direct and temporary in the maintenance of public order—indirect and lasting in the shadowing forth of something higher than itself, and in giving exercise to the nobler susceptibilities of our common nature. The necessity for civil government arises out of evil—government itself is an instrument for good. Selfishness may misapply it—pride may abuse it—but it nevertheless bears upon it the seal of the All-wise; and, like all institutions which come from His hand, embodies a truly beneficent purpose.

The obviousness of the foregoing remarks should not be allowed to turn us aside from the practical conclusions which they will be found to contain. If the general object of civil government be such as we stated, upon the authority of revealed truth, what a huge bundle of measures, which the politicians of the day flatter their craft by calling statesmanlike, must be rejected as having no relation whatever to the main end of state rule! Submitted to this simple but searching test, how glaringly do they proclaim their baseness! To set on fire the worst passions of the many, with a view to gratify the ambition of the few—to wrap up in mystery what, if seen in its own light, common honesty would condemn—to prop up injustice by plausible devices, and in place of removing it, to suppress its too piercing utterances in the public ear—to put new fences round exclusive privileges and class interests, even where experience has proved them to be widely pernicious—such seems to have been the great business of government, according to men in power. But if the civil magistrate was designed to be "the minister of God for good" to each and all of his subjects, it is clear that in following the course we have described, he is applying his authority in methods repudiated by Christianity, and abusing the trust reposed in him to ends not sanctioned by his commission.

This view of the subject may help to clear the way for religious men. Government is an ordinance of God—and they justly esteem themselves bound to submit to it. But he who appointed the means, appointed also the end for which they should exist. Neglect of that end is the infraction and perversion of a solemn trust—the substitution of another end is a misappropriation of power to purposes never intended. In the name of Christianity all good men are bound to remonstrate against flagrant violations of a divine ordinance. They cannot be silent and remain faithful.

Lastly, Christianity lends its sanction to civil government, only as it ministers "good"—none therefore have a right to identify political injustice with the religion of Jesus. So far as it is of God, it is beneficent—where otherwise it is to be ascribed to man. "The powers that be" are divinely commanded to bless mankind—when they curse it is of their own corrupt hearts. Governments cannot do their subjects wrong without going beyond their commission.

Ministerial.

Plain Saxon for the Pulpit.—As the Rev. Samuel Kilpin was preaching on a certain occasion, he spoke of "the Deity." A Sailor, who was listening, immediately started from his seat, his elbows fully spread, and exclaiming aloud,—"Deity—well, who is He? Is he our God Almighty!" The attendants were about to turn him out; but the minister stood reproved, and requested him to resume his seat, with the remark, "Yes, my friend, I did mean the Almighty God." The sailor rejoined, "I thought so; but was not quite sure—I never heard that name before."—The humble minister replied, "You had a right to enquire; I was to blame; whilst delivering God's message of mercy and justice to immortal souls, I ought not to have given my divine Master a name which prevented the message from being understood."

A HARVEST SONG.

BY E. YEATES REESE

Hark! the clarion summons calls—
Now it rises—now it falls—
Lo! the wide spread harvest field—
Ripe, the plenteous grain to yield—
Up!—the sickle nobly wield!

Wisdom calls—Ye sons arise!
He that winneth souls is wise,
Moments swiftly glide away,
Hear ye not the words they say?—
"Work—while it is called To-day!"

Angels bending o'er you, cry,
Spirits of the Dead, reply,
Heav'n with all its glories bright,
Hell—from shades of blackest night,
Strong impassioned tones unite!

He that goeth forth in tears,
Weeping o'er the seed he bears,—
He shall come with joy again,
From the valley and the plain
Bearing sheaves of ripened grain!

Soon the Husbandman shall call
Weary laborers, one and all,—
Call them home, from toil and tears,
Home, from weariness and fears,
Home to rest through endless years!

Hark, the clarion summons calls,
Now it rises—now it falls—
Lo, the wide spread harvest field,
Ripe, the plenteous grain to yield,
Up! the sickle nobly wield!

Filial Kindness Rewarded.

Gustavus III, King of Sweden, passing on horseback through a village in the neighborhood of his capital, observed a young peasant girl, of interesting appearance, drawing water at a fountain by the way-side. He went up to her, and asked her for a draught. Without delay she lifted up her pitcher, and with artless simplicity put it to the lips of the monarch. Having satisfied his thirst, and courteously thanked his benefactress, he said, 'My girl, if you would accompany me to Stockholm I would endeavor to fix you in a more agreeable situation.'

'Ah sir,' replied the girl, 'I cannot accept your proposal. I am not anxious to rise above the state of life in which the providence of God has placed me; but even if I were, I could not for an instant hesitate.' 'And why?' rejoined the king, somewhat surprised. 'Because,' answered the girl, coloring, 'my mother is poor and sickly, and has no one but me to assist and comfort her under her many afflictions: and no earthly bribe could induce me to leave her, or to neglect the duties which affection requires from me.'—'Where is your mother?' asked the monarch.—'In that little cabin,' replied the girl, pointing to a wretched hovel beside her. The king, whose feelings were interested in favor of his companion, went in, and beheld stretched on a bedstead, whose only covering was a little straw, an aged female weighed down with years, and sinking under infirmities. Moved at the sight, the monarch addressed her: 'I am sorry, my poor woman, to find you in so destitute and afflicted a condition.' 'Alas, sir,' answered the venerable sufferer, 'I should be indeed to be pitied, had I not that kind and attentive girl, who labors to support me, and omits nothing she thinks can afford me relief. May a gracious God remember it to her for good,' she added, wiping away a tear. Never, perhaps, was Gustavus more sensible, than at that moment, of the pleasure of possessing an exalted station. The gratification arising from the consciousness of having it in his power to assist a suffering fellow-creature, almost overpowered him; and putting a purse into the hand of the young villager, he could only say, 'Continue to take care of your mother; I shall soon enable you to do so more effectually. Good bye, my amiable girl, you may depend upon the promise of your king.' On his return to Stockholm, Gustavus settled a pension for life on the mother, with the reversion to her daughter at her death.

A Lesson for Youth.

At the dedication of the Normal School at Westfield, Mass., Gov. Briggs who presided over the ceremonies, in the course of an address by him on the occasion, alluded to the importance of self-independence as one great means of success in this world, that early prosperity had not been the road usually travelled by those who in early years had become distinguished, either for wisdom or virtue, while honest poverty, patient toil, perseverance, and a decided dependence on self-had wrought out for their possessors distinguished and lasting honor, and he observed, as he wiped the tears that struggled in his eyes, "I can recall the case of a poor boy, who once sat on the hard plank seat of one of these schools, in one of the poorest districts of this State, while his father was toiling at the anvil to earn his daily bread, who under the smiles of a kind Providence, has since been honored by his fellow citizens infinitely beyond his deserts, and who, as the Chief Magistrate of this Commonwealth is now addressing you."

Young Men's Department.

Manliness of Character.

One of the most conspicious elements in true manliness of character is unswerving integrity. With a young man, properly influenced, 'principle' is always the law of action. His inquiry in respect of any proposed course of action is not—Is it expedient? Is it profitable? Will it give momentary pleasure—or elevation—or influence?—but 'Is it right? Is it consistent with my principle?'

How strong a banner of resistance is such an one enabled to bring against the allurements which present themselves to young men in a populous city! It is the abandonment of principle, the surrender of the heart to custom, to the example of evil associates, to the current of corrupt opinion and practice, which so frequently severs from the moorings of truth the bark of the youthful voyager upon life's treacherous sea and exposes him to the pitiless storms of infamy and moral ruin.

It is the abandonment of principle which fills our theatres, bowling saloons and haunts of dissipation with their nightly gatherings; our penitentiaries & alms houses with young men, sunk into premature old age, who but for the abandonment of this talisman of manly bearing, 'principle,' might have secured, either in private or in public life the respect & affection of the good while living, and dying, might have left behind them the radiance of their excellence, like sunlight upon the curtaining clouds of a summer evening's sky.—Methodist Protestant.

SYMPATHY.

It is a mistaken idea that manliness and stoicism are inseperable—that a tender regard for the feelings and interests of others, is weak and unmanly. A heart insensible to sympathy claims greater affiinity with the brute than the man.—Show me the man, who is regardless of the feelings of his friends or his enemies; who has no tear to drop with his brother, in misfortune or in guilt; a stranger to sympathy with the heart he has thoughtlessly wounded; reckless alike of personal character and personal or family peace; who lives for self and confines his sympathies within the boundaries of his own successes, and I will show you such a man as is calculated to crimson the cheek of humanity, and cause his fellows almost to forget the divinity of their original, in the enormity and de-formity of its inglorious prostitution.—Methodist Protestant.

Maternal Affection.

The plaugue had broken out in Tuscany! In the village of Coreggi, whether it were that due precaution had not been taken, or that the disease was of a peculiarly malignant nature, one after another—first the young and then the old—of a whole family dropped off. A woman, the wife of a laborer, and mother of two little boys, felt herself attacked by fever in the night; it greatly increased, and in the evening the fatal tumor appeared. This was during the absence of her husband, who went to work at a distance, and only returned on Saturday night, bringing home the scanty means of subsistence for his family for the week. Terrified by the fate of the neighboring family before mentioned, moved by the fondest love for her children, and determining not to communicate the disease to them, she formed the heroic resolution of leaving her home, and going elsewhere to die. Having locked them in a room, and sacrificed, to their safety, even the last and sole comfort of a parting embrace, she ran down stairs, carrying with her the sheets and coverlet, that she might leave no means of contagion. She then shut the door with a sigh, and went away. But the eldest, hearing the door shut, went to the window, and seeing her running in that manner, cried out, 'Good bye, mother,' in a voice so tender, that she involuntarily stopped. 'Good bye, mother,' replied the youngest child, stretching his little head out of the window, and thus was the poor afflicted mother compelled for a time to endure the dreadful conflict between the yearnings which called her back, and the pity and solicitude which urged her on. At length the latter conquered, and amid a flood of tears, and the farewells of her children, who knew not the fatal cause and import of those tears, she reached the house of those who were to bury her; she recommended her husband and children to them, and in two days she was no more! What is like the heart of a mother? You remember the words of a poor woman on hearing her parish priest relate the history of Abraham—God certainly would not have required such a sacrifice of a mother. —From the Italian.

WIVES AND LADIES.

Dow, Jr., in one of his sermons, says: The kind of a wife you want, is one of good morals, and knows how to mend trowsers; who can reconcile pealing potatoes with practical piety; who can waltz with a dash churn and sing with a teakettle; who understands broomology and the true science of mopping; who can knit stockings without knitting her brows, and knit up her husband's "ravelling sleeve of care:" who prefers sewing tears with a needle to sowing tares (scandal) with her tongue. Such is decidedly a better half. Take her, if you can get her, when you find her—be she up to the elbows in the suds of a wash tub, or picking geese in a cow stable.

Parent's Department.

A WORD TO PARENTS.

The other day, a lovely girl, about ten years of age, daughter of Mr. Solomon Stephens; of Barnet, Vt., lost her life in a very singular way. She was passing on the bridge in her native village. A team was passing at the time, dragging a heavy piece of timber, the hind part of which, by some unlucky jerk, struck her knocking her through the railing of the bridge, and precipitating her into the current of the stream. The bridge is situated at the head of a waterfall; which, judging by the eye, may be about seventy-five feeet of descent, at an angle of seventy-five degrees. The dear child was dashed down this awful precipice, from ledge to ledge, and over one dam, and lodged in a lower dam, from which she was quickly taken—but life was gone!—Next morning, having occasion to pass through the village, the heart-rending tidings met me as I was entering it. The scene will be among the last of my conscious recollections. Whilst looking with intense interest on the mangled, lifeless form of the beautiful lively creature, the agonized father, whilst pacing the room, uttered an exclamation which sunk deep into my heart: "O, that I had been faithful to that child—the Lord forgive us that sin." If that truly devout, active, consistent Christian had such a deep sense of his deficiency in the matter of training his children for another world, how much more should those parents feel, who almost entirely neglect the religious education of their children! I know no family more punctual in family and sanctuary worship than this; and none that exceeded the younger branches as pupils and teachers in the Sabbath school. This sweet child had her Sabbath school lesson fully committed, when she was suddenly called, as I hope, to that kingdom, which, as our Lord informs us, is largely composed of little children; especially such as from infancy have known the holy Scirptures, which are able to make them wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus.—N. H. Gazette.

Employment for Children.

Great unkindness and injustice is often done to little children, by treating them as mischievous, and scolding them for being troublesome, when the truth is, the little creatures are either weary for want of employment, or else the love of knowledge, or curiosity, has induced them to examine the inside of something they ought not to have meddled with. Find them something to occupy them—work, such as they can do, or some innocent amusement—and they will not trouble you with mischievousness. It has been said, the mind of a child is as active as that of a statesman. This must be acknowledged, since it is admitted, that a child learns more the first two years of its life than in any six subsequent ones—and only think what the poor little creatures have to acquire! They have to learn a language, and one might almost say two, if we take into account the unintelligible jargon that some use when talking to infant children; for instance, how it must puzzle the brains of the poor little learner to ascertain that "tum, me itle mane, have a bittee bed a buttee"—means the same as "come, my little man, have a piece of bread and butter." Then they have to learn the use of every thing that is around them, and the various characters of the persons they meet with.

SERIOUS QUESTIONS.

There is a God. He preserves, and he can destroy you. Do you daily think of him?

You have a soul. Do you care for it? You care for your body, but do you properly care for your soul?

You are a sinner. Do you know how a sinner can be saved?

There is a Savior. Are you anxious that he may save you?

There is an awful hell. Are you seeking to escape it?

There is a glorious heaven. Are you in the way to reach it?

You must soon die. Are you prepared for the solemn change?

You must appear at the judgement seat of Christ. What will then be your lot?

There is an eternal state after death. Is yours likely to be an eternity of bliss, or an eternity of woe?

MISCELLANEOUS.

Be Sure Your Sin Will Find You Out.

Dr. Donne, afterwards the celebrated Dean of St. Paul's, when he took possession of the first living to which he was inducted, walked into the yard of the church where he was to officiate.—It happened, that as he sauntered along, the sexton was digging a grave, and the Doctor stood for a moment to observe his operations. As the man was at work, he threw up a skull which in some way or other engaged the Doctor's attention.—While he examined it, he perceived a headless nail, which perforated the temple, and which convinced him that some dreadful deed must have been perpetrated. Taking up the skull, he demanded of the grave-digger to whom it belonged. The man instantly said, that he knew very well—that it had belonged to a man who was accustomed to excess in the use of liquor; and who, one night, having been guilty of his usual intemperance, had been found dead in his bed in the morning. Dr. Donne then asked,—'Had he a wife?' The answer was in the affirmative. 'What character does she bear?' The sexton said, 'A very good one, only she was reflected upon for marrying immediately after the death of her husband.' This was enough for the Doctor, who, upon the pretence of visiting all his parishioners, soon called upon the woman in question; and in the course of conversation he inquired of what sickness her husband had died. She gave the same account as the sexton had given before her. But the Doctor produced the skull, and pointing to the place, said, 'Woman, do you know this nail?' The unhappy criminal was struck with horror at the demand & the sight, and instantly owned that she had been the perpetrator of the deed, which had hurried her husband, in a state of intoxication, into the eternal world.

A CURIOUS ARBITRATOR.

In olden times a community of monks, occupying a half-decayed mountain castle, found it necessary to erect a new convent, but could not agree together upon the spot where it should stand. They finally resolved to leave the matter to the determination of an animal in great favor among them, the ass. The following spicy account of the proceedings of the arbitrator is given:

'Even so did the monks of Altenberg now resolve to devolve upon the ass the business which had proved too weighty for themselves. The high-honored Neddy was conducted accordingly to the gate of the castle, laden with the money to be expended for the building, and with the insignia of the convent, and then left to take whatever way might, in his wisdom, seem good to him.

'Slowly and deliberately did he pace down towards the valley, the monks following at a reverential distance. Now and then the sagacious animal stopped, and cropped a thistle, doubtless to give himself time for reflection, and occasionally he stood still and looked around, as if to consider the capabilities of the place. He went on till he entered a shady grove, that afforded a delicious refuge from the burning rays of the afternoon sun, and stoppped where a bright rivulet, trickling from the Spechtshard, and marking its course by a strip of the loveliest green, fell into the beautiful Dhun. The monks watched him in breathless expectation, for here, they thought, would be a delightful spot, and they dreaded lest he should go further. The respectable animal, after due consideration, slowly stepped and tasted the water; and then, that he might omit no means of forming a correct judgment, began to try a little of the fragrant grass that grew in rich abundance on the bank. At length he lay down, and having apparently quite made up his mind, rolled over 'heels upward,' and gave vent to his feelings in the trumpet tones of a loud and joyful bray. His sonorous voice was drowned in the exulting psalms of the monks—and on this, the loveliest spot of the whole valley, the sacred edifice was erected.'

A man ought to have nothing singular or affected in his habit, discourse, or manners. In our opinion, the modest air becomes a man better than that which they call the genteel air.

Working Like a Fool to Please Fools.

The late Rev. Samuel Lowell, of Bristol, being once at Brighton, expressed a wish to walk on the Steyne, and to have the public characters pointed out to him. Amongst the rest, a celebrated comedian was noticed. "Ah," said Mr. L. "is that———, my old school-fellow? I'll speak to him." He accosted him, and the following conversation took place.

Lowell. Sir, I believe I have the pleasure of addressing Mr. ———.

Player. Yes, sir, my name is ———; but I have not the pleasure of being acquainted with you.

L. What, Samuel Lowel?

P. What! are you Samuel Lowel?

L. Yes, I am.

P. Well, I am very glad to see you, now tell me your history in five minutes.

L. First, my name is Samuel Lowell; I am a dissenting minister at Bristol, where I have lived upwards of twenty years; I have a large family.

P. So, you are a dissenting minister; well, you are a happy man, for you go to your work with pleasure, and perform it with pleasure; you are a happy man. "I go to my work like a fool, to please fools; I am not a happy man.

Thank God for your Reason.

An individual, as he was passing along the streets of London, was accosted by a stranger with the question, "Did you ever thank God for the use of your reason?" "No," was the reply, "I never thought of it." "Well, do it quickly," rejoined the stranger, 'for I have lost mine.' For years after reading the account of the above occurrence, we have no recollection of ever kneeling in prayer without rendering distinct and express thanks to the Father of mercies for the continued possession of this inestimable blessing. Reader, suppose, that you should be accosted by some spirit from that world on which hope never dawns with the question, "Did you ever render suitable thanks to God, that you are not all that I am?"—what would be your reply? And with what feelings, so you should subsequently "bow the knee to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," would you express the grateful remembrance of the fact, that you are not lost?

CURRAN.

One morning, at an inn in the south of Ireland, a gentleman, traveling upon mercantile business, came running down stairs a few minutes before the appearance of the stage coach, in which he had taken a seat for Dublin. Seeing an ugly little fellow leaning against the door post with dirty face and shabby clothes, he hailed him, and ordered him to brush his coat. The operation proceeded rather slowly, the traveler cursed the lazy varlet for an idle, good-for-nothing dog, and threatened him with corporal punishment on the spot, if he did not make haste and finish the job well before the arrival of the coach. Terror seemed to produce its effect; the fellow brushed the coat and then the trowsers, with great diligence, and was rewarded with sixpence, which he received with a low bow. The gentleman went into the bar, and paid his bill, just as the expected vehicle reached the door.—Upon getting inside, guess his his astonishment to find his friend, the quandom waiter, snugly seated in one corner, with all the looks of a person well used to comfort. After two or three hurried glances to be sure that his eyes did not deceive him, he commenced a confused apology for his blunder, condemning his own rashness and stupidity—but he was speedily interrupted by the other exclaiming:

"Oh, never mind—make no apologies—these are hard times, and it is well to earn a trifle in an honest way. I am much obliged for your handsome fee for so small a job. My name, sir, is John Philpot Curran; pray, what is yours?"

The other was thunderstruck by the idea of such an introduction; but the drollery of Curran soon overcame his confusion; and the traveller never rejoiced less at the termination of a long journey, than when he beheld the distant spires of Dublin glitter in the light of the setting sun.

A Stubborn Contest.—Near the Barbadoes islands is a huge white rock, which from the resemblance to a ship under full sail, is called the 'Ship Rock.' A French frigate, falling in with this rock in the night time, mistook it for an English vessel, and commenced firing into it. The echoes of the cannonade were repeated so perfectly, that they were also mistaken for the returning fire. The action continued until morning, when each party having received an equal amount of damage, it was thought best to discontinue the fight.

Yucatan.

No little sympathy is expressed in relation to the frightful condition of the affairs of Yucatan. At our last accounts the Indians were rushing like a torrent upon the whites, and the consternation of the latter was indeed fearful. Without speedy aid from some neighboring or friendly Power, the prospect before them was one of wholesale massacre. Mr. Sierra, the Commissioner at Washington, corrects the notion that the revolt of the Indians had its origin in the tyranny and oppression exercised by the white race, and says that on the contrary, ever since the peninsula of Yucatan achieved its independence from the Crown of Spain, (without the intervention of Mexico,) the new government has been assiduously employed in ameliorating the social condition of the Indian race. They are citizens by the constitution, and as such have enjoyed all civil and political rights belonging to the institutions of the country. The government has taken great pains to educate them; and for which purpose public schools have been established for their benefit, at which many have been educated, and have filled places of public trust. This view of the case is calculated to deepen the public sympathy in favor of the pursued and threatened. Surely our Government should endeavor to render some assistance. It may, perhaps, be deemed unwise to take any part in this struggle, but means of rescue & escape might with propriety be sent. To save human life is an object worthy of our energies. A nation devoted to such a purpose, would deserve the thanks of all civilized mankind. We might also offer mediation, to act as umpire and adjust the points of difficulty between the contending parties. What are the views of the Washington Upon the subject?—Bickuell's Reporter.

New Jersey Conference.

Extracts from the Minutes of the Sixth Annual Conference of the Methodist Prot. Church, New Jersey District, held at Dover, Monmouth County, New Jersey, which commenced on the 5th day of April and ended on the 10th, 1848.

Conference was opened by reading a portion of Scripture, and prayer by the President.

On motion Winslow Jackson was appointed Secretary.

Rev. Jacob Timberman was received from the Wesleyan connexion.

Rev. Bartine Twiford was re-elected President.

LIST OF APPOINTMENTS.

Centerton Circuit, Edward Schock; Glassboro' Ct., Wm. M. H. Smith; Egg Harbor Ct., Jonathan N. Timberman; Bridgeport and Woodbury Ct., Jacob Timberman, Winslow Jackson; Dover Ct., Samuel Hill; Red Bank Ct., Samuel Budd; Medford and Union Mission, Andrew L. McCall; Leesburgh Mis., William B. Vanlier; N. Brunswick Ct. to be supplied.

The Conference adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the next session of the Conference be held at Mount Pleasant, Egg Harbor Ct., on the first Wednesday in April, 1849.

Resolved, That we deem it the imperative duty of every Superintendent to use his utmost endeavors and influence in the establishing of and promoting Sabbath Schools.

Resolved, That we consider it altogether incompatible with Christianity to buy, sell or drink as a beverage, spirituous or small drink, wine or fermented cider.

Resolved, That we consider it contrary to the word of God and repugnant to the spirit of Christianity, to hold fellowship, either directly or indirectly, with slavery.

Resolved, That we deem it obligatory upon every Superintendent who receives an appointment from this Conference, to read at least once a quarter in every appointment on his Circuit such portions of our Discipline as relate to the duties of members and the regulations of our Societies; to preach upon the government of our Church at least once a year, and to execute discipline.

What is often related of other Conferences, can truly be said of this, that it was characterized by brotherly love and unanimity of thought and feeling; whilst every member seemed to feel the great responsibility of the occasion, and every heart burned with desires for the salvation of souls and the glory of God. The past year has been one of the gracious outpouring of the Spirit of God. Almost every Circuit has been blest with a revival of religion, and many souls have been gathered into the Church militant, whilst the servants of God have been blest and their souls made to rejoice.

Martinsburg, May 5, 1848.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to say through the Recorder to the brethren, and all concerned, that we are still in the work. Our mission is in a peaceful and pleasant condition. We have not gone ahead numerically so fast as some others. But we hold—hold on—where unto we have attained. The prospect for the final establishment of the mission is better now than ever. The principles and polity of the church are being inquired after more earnestly than heretofore.

We still receive some members on probation, and upon the whole are doing the best we can.—Still remember us.

Br. Clancy's call will be at the Rice School House, 4 miles south-east of Martinsburg, on the grade leading to Zanesville, from Mt. Vernon.

J. K. DUFFY.

Allensville, O., May 9, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: I have been trying to do the best I could on this small circuit. A short time since I formed a class at Bloomingville, in the neighborhood of where our respected Br. Samuel Wilson lives. Nineteen united with us at the time, one of these a preacher from the Methodist Episcopal Church. Two united since, making 21. At another appointment last sabbath, 6 united with us. I hope Salt Creek Circuit may yet live.

Yours with respect,
MOSES SCOTT.

NORTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT

Cherry Grove Ct., May 4, '48.

BR. BASSETT: There has been general prosperity in the district this conference year and this circuit has shared in the Divine favor. The Presidential meeting closed on last Sabbath evening. Br. Strong preached six times, good acceptance and crowded audiences. Two gave their hands in church fellowship. Some 25 have up to this time. To God be all the glory. May the past be merely mercy drops compared to the future. In this conference it may be said truly the harvest is great and the laborers few. We want some eight or ten thoroughgoing itinerants more than we now have. Our next an. conference sets at Princeton the first Wed. in October next.—Are there not sacrificing, whole-souled men who can come and help us here in Illinois? We want no drones.

Yours, &c.,

Warren County, O., May 7, 1848.

DEAR BR. BASSETT: Wishing to send you a little money, which ought to have been sent sooner; I would just state, for the information of the brethren, that I have been much afflicted from about the 20th of February until the middle of April with severe colds affecting my lungs, producing a hard, distressing cough, so that I was unable to visit as many circuits as I intended. But notwithstanding my affliction, through a strong desire to do some good in the little time I have to stay in this trying and afflicting world, I have visited Middletown, Lebanon station, and spent three weeks in Cincinnati, and Cincinnati circuit. Preached in both the missions and 6th street, and then went to the circuit, spent four days there.—Having renewed my cold, I thought it best to go home and rest, and doctor. In a few days I got some better, and went to a new place on Port William circuit, to assist Br. Fowler at a protracted meeting, to be held in a new log meeting house, 20 feet by 30. A Mr. Bone, who had never belonged to any church, (though now the father of thirteen children,) gave the ground, and with the aid of Br. Turner and a little help from others, built the house. Mr. Bone had got information of our liberal principles of church government, and their opposite, from a lecture on that subject, delivered in that vicinity by Br. Rose, and was so well pleased with mutual rights, and our doctrines, that he was determined to do something to promote the cause. And blessed be God, his labor of love was not in vain. On the fourth morning of our meeting, after I had preached a short sermon, Br. Fowler opened the door and beat up for volunteers, and the old lady, Mrs. Bone, arose, and as she came forward, God blessed her soul, and she came clapping her hands and shouting, and said to her husband, "Come along." He came trembling and weeping, and then two of his daughters, besides the one that had joined before, so, five new members, with four or five who belonged at Paintersville. A class of nine or ten, will be organized.

Yours as ever,

☞ Rev. W. B. Evans will preach at the M. Protestant Church, Zanesville, this (Thursday) evening, at candlelight.

FALLING FROM GRACE.—The Cincinnati Commercial states that a few days ago, a man fell from the high stoop in front of Grace Church.—Strange to say, he escaped without bodily injury, yet the Commercial thinks his mind has suffered. It is best to "take heed."

Christian Fellowship.

The Presbyterian Church of Zanesville and Putnam have lately enjoyed a fellowship, which has been truly refreshing to the members of each, and honorable to the cause of religion. Though one belongs to the Old School General Assembly, and the other to the New School, we know not that there is any difference in doctrines or practice. The Putnam church received a distinct organization in 1834, on other considerations than those which subsequently divided the Church at large; and when the general division took place, they choose to go with the new body. Their present Pastor, Rev. A. Kingsbury, is esteemed orthodox in doctrine, and very judicious in all his measures. Ministerial fellowship has been exercised between the pastors of these two churches, for the last two years. Mutual invitations have been extended, through the sessions, to each church, to participate together at the Lord's table, which has exerted a happy influence on both churches. During the latter part of tho winter just closed, the Lord has blessed both churches with a little reviving. On the first Sabbath in the present month, pastors, elders, and members, united in commemorating the Savior's death, in the Zanesville church; at which time fifteen made a profession of their faith. On the third Sabbath of the same month, all united in the same delightful exercise in the Putnam church, when sixteen made a public profession of faith. Such a large number of communicants had not been seated together at the Lord's table, in either church, for many years. These scenes have delighted, animated, and comforted christians, and the cause of Christ has been greatly strengthened in this community. The whole number of accessions to the communicants of the Putnam church, both by letter and examination, was nineteen; to the Zanesville church twenty.

The above is taken from the last number of the Family Quarto, a religious paper published in Zanesville, and conducted by Rev. S. Brown, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church in that place. We have rejoiced to know of the existing fellowship and interchange between the two Presbyterian Churches and their pastors; the one (in Zanesville) being of the Old School division, the other (in Putnam) of the New School, and have long thought the circumstance worthy of note and commendation. We agree with our brother of the "Quarto," that it is 'honorable to the cause of religion,' that walls of partition should be removed, so that Christians of different branches of the fold, can dwell together in unity. We have the pleasure of being personally acquainted with both the pastors alluded to, and consider them men of the right spirit, whilst they are highly esteemed by their respective congregations, who are each also, we rejoice to know, a "people, zealous of good works." The Editor of the "Quarto," esteems Rev. A. Kingsbury, though associated with a New School Presbytery, to be "orthodox in doctrine." We are glad to see this admission, and take pleasure in adding that so far as we have had the opportunity and pleasure of attending upon his administrations, we have found him to be orthodox also with us. We love to sympathise and agree, far as possible, with ministers and Christians of every evangelical denomination. We crave to see no opposition or religious controversy between brethren. We desire to see nothing that shall "hurt, or destroy" christian feeling and christian confidence, "in all the holy mountain" of the Lord.

We take pleasure in copying the above short article from the "Quarto," as we have rejoiced in the existing facts therein stated. And the only thing we find to regret in connection with this whole matter is that brother Brown should think it necessary, (if we do not misapprehend him, and we may do so,) to make some apology for this fraternising with a minister and church, of another school, in this particular case, by stating that "The Putnam Church received a distinct organization in 1834, on other considerations than those which subsequently divided the church at large," &c. It would have gratified us more highly, had our brother recommended a general sympathy and fellowship and interchange between the ministers and churches respectively of the Old and New School divisions. We cannot doubt that even this is the desire of his heart. He has shown himself (as above) a man of liberal views and feelings. And as he conducts a religious press, we doubt not that its influence will be wielded to promote in the churches Christian union and Christian co-operation in the work of the Lord. That hurtful legomachy between the organs of the Old and New School at Cincinnati has frequently given us pain. Let the "Quarto" interpose. And let its editor inherit the blessing pronounced upon the "peace-maker." We beg that we may not be considered as turning aside from our proper sphere, in this friendly reference to the affairs of our respected Presbyterian brethren. We desired chiefly to present before our readers the pleasant circumstance recorded in the Family Quarto, and to add, 'Let brotherly love continue.'

POLITICAL.—The Democratic Convention to nominate a President and Vice President, meets at Baltimore on the 22d inst. The Whig Convention for the like purpose, meets at Philadelphia on the 7th of June.

General Conference, M. E. Church.

We have determined to give a condensed abstract of the proceedings of this body from week to week. We regret that the Daily Christian Advocate, upon which we have depended for our information, comes very irregularly. It appears from what we find in some our exchanges that the proceedings of Saturday and Monday, 6th and 8th, were of little interest, except to the members. Two other Delegates from Canada have arrived. Bishop Soule and Doctors Bascom and Latta of the Church South, are also in attendance.

Tuesday, May 9.

Bishop Hamline presided. A communication was received from Dr. Pierce of the Church South, declining to accept a seat within the bar of the Conference, unless known in his official character. And in reference to the action which had passed the body, he added that the church South "can never renew the offer of fraternal relations between the two great bodies of Wesleyan Methodists in the United States. But the proposition can be renewed at any time, now or hereafter, by the Methodist Episcopal Church." An Address was presented from the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada. After the reading, the several Delegates from Canada addressed the Conference. A petition was presented from colored members in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, asking that an Annual Conference be organised for colored members, to be presided over by white Bishops and Presiding Elders.

Wednesday, 10.

Bishop Janes presided. A resolution was adopted, refusing to entertain the appeal of J. C. Green, of Brooklyn, New York, he having declared his intention to withdraw from the Church. At half past ten, business was suspended, to hear a sermon by Dr. Dixon, of England.

Thursday, 11.

Bishop Hedding presided. Two reports of the Missionary Committee were presented; one relating to the German population in Wisconsin, the other recommending the formation of an Oregon and California Conference. This latter proposition elicited a long debate upon its expediency. The report was recommitted.

Friday, 12.

Bishop Waugh presided. A petition was presented and read from two colored churches in Baltimore, praying for the organization of an Annual Conference of colored preachers within the bounds of the Baltimore Conference, to be under the supervision of the bishops who shall preside, &c. Referred to Committee. A communication was presented from the Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, preferring the claims of that church to a division of property. A communication was read from Bishop Soule, requesting that if there were any charges against him, for his administration, during the two years, after the last General Conference, while he was connected with the M. E. Church, to have them investigated, and to have an opportunity of defending himself.

REV. DR. DIXON.

The following is the Address delivered by this distinguished man in the General Conference at Pittsburgh, on the 3d inst.

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS!

I appear among you as a representative of the British Conference, entertaining, I am quite sure, the most cordial and warm affection towards you and the Methodist body, in general, in your great country. As far as I know—and I think I know the opinion and sentiments of my brethren pretty well—our connexion at home entertain for your connexion on this side the water unabated affection and an earnest desire for your great prosperity. And it affords me, personally, the highest gratification I think I ever felt in my life, to be permitted to assemble with you this morning. By some very strange, powerful influence, upon my mind, it has been my anxious wish for a great many years to visit your country, without any expectation of being honored with this mission. Sir, [addressing the President,] it came into my hands, I trust, providentially, and I confess I appear among you greatly gratified. I know not that I could possess a mission more to my taste had I been permitted to make choice of whatever laid in my path in this world. I have endeavored to look at this, your great country, since I have been in it, with as much intelligence as I possessed, & I confess I am greatly pleased—greatly astonished. The magnitude, the greatness, the sublimity, of the area of this country, is to me most astonishing, and fills me with wonder and surprise. To you these objects are common objects; to me they are novelties, and have made a deep impression upon my mind.

But, beloved brethren, what of your rivers, and mountains, and plains, as compared with your moral position and circumstances!

I have had the honor and pleasure of an introduction to your President—I mean the President of the United States—the Vice President, and a great number of your leading politicians. I was received by them with great courtesy. To us, in England, it appears on the part of men of this class, great humility. I am sure, very sure, that your institutions and opinions—the spirit of your country is, at any rate, mellowing the character of your great men, and most assuredly they are gentlemen. But, sir, (turning to the President) and brethren, I now appear in the presence of another class of men—men who have my sympaties and heart more fully and perfectly than the Statesmen, however great and influencial, I saw at Washington. I hail all those around me as brethren in Christ. And next to this relationship, I hail them with inexpressible pleasure and delight as my Methodist brethren. I have been treated with a cordiality, and affection and kindness, by all the brethren I have met with in the course of my visit here, such as I fear we did not accord to our own beloved American brethren when in our country. I fear we did not; and I doubt whether we could give an expression of as much warm feeling as my brethren of America have given me. I trust, however; at any rate with regard to myself, I am sure what I am about to remark will prove true, that if I have the happiness to hail any gentleman present in our country in future, I shall be glad to reciprocate this kindness and affection. It would be premature and presumptuous in me to remark upon the circumstances which surround Methodism in the United States, owing to the brief period I have been in the country, but as far as I have been permitted to witness the effects of Methodism, I believe that you have been graciously blessed, and that its principles prevail in their full integrity and purity. I rejoice, therefore, and believe that among you is settled the true spirit and real vitality and experience of Methodism, which ought to be promoted and continue to prevail among you. I regret, however, in common with my brethren in England that anything—that any necessity should have arisen among you to produce the sad division which has occurred between the North and the South. Brethren, need I say that our sympathies (and I am sure I speak the feelings and opinions of every preacher in England, and of Methodism in England) "are entirely on the side of liberty." Our sympathies are entirely on the side of the emancipation of slaves. Our desire and our prayer is, that by the Providence of God circumstances may arise to make it possible that this great blessing may be conferred upon all the black population of this great continent. (An exclamation of "Amen!" I am touching, I know, a very delicate question, but I thought it right to say that our feelings on this question are all on one side. With regard to your particular arrangements in relation to this question I have nothing to do, therefore, it would be presumptuous, in me to give any opinion. I only gave the opinion, I have expressed, as that which exists in England; and because by a strange concurrence of circumstances, I happened to take a somewhat prominent part in the great movement on the subject of slavery, which took place a few years ago in my country. I say I happened to be a member of the great National Committee on Emancipation, at the time the measure was carried in England. I understood the question very well felt a deep interest in it.

If my brethren, the venerable Bishops, and the brethren around me should require any information in regard to affairs in England, I should be very happy to communicate any information to them I may possess.

I conclude by saying, I feel extremely happy in being the bearer of kind feelings from a great body of good men in my native land to a greater body of good men in your country. I trust, brethren, that these bonds of cordial affection may never be severed; and my earnest prayer is for the peace, unity, efficiency and stability of Methodism all over the world. [A hearty "Amen" from the Conference.]

U. S. CONGRESS.

Saturday, April 29—House.—A message from the President, was laid before the House representing that the country of Yucatan was in a state of extreme suffering, from an insurrection of Indians, and had asked aid from the United States. The constituted authorities in imploring the aid of this government offer, in case it is granted, to "transmit the dominion and sovereignty of the peninsula" to the United States.—Similar appeals have been made to the Spanish and British governments. The President recognizes Yucatan as a State of the Mexican Republic, she not having declared her independence, yet she has been regarded as neutral in the war with Mexico. He thinks it would be proper during the continuance of the war, if troops could be spared, that we occupy and hold military possession of her territory, and defend the white inhabitants from the incursions of the Indians.—But at present till that can be done, he thinks, is to employ our naval forces in the Gulf, not required at other points, to afford them relief.—The President urges attention to this matter, as he deems it important to prevent Yucatan from becoming a colony of any European power.—After lengthy discussion, the Message and documents were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Senate.—The President's Yucatan Message was laid before the Senate. A debate ensued, on referring the same to Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Monday, May 1—The death of Chester Ashley, Senator from Arkansas, was announced in both houses. In the Senate, Mr. Borland, (successor to Mr. Sevier,) in making the announcement, said

"Just one week ago, a venerable form, in the fullness of life, and the seeming vigor of perfect health, rose in his place, and in a voice well known and respected here, announced my position in this assembly. * * * * In return for the kind courtesy of presenting me, as his colleague, to this company of honorable Senators, I pay but the poor and painful tribute of making known his final separation. The last act of his public life was my introduction; the first of mine must be his obituary."

Both houses adjourned, with the usual resolutions of respect.

Tuesday 2, was devoted to the funeral of Mr. Ashley.

OBERLIN EVANGELIST.—We are gratified to acknowledge the receipt of two numbers of this excellent paper, issued since the disaster of the 2d of March. We trust that Br. Fitch will be enabled soon again to get into successful operation.

The ceremonies of laying the corner stone will take place in that city on the 4th of July next. The Obelisk is to be carried to an elevation of five hundred feet.

Wisconsin extends from Lake Michigan to the Lake of the Woods—a distance of 1,100 m. Dividing this whole Territory (which is by far too large for one state) into two equal parts, each part would be as large as the great State of New York.

A Word for the Choir.

MR. EDITOR,—I am a member of the choir in the Presbyterian Church, Putnam, and have read with regret the article on church music, in your last, signed "A Presbyterian." The charge of "blasphemy" or of "mocking God" is evidently intended for us and we cant help feeling that it is very severe. For one I hesitate not to say that if the members of the church generally, feel and think as does your correspondent, they owe it to themselves and to the choir to "abate the nuisance" at once; they have the power, independent of any law civil or ecclesiastical, and if they fail to use it they are guilty of giving countenance, to what they regard as "blasphemy" from Sabbath to Sabbath.

Our choir is composed of 19 persons—18 of whom are professors of religion, yet it might be inferred from the article to which reference is made, that we are a set of irreverent and vain persons acting from no higher motive than mere ostentation. I confess we are not very humble nor as reverent as we should be, but hope we are not altogether forgetful of our characters or the position we occupy, and trust we may profit by the rebukes we receive from time to time from our more pious and meek brethren.

This question of church music is of too much importance to be disposed of in a summary manner, and I lack both time and talent to discuss it at large, but feel disposed not to let judgment go against us by default—there are two sides to the question. The idea that good church music can be had without a choir, or that a good choir can be kept up without the stimulous of "progress" seems to me preposterous in the present state of things. We must learn new tunes or give up choir meetings and when learned we must be allowed to sing them if we think it expedient.

A chorister may err in introducing too many new tunes, or in doing it at improper times, or in paying too much regard to taste at the expense of reverence or spirituality. But of this he and the choir, from the nuture of things must be judges, giving of course due consideration to the friendly suggestions of the church and congregation; and no great difficulty can ever arise where there is mutual confidence and respect.

The notion that because all are commanded to praise God therefore the leader of church music is bound to select only such tunes as "ALL creation" can sing, is too absurd to be seriously refuted, and yet how much short of this is the demand of "A Presbyterian."

It does not become me to speak of the style of our singing, it may be bad, very bad, doubtless our good brother thinks it is so, tastes differ and I would not dispute the point with any man.

Doubtless it would be desirable for the whole congregation to unite in this delightful part of public worship, but if, while our choir meetings are open to all, some neglect to qualify themselves for doing so, is the fault ours? For a series of years some of us have taxed ourselves somewhat heavily in performing the thankless task of keeping up some kind of church music (poor it may be) do we deserve only anathemas?

With the motives of our castigator I have nothing to do—I hope they are such as will ever be satisfactory to himself, though the spirit of his article seems not to savor much, of that "charity which suffereth long and is kind."

I seek no controversy, and have said thus much only in defence of the choir and their respected and much esteemed leader.

Choir Singing.

MR. EDITOR: A writer who signs himself a "Presbyterian" under the caption of "Congregational Singing," has attempted in your last No. to enlighten your readers upon the subject of "choirs," "choristers," &c. He regards choir singing as a "nuisance" which ought to be abated, and says it is "blasphemy, or more properly mocking God."

Not to notice the sincerity of a "Presbyterian," who can speak as does this writer, of those "congregations where the people have no voice except when called together to register (ratify?) the decrees of their rulers;" or his consistency in remaining connected with a church which not only tolerates but actually sanctions and supports what he considers a "nuisance," "mockery," "blasphemy," and the like, let us glance at some of the prominent points on both sides of this question.

On the one hand it is said that as God has commanded all to praise Him, it is therefore the duty of all, even though some may have ears as deaf as the "dumb adder," or voices as unmusical as the "braying ass," to join audibly in the songs of the sanctuary. But it may be asked, if the commands of God are to be thus interpreted, why should not all preach, and also pray aloud? The commands to preach and to pray are both equally positive and unlimited, & may be supposed as much obligatory upon all, as the duty of praise.

Again, it is contended, that no new tunes should be sung in the church, but that such only should be used as are familiar to the congregation.—Might not the same principle be applied to the form of prayer, and we thus be carried back to the practices of Episcopacy or Romanism.—Let it also be remembered that in our Hymn Books now in use, hymns are found in more than thirty measures, unknown in the good old days when those who seem to suppose that, on this subject, "knowledge will die with them," acquired their knowledge of the "vocal art" and learned their "set of tunes." Now let the "exclusive" policy just referred to, be adopted, and how long time would be required, for our congregations to learn tunes for these new hymns? However, it may be supposed, that "Presbyterian" would "expunge" all these modern innovations by one "fell sweep" of his potent goose quill. But, seriously, does he really suppose it is the duty of those who never "lift to God the voice of praise," except in the "great congregation," to attempt to edify the church by their hideous noises, and even abuse, and impugn the motives of those who spend a considerable portion of each week, in preparation for the acceptable discharge of this duty? Has he never suspected that the chorister may have some other motive in the selection of new tunes than that of "showing off the choir, and his own skill?"—If not, let him learn, that so long as numbers in the congregation attempt to sing, who have neither skill, ear, voice, or judgment—so long will a judicious leader hesitate to give out such tunes as are certain to be executed by such executioners. Any candid "Presbyterian" will admit that all things in God's house, should be done "decently and in order." Is it decent or orderly, to disturb the feelings and mar the enjoyment of nine-tenths of a congregation, as is done by those who pretend to sing, and yet neither keep the time, pitch, or spirit of the music?

This writer appears to be desirous that his own views & feelings in this matter should be consulted.

Has he been equally mindful of the tastes and wishes of others?

In conclusion, permit a word to those who are truly anxious to promote good congregational music. If they would but meet the advocates of choirs, upon the ground of a reasonable compromise, something beyond mere controversy might be effected. Let them enter at once upon the work of musical cultivation, and "improve their gift:" Instead of laboring to bring others down to their standard, let them elevate their tastes—improve their voices, and above all let them encourage by their counsel sympathy, and prayers, every suitable effort to improve the music of the church, and they may rest assured, they will not "labor in vain."

ASAPH.

Written for the Western Recorder.

BR. BASSETT: Dear sir: I wish to inform you, and the friends in general, how narrowly I escaped death, on the 4th inst. I attended a prayer meeting, near J. Longwell's, about one mile distant from where I live. After our meeting broke up, we discovered the speedy approach of a tremendous storm; and being very anxious to be at home, I in haste left the meeting house, and although I had Alum Creek to cross, and a strip of woods to pass, I thought I could run my horse through: having at the same time, the presence of Him, who is able to calm the wind, I started in full speed. When I got to the creek, the cloud had got about over my head, and whilst it shaded the earth in almost total darkness, the terriffic thunder, and vivid lightning, in a measure intimidated me. I stopped suddenly, having a disposition to retreat. But on one moment's reflection I determined I would not be a coward, and thinking at the same time, that the good Lord would be with me. I started on again. I crossed the creek, & very soon lost my hatin the violence of the tempest, & it was with difficulty that I found it. I then started up the hill, and when I reached the top, the storm fully met me: also my horse became very much frightened. The thunder rolled, the zigzag lightning appeared to play over and around me. The wind blew torrent-like; the standing timber appeared like so many whipstocks around me; and the noise of the crash of timber was great. And by the aid of the vivid light dancing about me, I saw the waving timber whose roots refused to support them any longer, coming down just before me. This awful scene robbed me of my faith of getting through, and I thought here I must die. Here I wheeled my horse, thinking to go back, but this seemed almost impossible. Yet I determined to go as long as I could. Down the hill I went, my horse being blinded by the lightning, I could not keep him in the road. He run against trees, fell over stumps, and finally reaching the bottom of the hill, he came full speed against a log as high as his breast. By this sudden stoppage, I was precipitated into the mud. I got up as soon as I could. But here I was without a horse. Yet thank God, soon appeared one of those zigzag streams, displaying its vivid brightness, through which I was enabled to see my horse just over the log. He was afraid to move. I caught him and led him for a short distance, but soon found that my saddle was missing. I did not stop to hunt it, but went on my way, but thanks be to God, I got back to a house, no little muddy and wet. I took shelter till the storm was over, when I proceeded home, reaching there without much trouble. I went to bed but soon found myself very sick; but by medicine and good nursing I soon got better.

News of the Week.

THE YUCATAN HORRORS.—Mr. Sierra, the commissioner in Washington, from Yucatan, has received very distressing accounts from his country. The Union publishes his account of the barbarities committed by the Indians. The account of the atrocities committed in the city of Valladolid is shocking to repeat:—a hundred and seventy-one women and children pent up in an enclosure, where, to the sound of music and obscene songs, they suffered every brutality, and, after, prolonged torments, which lasted thirteen hours, were all murdered. More than thirty thousand men, women and children, without means of defence, have been assassinated in the frontier settlements and villages.—Baltimore Sun.

TIN MINE.—The Patriot states that a large bed of metalic ore, said to contain a rich per centage of tin, has been discovered in the lot of Mr. Wm. Merryman, in Baltimore county, about 23 miles from this city, upon the Bushcabin run, a tributary to the western prong of the Gunpowder, river. The land in the vicinity is noted for its mineral productions, and is probably an extension of the great metalic belt which traverses the Union, in a north-easterly and south-westerly direction, passing through the mountainous districts of the States of Virginia North Carolina, Tennessee and Georgia.—Balt. Sun.

aring Robbery—Nearly $4,000 Stolen.

A man went into the wholesale liquor store of Ir. Wesjohann, on Broadway, below Congress, Yesterday morning, and stated that he wished to purchase a quantity of liquors. Mr. W. went up stairs with the stranger to show him his stock, and while there, the counting room was entered by some person below, and between $3,000 and $4,000 in money, stolen from the safe! Mr. W. had intended to deposite the money immediately in one of the Banks, and intended to do so when the stranger came in. Of the amount stolen, Mr. W. is able to designate twelve.one hundred dollar bills on the State Bank of Indiana, one of which was cut in two, and marked with ink.—The remainder were notes on South Carolina, Tennessee and Ohio banks. A reward of five hundred dollars is offered for the detection of the thief and recovery of the money.

The thief opened the desk with a false key, and took from it the key of the iron safe, with which he obtained access to the money. The bank book of Mr. Wesjahonn, was found in the alley south of the Broadway Hotel, rendering it a matter of certainty, that the fellow passed that way.—Cin. Com.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A man named Bateman, a lumber-man, belonging to Beaver, Pa., died suddenly yesterday morning, on a flat boat lying below Race street. He had, up to the few moments preceding his death, been in apparent good health. He was addicted to habits of intemperance.—Cin. Com.

FATAL CASUALTY.—A son of Mr. Thornton, (of the firm of Thornton & Howe, leather dealers,) aged about 5 years, was killed yesterday afternoon. He was standing in the ring at the bark mill, and struck in the head by the beam to which the horse was attached, breaking his skull.—Cin. Com.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE—SERIOUS ACCIDENT—ROBBERY—DEATH, &c.

New York, May 3—8 P. M.

The loss by the fire at Albany on Monday last is estimated at $150,000.

Another fire occurred in Albany this morning. It broke out at 3 o'clock in the extensive stables of Mr. McCoy, which were entirely destroyed. Fourteen horses, belonging to different persons, strangers who were sojourning in the city, perished in the flames.

The foreman of the press-room in the New York Journal of Commerce office, unfortunately fell through the hatchway to the lower story of the building this morning, and was very seriously if not fatally injured.

The President of the Newark Banking Insurance Company was robbed to-day while on his way to New York, of the very large sum of 49,000 dollars. The robbers have thus far escaped undetected.

John Oliver, a deaf and dumb man, and partially blind, was killed this morning on the Camden and New York railroad, four miles above Camden, by the cars running over him. No blame, it is said, can be attached to the conductor.—Balt. Sun.

NEW COUNTIES.—The Ohio Legislature at its late session, established two new counties, which make the whole number now in the State, just eighty-five.

1. Auglaize county is formed out of parts of Allen and Mercer, and its seat of justice will probably be established at the old Indian village called Wapaughkonnetta.

2. Morrow county is formed out of parts of Crawford, Knox, Richland, Delaware, and Marion, and it is expected that the village of Mt. Gilead will be its county town.—O. Patriot.

GREAT FIRE AT DETROIT!—150 HOUSES DESTROYED!!—About nine o'clock on Tuesday morning last, a fire broke out in the frame building in the city of Detroit, which before the flames could be arrested, destroyed between eight and nine squares of that city. The wind was blowing a gale from the south-east at the time, and the fire spread so rapidly that every thing in its course was swept away by the devouring element. The 3 squares lying between Bates and Randolph streets were nearly consumed—three between Randolph and Brush totally, and those between Brush and Beaubien partly destroyed.—Among the property destroyed were four Hotels and two Warehouses. It is said that the greatest distress and destitution must follow this calamity, as it falls upon a portion of the city least able to bear the affliction. Hundreds of families did not save anything from their household stock.—The total loss is not estimated, but it must be immense.—Urbana Gazette.

St. Louis, May 10.

FIRE AT ST. LOUIS.—There was a destructive fire on the landing this morning about 2 o'clock, which destroyed four steamboats. The Mail, valued at $6000 insured for $3400. The Lightfoot, valued at $6000—insured for $4000. The Mary, valued at $20,000 insured for $16,000.—The Missouri Mail, valued at $6,000—insured for $1000. The fire originated in the ladies' cabin of the Mail. The Cincinnati firemen were "on hand"—Cin. Enq.

ACCIDENT.—A young man named John Reddy, a shoemaker, met with a shocking accident on the Portage road on Monday last, which resulted in his death. The facts as near as we could ascertain them, are, that Reddy got upon the front bumping beam of an ascending car at Plane No. 2, and rode to the head. While entering the shed, he attempted to get off, but in so doing he slipped and fell under the car, one wheel of which passed over his thigh. On Tuesday evening his leg was amputated, and in half an hour afterwards he died. He was buried at Jefferson on Wednesday.—Pittsburgh Commercial Journal.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.—A terrible accident occurred yesterday, on the Monongahela, opposite Birmingham. A wedding party, consisting of seven persons, among whom was one lady, the bride, were crossing the river above the dam, when the boat passed over the dam, and four of the men were drowned. The bridegroom was lost, but the lady through the exertions of Captain Van Wrede, was saved. We could not ascertain the names, but will do so for to-morrow's paper.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

Slackwater Navigation.—Books will be opened in Pittsburgh on the 2d day of June, for subscriptions to the slacking of the Youghiogheny river, from West Newton to Connellsville. The Post says: The dams, two in number, are now under contract, McKeesport to West Newton.—These improvements, when completed, will make good steamboat navigation sixty miles on the direct route to Baltimore; consequently, shortening the railroad so much as to insure its completion at an early day.

A Just Decision.—Judge Patton, of the Pittsburg Criminal Court, has decided that when a man becomes a habitual drunkard, after taking an apprentice, the fact gives the latter a legal and sufficient claim to release.

Emancipation.

A nation is only worthy of freedom which regards the right of all men to be free. The Republic of France have done this, and by this act alone they have given to the world the fullest assurance that the people of France are prepared for the full enjoyment of civil liberty.

The following is the Address which has been transmitted to the Planters in the Colonies, by the Provisional Government:—

TO OUR BRETHREN IN THE COLONIES.

'In presence of the noble and generous victory of the people, whence spring liberty for all, we recommend our brethren in the colonies to remain calm and tranquil. They will thus give to the Provisional Government, which is composed of citizens devoted to the cause of emancipation, the power and liberty of mind which is necessary for the preparations of this great and humane measure. Soon there will be neither master nor slave in the colonies. The republic will give the latter to France as new citizens. But it is necessary that each should well understand the rights and duties conferred upon them by the name of citizen. We must all, by our love of order, labor, and true liberty, prove ourselves equally worthy of that name with the heroic people of Paris. We must by our calmness and moderation, teach not merely France, but the whole world, that we are capable of making the greatest sacrifices, and exercising the greatest self-denial, in order to obtain liberty. Impatience would spoil everything.

'We recommend the negroes to put confidence in the whites; the whites to trust the negroes; & all classes to put confidence in the government. We advise the former to consider of their duty, as good citizens, to forget the past, and the latter to make the most sincere and loyal preparation for the new era on which we are about to enter.

'Let us hope that the free will of the planters will cause the whip to disappear from all the plantations. A generous beginning alone can assure gratitude.

'We must facilitate the task of government by making large concessions to the laborers, and employ ourselves dilegently and without delay to the organization of labor. This great and noble problem, which it will be the endeavor of the Republic to solve, is much more easy of solution in the colonies than in France. The intelligent men of the country would, therefore, be wanting in their most important duty as citizens, if they did not hasten, from this time forth, to devote themselves frankly and legally to the task, in order that the most important element of universal happiness may result therefrom.

'Let this grand devise of civilization, order, liberty, include all men, of all complexions.—Let every one well weigh its terms in his conscience, and consult his heart, in order to pursue its realization with all the force which he has at his disposal. Order leads to liberty, and liberty conducts to universal brotherhood.

'Let us chase from our minds the evil passions which might lead us away from the pursuit of this great object: we have no longer to fight for, or defend liberty, but rather to prepare and to organize it.

'To work, then, without further delay! but to work with the proper tools. We know of no sacrifice too great for obtaining this end, and if, hitherto, we have made some little progress towards it by our efforts, the only recompense which we ask from our compatriots is, that they should not act precipitately, but should place implicit confidence in our devotion, which will never fail them.

'To conclude, we have no right to carry the flag of liberty to the colonies; not more has the Provisional Government. But we feel convinced that this will be one of the first acts of the Constituent Assembly. We therefore recommend to all, patience, hope, union, order, and labor.

A. F. PERRINON,
Captain of the Marine Artillery.'

We were much amused a few days since, with a little boy, upon whom his mother was inflicting personal chastisement. "Give me one or two more licks, mother; I don't think I can behave well yet."

The British Government have resolved upon sending out properly qualified schoolmasters and schoolmistresses the colonies in different parts of the world, to conduct the public schools established there for the instruction of the natives.

RELIGION AWAY FROM HOME.—A religious paper published in New Orleans urges Christians coming there, to bring their religion with them, as it will be needed more than ever. Religion in that city, it says, has received its worst wounds at the hands of its professors.

A DAY OF DISASTERS.—During Sunday and Sunday night week, accidents ocurred on six of the seven railroads between this city and Buffalo! We have already given the particulars of the fatal accident on the Utica and Schenectady road. The Syracuse and Utica road was flooded near Syracuse, by a break in the canal. The train ran off the track from one of the switches on the Syracuse and Auburn road. A similar accident occurred on the Auburn and Rochester road. Between Rochester and Batavia the locomotive was thrown off by a snake-head; and on the Attica and Buffalo road two engines were thrown off the track by running over cattle.—With regard to the fatal affair on the Utica and Schenectady road, the Coroner's Jury say that the collision was the result of gross carelessness in the agents in not giving proper and definite directions to their conductors and engineers, and particularly to the engineer and conductor, of the freight train going west, and which came in collision with the passenger train; and also, in part to the culpable carelessness of Joseph Armstrong, the engineer of the freight train. Armstrong has been arrested.—Balt. Sun.

Liberal Bequests.—The late Isaac Baugher Esq., of Frederick county Md., by his will liberated all his slaves, and bequeathed $2,000 to the Parent Education Society of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, located at Gettysburgh, Adams county, Pa.; $500 to the Theological seminary, located at Gettysburgh, Adams county, Pa.; $500 to Pennsylvania College, located at Gettysburgh, Adams county Pa.; $500 to the American Tract Society, located at New York; and $500 to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. So we learn from the Frederick Examiner.

TIMBER MINING IN NEW JERSEY.—On the north side of Maurice creek, New Jersey, the meadows and cedar swamps, as far up as the fast land, are filled with buried cedars to an unknown depth. In 1814 or 1815 an attempt was made to sink a well curb near Dennis creek landing, but, after encountering much difficulty in cutting through a number of logs, the workmen were compelled at last to give up the attempt by finding, at the depth of twenty feet, a compact mass of cedar logs. It is a constant business near Dennis creek to "mine cedar shingles."

Another Mark of Progress.

The cold heart of Russia is softening under the truth and humanity of the age. When we see the spirit of freedom and progress infusing its influence into the hard and despotic institutions of that empire, who will not be encouraged? Who will not catch the inspiration of fresh, hopes, and with new zeal and holy consecration, plunge again into the great moral conflict between liberty and oppression. There is great cheer to the heart of the working reformer, in the following brief paragraph. It is not time to dispair, when from the darkness of absolute despotism leaps forth the flame of freedom.—Penn. Freeman.

A STEP TOWARDS EMANCIPATION IN RUSSIA.

The Frankfort Gazette of the 21st ult., publishes an imperial Ukase of the Emperior Nicholas, dated St. Petersburgh, 20th ultimo, which permits the present serfs throughout the monarchy, to purchase the property of their masters, when sold by public auction. By such purchase, they acquire all the rights attached to the property. This is a very important movement.

AND YET ANOTHER.

HOLLAND.—of this country the Reporter says: We are happy to be able to inform our friends that the anti-slavery body in Holland have been engaged in promoting a petition to the king, who is represented as by no means unfavorably disposed to the anti-slavery cause. Our correspondent states that the petition was "signed by a multitude of persons." We trust this movement will be succeeded by others equally energetic. We are also pleased that our excellent friend, Dr. Carove, late of Frankfort, is occupying himself in organizing an anti-slavery movement in Germany; we shall be delighted to find that he succeeds in accomplishing the object of his benevolent labors.

The Pittsburgh and Louisville Telegraph.

There has been some complaint among persons doing business with this line, at the way offices, on account of the delays which, not seldom, have occurred in the transmission of their despatches. These delays have been principally occasioned by the act of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Louisville, the main station, in occupying, indeed monopolizing, the line to the exclusion of way business. To obviate this difficulty, and to remove all cause of complaint arising from it, the Trustees now propose to put up the second wire, as provided for in the original contract. This done, one wire will belong to the main offices, and the other to the way offices, exclusively. Delays, from that time, will not be complained of, especially since the second wire is being added from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia, and from the latter point to New York, two lines are already in operation.—Zanesville Courier.

Narrow Escapes.—A young gentleman left Kingston for this city on Monday last on board the Niagara; was wrecked, and after 12 hours of great peril, escaped to the shore by means of a rope. He then took the cars at Rochester—the same train that run off the track, upset in a smash, and killed two men. By an extra train he arrived at Buffalo and took the steamer Ohio for this place. The Ohio broke her crank off at Erie and was towed back to Buffalo. He then took passage on the Saratoga, which met with an accident, and was detained several hours in Erie for repairs. He arrived in this city yesterday morning.—Clev. Plain Dealer.

The Great Central Route.—The Wheeling Times, of Friday, has the following:

The advantage of the evening train of cars on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, is now being sensibly felt by the travelling public. It is often late in the day when the packets arrive here from the South, passengers then take the stages, and travel by night over the smooth road from here to Brownsville, and only enter the mountains after daylight. They reach Cumberland at seven P. M., and go right on board the cars for Baltimore, being out but one day. They then reach New York in forty-eight hours from Wheeling, or in eighty-four hours from Cincinnati. This is still the shortest and cheapest route eastward by 20 per cent.

Arrival Extraordinary.—The New York Courier and Enquirer notices the arrival at New-York of the brig Walhonding, Captain Higgins, from Marietta, O., from which place she sailed on the 26th of March last. Her cargo of flour was shipped at Madison, Indiana, and descending the Mississippi, she arrived at New Orleans on the 15th of April.

German Patriot.—C. B. Rumburg, editor of the Philadelphier Demokrat, (German paper,) left yesterday for the Fatherland, to take part in the revolutionary movement.

Accident and Death.—While some children were playing on the burnt district, Albany, New York, on Saturday morning, the rear wall of the Missionary Church fell and buried one or more of them.

One boarding house keeper has been arrested and fined $50, under the new immigrant law, for extorting money from immigrants. We hope that the sharks, who have so long and so boldly preyed upon the poor emigrants, will now receive their deserts.—N. Y. Sun.

A letter from St. Johns, New Brunswick, under date of April 17, says: "The Nova Scotia Legislature has authorised the government to construct the telegraph line from Halifax to Nova Scotia boundary, as a government measure, and appropriated about $12,000 for it." A committee was appointed to have the line built.

RELIGIOUS.—A delegation of Reverend gentlemen belonging to the Moravian Church, amongst whom are the Rt. Rev. Mr. Van Vleck, Rev. Mr. Bigler, pastor of the church in New-York City, and others of distinction, leave for England in the Acadia to-day, en route for Hernhuth, in Saxony, where they represent the Moravians of this country in a conference that is held once in many years by the members of that Society throughout the world.

A Revolutionary Patriot Gone.—Under our obituary head will be noticed the death of Col. Schuchtz, a patriot of the Revolution, in the 96th year of his age. Col. S. was an officer of the Pennsylvania troops in the Revolution, and was present at the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Tremon, and perhaps others, in one which he was wounded. He was also among the defenders of Baltimore in the last war. He died suddenly, having been out on the street on Sunday last.—Baltimore Sun.

The grocery store of Mr. John Baur, near the Mad River Rail Road office, at Sandusky city, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday last. Some German emigrants who were stopping at the house lost a large amount of coin some 700 or 800 of which was recovered from the ruins after the fire.—Urb. Gazette.

A Valuable Article.

Mr. William Blake, of Akron, Ohio, called on us two or three days ago, and exhibited an article that must we think, become of great value. It was discovered some time since in the town of Sharon, Ohio, and is taken from an excavation in a rock about twenty feet deep, and spread over some six or eight acres. The substance is black, and resembles indigo, and about the consistency of cold tallow, when taken from the mine, but an exposure of a few days to the atmosphere, turns it to a hard slate or stone. It has been found upon analization to contain one half silica, one fourth alumina, and one eighth pyrites of iron, with lesser proportions of magnesia, lime and carbon. From the extraordinary character of the article, it is supposed by geologists who have visited the mine that there must be some fissure or crevice in the bottom of the ditch, through which the article, in a liquid state, was ejected from below.

When the substance is taken out, dried, ground to a fine powder, mixed with linseed oil, and applied with a brush to either wood, tin, iron, or cloth, paper or bricks, and then exposed a few months to the atmosphere, it becomes a perfect slate, impervious to the action of the weather or fire; the weather serving only to turn it to stone, and rendering it harder the longer it is exposed, while fire will char the substance to which it is applied before it will give way.

We were shown specimens upon cloth and wood that were as fine specimens of school slate as we have ever seen, and would show pencil marks equally well. It is also susceptible of the highest polish, as we saw a piece upon wood that was polished, and had the appearance of the finest Egyptian black marble. The article, is of great value, we should suppose, for covering roofs, steam boats, dams, fences, buildings, and everything else requiring protection from fire or the weather, or for fire fronts, carriages, or centre or pier tables, as it is in fact slate in a liquid state when applied, and in a few months acquires the solidity of the finest slate.

We learn from Mr. Blake, who has secured a patent for his discovery, that it is sold at his place $3 per 100 lds., which will cover the roof of a building 30 feet square, or 900 superficial feet.

The Sandy & Beaver Canal was opened on the 8th inst. and freight and passenger boats are running regularly. Passengers leaving here in the morning by Steamers can take the packet, at Glasgow, in the evening, arrive at New Lisbon next morning; thereby avoiding the bad roads from the Ohio river to New Lisbon. This is no slight accommodation to the citizens of Starke, Wayne, Columbiana, Tuscarawas, & other western counties of Ohio.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

BEAUTIFUL.—There is nothing purer than honesty; nothing sweeter than charity; nothing warmer than love; nothing brighter than virtue; and nothing more steadfast than faith. These united in one mind form the purest, the sweetest, the richest, the brightest and most steadfast happiness.

TERRIFIC ACCIDENT.—We learned, last evening, that a Harrison wagon containing a family, while descending the Mount Auburn hill, was, by the horse taking fright and starting, dashed over a precipice, crushed to atoms, and those inside more or less injured,—one a girl, it was tho't dangerously. The horse, we are informed was killed. We could learn no names.—Cincinnati Commercial.

ROBBERY.—The Steamer Swiss Boy, now at our wharf was robbed of about $100, last Saturday night. The money was taken from the Clerk's office. No clue has yet been obtained for the detection of the thief.—Pittsburgh Commercial Journal.

New subscribers this week, 3. Discontinuances, 3.

Br. S. W. Widney, (in answer to your enquiry) ten new subscribers all paying in advance, shall have the paper for $15,00, or at the rate of $1.50 each.

The Postmaster at Shelbyville, Ia., notifies us that S Updegraff does not take his paper from the office, "Reason, he has run away." That subscriber owes for vols. 6,7, 8 & 9, of the Western Recorder. How unwise we are sometimes in sending to delinquents. Now the next who serves us in this way, we intend to advertise to all printers and publishers, in all places where runaways may come, that they take warning not to receive him as a subscriber.

We inform our friend L. D. that the Memoria Technica did not come on as we expected.

The P. M. at Point Commerce, Ia., notifies us that Amos Dickeson some time since paid up and desired his paper stopped. We have sent eight numbers over the volume, and have had no word from the agent about the pay. We suppose he has been waiting to get $10 to send.—Don't wait too long, Br. B.

The P. M. at Blue Rock, O., notifies us that H. Price has not taken his paper from the office since the 1st of Dec. He owes us for vols. 8 & 9. Brother Warren, please see to this case. Will you?

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have conclu ded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encournging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	18
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chaneyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	5
Rev. A. S. Robinson, Ridgefield Four Cor. O.	7
Rev. J. Nichols, Hoskinsville, O.	5
Rev. R. M. Dalbey, Bethel, O.	5
Rev. O. P. Stephens, Catawba, O.	5
Rev. C. H. Williams, Bournville, O.	5
Rev. S. P. Kezerta, Bainbridge, O.,	5
Rev. T. Finkbine, Cincinnati, O.,	7
Rev. W. G. Fowler, Paintersville, O.	6.
Rev. V. Lucas, Johnstown, Pa.,	5
Rev. W. Hatfield, Alum Creek, O.	5

☞We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If the subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, the publishers may continue to send them till all cash charges are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the offices to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have settled their bill, and order their paper discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publishers, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The Courts have decided that refusing to take a paper or periodical from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.

This law declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or persons with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post Office, Store, or any other place of deposite, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Storekeeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office

PROSPECTUS OF THE

Fourth Volume of the American Pulpit.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT is a Monthly Magazine, published in the city of Worcester, Massachusetts. It contains thirty-two pages in each number, and will be well supplied with that kind of Literature which is adapted to Ministers and Theological Students, such as Sermons, Sketches, Essays, Biographies, &c. &c.

The leading Sermon, will be of the highest order; and all the Sermons, we intend, shall bear the stamp of superiority. They will be sought, and obtained, so far as it is possible, from the most eminent Divines, on the American Continent. Arrangements are already made to accomplish this end; and no reasonable pains or expense will be spared, to make this department of the Pulpit superior to anything of the kind in existence.

The Sketches will be of the first class. We have accepted the proposals of an eminent minister in England to supply this department, partially—the Rev J RYLAND, D D, of London, author of "Pulpit Cyclopedia;" &c &c. By securing the correspondence of Dr Burns, the patrons of the Pulpit will enjoy a fine opportunity of comparing British and American talent in the same pages.

In the Miscellaneous Department will be found, Essays, Biographical Sketches, Poetry, and such et ceteras as shall enhance the value of the work.

The Pulpit is edited by

REV J D BRIDGE,

who will spare no pains to render it not only a welcome visiter to the Minister's study, but a 'profitable' one.—The work is evangelical in its character, and will avoid all controversy, except with sin and the popular errors of the day.

Its patrons, hitherto, have been gathered from all of the orthodox denominations in the country, all of whom the Publisher hopes to return. And we wish it distinctly understood, that Ministers in all the evangelical denominations are invited to become contributors to the pages of he Pulpit. We solicit from them, Sermons, Sketches of Sermons, or Criticisms, on any subject within the compass of Homiletics; and, that no one may feel embarrased in his desire to accept this invitation, we shall dispense with the "List of Contributors" which has formerly appeared on our cover. We do this not out of any disrespect to any of the worthy names in that List, but that others may not be deterred from contributing, because not numbered in the distinguished catalogue.

By far the largest amount of matter contained in the Pulpit will be 'original;' but it will also be enriched by choice 'selections' from Books and periodicals.

Terms--One Dollar Per Annum, in Advance.

The Pulpit will be mailed regularly during the latter part of the month preceding that of its publication, so that it may reach its destination, in ordinary cases, by the first of each month.

We solicit Agents for the work. We will allow them a reasonable and just compensation for their services, and we authorize all the ministers of every evangelical denomination, and all laymen who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and who desire the extension of his kingdom on earth, to co-operate with us in extending the circulation of this work.

All orders for the work and all remittances for the same should be addressed to

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota to the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS —The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

O Turn Ye.

I.

O turn ye, O turn ye, for why will ye die,
When God in great mercy is coming so nigh?
Since Jesus invites you, the Spirit says, Come,
And Angels are waiting to welcome you home.

II.

How vain the delusion, that while you delay,
Your hearts may grow better by staying away?
Come wretched, come starving, come just as you be,
While streams of salvation are flowing so free.

III.

And now Christ is ready your souls to receive;
O how can you question! believe, O, believe!
If sin is your burden, why will ye not come!
'Tis you he bids welcome; he bids you come home.

IV.

In riches, in pleasures, what can you obtain
To soothe your affliction, or banish your pain?
To bear up your spirit, when summoned to die,
Or to waft you to mansions of glory on high?

V.

Why will you be starving and feeding on air?
There's mercy in Jesus, enough and to spare;
If still you are doubting, make trial and see,
And prove that his mercy is boundless and free.

VI.

Come, give us your hand and the Saviour your heart,
And trusting in Heaven, we never shall part;
O how can we leave you? why will you not come?
We'll journey together, and soon be at home!

The Restrictive Rule--Per Contra.

NO. V.

MR. EDITOR,—We now propose to dedicate a few numbers to specially reviewing the arguments of Prudentia. It certainly cannot be expected, however, that we can do any thing more than merely glance at the subject. To enter fully into the great profundity obscure would require more time than we are willing to sacrifice to the question, or, indeed, than its importance demands. We shall not attend to any consecutive order in this review, but shall refer to his arguments as we may happen to light upon them.—Our author reasons:

"Itinerancy is a creature of circumstances; the circumstances which introduced it have now ceased, and it is evident the plan has had its day of great usefulness. Circumstances in this country now call for something different."

Why did not our worthy and enlightened author give us a list of those "circumstances" which have 'ceased' as well as the 'circumstances' which are "now calling so loudly for something else." This declaration about "circumstances," past and present, is a very important one, and we do not feel disposed to take it for granted upon the mere epsidixit of an inexperienced young man. We want facts. We cannot take declaration for argument . . . . Name the "circumstances" if you please. We know of no "circumstances" which more urgently require an itinerant system than a newly organized church, or a sparsely populated country. And if these do not exist in our case, where did they ever exist? We see no essential difference in the "circumstances" of this "day" from the "day of great usefulness" of the "itinerancy," save that the ministry are becoming a little depreciated, and of course are inclined to seek their own ease more, and the interests of the church less.

Again; "For what reason it became a law that no minister should remain in the same field of labor for a longer period than one or two years I have not yet learned. I doubt, very much, whether it was for any sufficient reason." —"If that rule is not a sensless thing then I do not think correctly. I never have seen any reason for it and I never expect to."

Perhaps you have not discrimination enough to "see" a reason when offered. Now for so young a man as this to say that the European Methodists, the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the convention which organized the Methodist Protestant Church, acted without either "sense" or "reason" in adopting a restrictive itinerancy, evinces, as we think, such an amount of self consequence as merits rebuking. There is probably not a sister in the church but what knows that the Restrictive Rule prevents ambitious ministers from using an undue influence to be continued where majorities or minorities do not want them, and where their stay would be ruinous; that by separating preachers and people who do not live peaceably together it often restores harmony to the church; that it imitates the dispensations of our heavenly Father who sends his blessings round upon the rich and upon the poor, upon the bond and upon the free, so this rule sends these interesting young men to the city and the country, to the mountain and to the valley, to the learned the unlearned; that every part of the church may enjoy the benefits of their talented labors. If such considerations do not amount to "a reason," what is "reason?" But it is very little use to "reason" with Prudentia, as he sees by "naural instinct," as his name imports, the Restrictive Rule is an "arbitrary blind law that never was of any use and never will be." What a great pity that our friend had not lived a century ago; he might have been instrumental in saving the world from all the "despotism" of this "arbitrary and tyranical law," which "tyrant like" stands in the way of these amiable young men, curbing their ambition and keeping it within entirely too narrow bounds.

We quote once more;—Reforms are hardly ever presented, by the first projectors of them, perfect at once. They may present many things that are good—sometimes very many,—but generally have much more to be presented." * * * "The infant church is growing up to manhood, & seeking to loose the imperfections of the child. We may now be prepared to throw off this yoke of bondage."

Now the plain meaning of all this is, when translated into English, that the convention which established the government of the Methodist Protestant Church were a more set of "children," who founded a system which had a few good things in it, but their fundamental laws are "tyranical" & "oppressive." But since this lovely corps, viz: Captain Joseph Burns, Lieutenant John Scott (the former having made, in the Pittsburgh Conference, the first motion on this subject, which was seconed by the latter,) and Bros. Maynard, Hoagland, Davis, and a few other similar spirits, who constitute the rank and file, have grown up to "manhood," they are competent to rid the church of the "imperfections of the child," perfect her government and break asunder this "yoke of bondage." O! that kind heaven would save us all!

Our brother says, of the Restrictive Rule;—"It is inconsistent with the genius of our free institutions;" he calls it a "little tyrant," "tyrant like," "arbitrary sway," "a yoke of bondage," "arbitrary rule," "Monarch," and by a number more similar degrading epithets, all in about six or eight inches of one column; as though he inclined by sheer dint of slander to render the rule odious and contemptable. And this is a specimen of the kind of arguments, or rather slang that is kept up through the whole of his essays against it, which betrays the fact that he has a great amount of malignance against this rule; so much so that he would not be considered, in any court of justice, a competent judge in the case. And pray what has this poor rule done to merit all this abuse? We can see nothing under the sun, save that it stands in the way of his ambition. And probably this is sufficient to account for all the vituperation against it.

We wish now to say a word in vindication of this rule from the charge of "tyranny." What is tyranny? "As absolute monarchy imperially administered. Unrestrained and cruel power. Severity. Rigor." Todd's Johnson. Is there any thing in this rule which answer to any of these definitions? Is it not a mere creature of the people themselves, standing as a sentinel upon the walls and fullfiling their behest? Or does our worthy brother mean to say that the people have no right to adopt a rule of action, without the charge of "tyranny," unless they first obtain the consent of him and his associates?—There never was a rule adopted by much more unanimity than was the Restrictive Rule by the Convention of 1830. And there is probably at this time, the declaration of the boys to the contrary notwithstanding, nineteen out of twenty, if not ninety-nine out of a hundred, who approve of this rule. Therefore the charge of "tyranny" and "despotism," against the rule, is virtually a charge against the church. She is the "tyrant" because she will not let a few young men have their own head.

Now the real ground of all this difficulty, is, no doubt, the boys have been too much petted by them mamma's, and in this way so spoiled that you cannot get along with them agreeably without granting them special privileges. And such are very apt when they cannot be gratified, like the baulky horse, to throw themselves, cut the gears, or be off some where else. Such, exactly, was the fate of Prudentia's valiant hero who stood alone, a few years since, in his opposition to this "tyrant" rule.

Yours, &c.,

Restrictive Rule—Rev. C. Springer.

NO. I.

MR. EDITOR: "The mouth that lacketh arguments, is filled with abuse." This declaration is verified by the Rev. C. Springer's first article on the "Restrictive Rule." A number of brethren have incurred his displeasure, by being independent enough to differ from him in their opinions. Instead of pointing out the error of their sentiments, in his first article, he has endeavored to traduce their characters. In this he has manifested considerable knowledge of human nature. Many minds are more ready to hearken to personal reflections, or slander, than to truth; and if they can be prejudiced against the supporters of any cause, they will very easily, and almost naturally, transfer their prejudices to the cause itself.

The article under consideration, almost in its very commencement, contains, at least so far as the writer of this is concerned, a gross misrepresentation. It asserts that T. A. Davis, Jno. Scott, Joseph Burns, E. S. Hoagland, and Washington Maynard, and probably some others, "are the men who 'have agreed to discuss the expediency of the Restrictive Rule.'" The connection clearly shows the sense in which the writer understood the word "agreed"—for he speaks of the above named persons as forming a leaugue, for the aforesaid purpose. I cannot speak for other brethren, but so far as I am concerned, there has not been, and there is not now, any such agreement between the other brethren named and myself, to discuss the subject of a restrictive itinerancy. In this particular, then, the venerable gentleman, notwithstanding his great age, has written about that of which he was ignorant, and asserted for true, that, the truth of which he did not know.

The principal object of the article appears to be, to impeach the motives of those who differ from him in opinion, upon the subject under consideration, and to ridicule their intelligence.

"Judge not that ye be not judged," is a plain and positive precept of the divine Teacher of men. We may judge of the influence and tendency of men's principles, but God only can know and truly judge of their motives. The Rev. Gentleman, however, appears to have forgotton that it is God alone that searcheth the heart; for he has presumed to enter its secret recesses, and has attempted to reveal the influences and motives which actuate those who cannot see as he sees, and believe as he believes. He asserts that they are influenced by pride, and intimates that they have fallen into the condemnation of the devil. That they have incurred his displeasure is evident; but that they have fallen into the condemnation of the devil, I am charitable enough to think does not so clearly appear. In his estimation it certainly manifests a great degree of pride and arrogance for men to think for themselves, and refuse to bow down their reason to his infallible dictation! His remarks are calculated to produce a false impression—that the opposers of the Rule believe the "Fathers of Methodism" to have been "a set of ignoramuses." And why? Because they conceive that they, though wise and good, like all other men, the Rev. Gentleman himself not excepted, were fallible and erring creatures. Honored be the memory of those venerable men! They did much, very much, but who could reasonably have expected them to do all? The system they devised is excellent, but like every human production, it is imperfect. Good, but imperfect men devised it, and the effect is like its cause. Because, therefore, they refuse to acknowledge the "Fathers of Methodism," of which the Rev. Gentleman is one, to have been infallible, they are accused of denouncing them as "a set of ignoramuses;" and of being puffed up with pride, and having fallen into the condemnation of the devil. O! Modesty, where is thy blush!

But brethren are accused of being influenced by ambitious motive—that they are opposed to the restrictive clause in the Constitution—not because they conceive it to be injurious to the interests of the church and kingdom of Christ—but because it "lays in the way of their ambition." Truly may the Gentleman exclaim, "What an age we live in!" How prevalent that charity that "thinketh no evil!" Happy for the church and christian community, that there remains a few of the humble and unpretending "Fathers," to hold in check the rising ambition of the young.

In addition to the impulses of ambition, brethren are represented as opposing the "Restrictive Rule," to secure their own ease—to enable them to "itinerate the smooth pavements of our elegant cities, to repose on sofas and lounges of the rich, &c." The tastes of men are different, and while there are some who might prefer to "itinerate the smooth pavements of our elegant cities," there are others, perhaps, among whom is the writer, who would much prefer to follow the example of the Rev. Gentleman, and in retiring from the labors and toils of the itinerancy, to seek a home on some beautiful "Meadow Farm," and engage in the cultivation of fruit, almost equal, perhaps, to that produced by the earth before it was withered and blighted by the curse; and, when age would justify it, to correct the contumacy of brethren engaged in the active service of the church, and enlighten their minds on subjects of ecclesiastical polity.

While pride, ambition, and a love of ease, have been found by this human searcher of hearts, to be the motives that influence the opposers of the restrictive article, he has also discovered that their intelligence is exceedingly defective. He has found out that "Whether the Restrictive Rule be a good one or a bad one this company of young men have neither experience or discrimination enough to discern." It does not appear that he considers their intellectual powers as naturally defective, but as yet undeveloped.—He terms them "boys" in contradistinction from "men." And because they have not lived so long in the world as some of the "Fathers," they are considered incapable of either thinking or reasoning correctly. What a blessing that these 'lovely boys' have "men of age and experience," to think for them! This is without doubt the greatest discovery of the age—A thinking machine, for boys." It certainly must have been in view of this discovery that Paul wrote to Timothy, "Let no man despise thy youth."

The day has come when neither personal abuse, nor authoritative dictation, will silence rational investigation on any important subject.—Age and experience should be respected, but reason and truth should be venerated still more.—The aged may render themselves despicable; but the authority of reason and truth is forever the same. An argument offered by a young man, possesses as much weight with a candid mind as if offered by an old man. The old are not always wise; neither are the young always fools. For a man to claim respect for his arguments, because he is old, is to rest his cause on a circumstance merely accidental. The aged may and do err; but correct reason and truth never mislead. The worthy Gentlemen seems to uphold the authority of age;—we bow to the authority of reason and truth. If they are for us we will never quail,—but if against us, we will retract.

Thanking the gentleman for his kindness in proffering to enlighten our ignorance, we still prefer to think for ourselves—remembering that "every man will give an account of himself unto God."

Very Respectfully,

JOHN SCOTT.

A CARD.

BR. BASSETT: I see that the Rev. John Scott has called on you to publish my age in your paper, and that you have declined so to do. Supposing that our friend may have some curiosity, on this subject, which it may be proper to gratify, I will state for his information, in the language of Mr. Buck's man, that I am old enough to have "forgotten," on the subject of ecclesiastical economy, "more than he ever knew." Perhaps he will from this data, if good in figures, be able to make out my age.

If he would not think me too egotistical, there is another piece of information I should like to give our friend. I have been stationed in Pittsburgh, and one or two other places, and I am not conscious that it has had any deleterious influence upon my brain.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

A black snake, which had discovered the nest of a wood-pecker, climed up the tree, and putting his head into the hole, swallowed the woodpecker. Alas! when he would have withdrawn, he found his throat so much distended by his supper that he could not get back, and so he died with his whole length exposed dangling from the wood-pecker's hole, an admonition to all who passed by, not to get into a scrape until they had contrived how they could get out of it.

Western Sketches.

FRONTIER LIFE.

Moses Hewitt was a native of New England, the land of active and enterprising men, and born in Worcester, Massachusetts, in the year 1767. He removed to the waters of the Ohio, in 1790, in company with his uncle, Captain John Hewitt, soon after the settlement of the Ohio Company; at the breaking out of the Indian war, he resided on the Island now known by the name of "Blenerhasset," in the block-house of Captain James, where he married a cousin, the daughter of Captain Hewitt. After his marriage, he lived a short time at the mouth of the Little Kanawha, but as the Indians became dangerous, he joined the company of settlers at "Neil's station," a short distance above, on the same stream. At this period, all the settlements on both banks of the Ohio were broken up, and the inhabitants retired to their garrisons for mutual defence.

The garrison at the middle settlement, in Belprie, was called "Farmer's Castle," and was a strong stockaded defence, with comfortable dwelling-houses erected along the margin of the stout palisades which surrounded it. It stood near the bank of the Ohio river, on the waters of which nearly all the intercourse between the stations was conducted, in light canoes. At this garrison, Mr. Hewitt was a frequent visitor, but not an inmate. Some of the more fearless inhabitants, on the left bank, still continued to live in their own dwellings, considering themselves in a manner protected by the Ohio river, and by the vigilance of the "spies," who daily scoured the adjacent forests. Mr. Hewitt was, at this time, in the prime of life and manhood; possessed of a vigorous frame, nearly six feet high, with limbs of the finest mould, not surpassed by the Belvidere Appollo, for manly beauty. The hands and feet were small in proportion to the muscles of the arms and legs. Of their strength some estimate may be formed, when it is stated, that he could with a single hand, lift with ease a large blacksmith's anvil, by grasping the tapering horn that springs from its side. To this great muscular strength was added a quickness of motion, which gave to the dash of his fist the rapidity of thought, as it was driven into the face or breast of his adversary. The eye was coal black, small and sunken, but when excited or enraged, flashed fire like that of a tiger. The face and head were well developed, with such powerful masseter and temporal muscles, that the fingers of the strongest man, when once confined between his teeth, could no more be withdrawn than from the jaws of a vice.

With such physical powers, united to an unrefined and rather irritable mind, who shall wonder at his propensity for, and delight in personal combat; especially when placed in the midst of rude and unlettered companions, where courage and bodily strength were held in unlimited estimation. Accordingly, we find him engaged in numberless personal contests, in which he almost universally came off victorious. One instance of his activity and reckless daring took place at Marietta, about the year 1796. In some quarrel at a tavern, the vigor of his arm was laid so heavily upon one of his opponents, that serious apprehensions were felt for his life. Complaint was made to the magistrate and a warrant issued for his apprehension. Of this he had timely notice, and not relishing the inside of a jail at that inclement season of the year, it being in February, he started for the river, intending to cross into Virginia, out of the jurisdiction of the constable. It so happened that the rains on the head waters had raised the river to half bank, and broken up the ice, which completely covered the stream with fragments of all dimensions, so closely arranged that no canoe could be forced through them. Although late in the night there was yet the light of the moon, and rushing down the bank, with the constable and a numerous posse at his back, he leaped fearlessly on the floating ice, and floating from fragment to fragment with the activity of a fox, he reached the opposite shore in safety, about half a mile below the point where he commenced his perilous adventure. The constable, seeing the object of his pursuit afloat on the ice, came to a halt, concluding that, although he had escaped the penalty of the law, he could not avoid the fate which awaited him, and that he would certainly be drowned before he could gain shore. But, as fortune is said to favor the brave, he escaped without harm and his life was preserved for wise and providential purposes.

Sometime in the month of May, 1792, while living at Neil's station, on the Little Kanawha, Mr. Hewitt rose early in the morning and went out about a mile from the garrison in search of a stray horse, little expecting any Indians to be near, having heard of none in the vicinity for some time. He was sauntering along at his ease in an obscure cattle path, thinking more of his stray animal than of danger, when all at once three Indians sprang from behind two large trees, that stood, one on each side of the track, where they had been watching his approach. So suddenly was the onset, and so completely was he in their grasp, that resistance was in vain, and would probably have been the cause of his death. He therefore surrendered, thinking that in a few days he should find some way of escape. For himself, he felt but little cause of uneasiness;—his great concern was for his wife and child, from whom, with the yearnings of a father's heart, he was thus forcibly separated; and whom he might never see again.

In their progress to the towns on the Sandusky plains the Indians treated their prisoner, Hewitt, with as little harshness as could be expected. He was always confined at night by fastening his wrists and ancles to saplings, as he lay upon his back upon the ground, with an Indian on each side. By day his limbs were free but always marching with one Indian before, and two behind him. As they approached the prairies, frequent halts were made to search for honey, the wild bee being found in every hollow tree and often in the ground beneath decayed roots, in astonishing numbers. This afforded them many luscious repasts, of which the prisoner was allowed to partake. The naturalization of the honey bee to the forests of North America, since the colonization by the whites, is, in fact, the only real addition to its comforts, that the red man has ever received from the destroyer of his race; and this industrious insect, so fond of the society of man, seems also destined to destruction by the bee-moth, and like the buffalo and deer, will soon vanish from the woods and prairies of the west.

While the Indians were occupied in these searches, Hewitt closely watched an opportunity for escape, but his captors were equally vigilant. As they receded from the danger of pursuit, they became less hurried in their march, and often stopped to hunt and amuse themselves. The level prairie afforded fine ground for one of their favorite sports, the foot race. In this, Hewitt was invited to join, and soon found that he could easily outrun two of them, but the other was more than his match, which discouraged him from trying to escape, until a more favorable opportunity. They treated him familiarly, and were much pleased with his lively cheerful manners. After they had reached within one or two day's march of their village, they made a halt to hunt, and left their prisoner at their camp, although they had usually, taken him with them, as he complained of being sick. To make all safe, they placed him on his back, confining his wrists with stout thongs of raw-hide to saplings, and his legs raised to a considerable elevation, to a small tree. After they had been gone a short time, he began to put in operation the plan he had been meditating for escape, trusting that the thickness of his wrists, in comparison with the smallness of his hands, would enable him to withdraw them from the ligatures. After long and violent exertions, he succeeded in liberating his hands, but not without severely lacerating the skin and covering them with blood. His legs were next freed by untying them, but not without great effort from their elevation.

Once fairly at liberty, the first object was to secure some food for the long journey which was before him. But as the Indians larder is seldom well stocked, with all his search, he could only find two small pieces of jerked venison, not more than sufficient for a single meal. With this slight stock of provision, his body nearly naked, and without even a knife or tomahawk to assist in procuring more, he started for the settlements on the Muskingum, as the nearest point where he could meet with friends. It seems that the Indians returned to the camp soon after his escape, for that night while cautiously traversing a wood, he heard the creaking of a breaking twig, not far from him. Dropping silently on the ground where he stood, he beheld his three enemies in pursuit. To say that he was not agitated, would not be true; his senses were wide awake, and his heart beat quick, but it was a heart that never knew fear. It so happened that they passed a few yards to one side of him, and he remained unseen. As soon as they were at a sufficient distance, he altered his course, and saw no more of them.

Suffering every thing but death, from the exhausting effects of hunger and fatigue, he, after nine days, struck the waters of the big Muskingum, and came into the garrison, at Wolf creek mills. During this time he had no food but roots and the bark of the slippery elm, after the two bits of venison were expended. When he came in sight of the station, he was so completely exhausted that he could not stand or halloo. His body was entirely naked, except a small strip of cloth around his loins, and so torn, bloody and disfigured by the briars and brush, that he tho't it imprudent to show himself, lest he should be taken for an Indian, and shot by the sentries. It is a curious physiological fact, that famine and hunger will actually darken the skin in the manner mentioned by the prophet Jeremiah, when foretelling the fate of the Israelites; and may be accounted for by the absorption of the bile into the blood, when not used up in the process of digesting the food. In this forlorn state, Hewitt remained until evening, when he crawled silently to the gateway, which was open, and crept in before any one was aware of his being near. As they all had heard of his capture, and some personally knew him, he was instantly recognized by a young man, as the light of the fire fell on his face, who exclaimed, "Here is Hewitt."—They soon clothed and fed him, and his fine constitution directly restored his health.

The course pursued by Mr. Hewitt, was in the direcion of a favorite and well-known trail, or war path of the Indians, from Sandusky to the settlements on the Muskingum, and struck that river at a point called "Big Rock," from an enormous block of sandstone that had tumbled out of a cliff and lay on the shore. The line of the trail lay between the waters of the Muskingum and those of the Scioto, crossing some of the branches of both these rivers. The war paths of the Indians were generally known to the old hunters, as in times of peace there was considerable intercourse for trade and hunting between the borders and the Indian tribes. After the war was closed, by the masterly campaign of General Wayne, the sturdy settlers on the shore of the Ohio, sallied out from their garrisons, where they had been more or less closely confined for five years, and took possesion of the various farms, which had fallen to their lots, either as "donation lands," or as proprietors in the Ohio Company, some of which had been partially cleared and cultivated before the commencement of hostilities. During this period, they suffered from famine, sickness and death, in addition to the depredations of the Indians. The small pox and putrid sore throat, had both visited them in their garrisons, destroying, in some instances, whole families of children in a few days. The murderous savage without, with sickness and famine within, had made their castles wearisome dwelling-places, although they protected them from the tomahawk, and saved the settlements from being entirely broken up.

In the year 1797, Mr. Hewitt cast his lot in the valley of the Hockhocking river, near the town of Athens, and settled down to clearing his farm. He was by nature endowed with a clear, discriminating and vigorous mind; and, although his education very limited, extending only to reading and writing, yet his judgement was acute, and his reasoning powers highly matured by intercourse with his fellow-men. For some years before his death, he was a member of the Methodist church, which has the praise of reclaiming more depraved men than perhaps any other sect, and became a valuable citizen and useful man in society. A short time previous to his decease, which took place in the year 1814, he was appointed one of the trustees of the Ohio University at Athens. At that early time, the duties of a Trustee mainly consisted in leasing out and managing the fiscal affairs of the college domain, embracing two townships of land. For this business he was well fitted, and his judgement and good sense, were of real value to the institution, however little he might be qualified to act in literary matters.

The life of Mr. Hewitt affords an interesting subject of contemplation. Hundreds of others, who were among the western borders in early days, afford similar examples of reckless daring and outrageous acts, while surrounded with war, tumult and danger, who when peace was restored, and they returned to the quiet scenes of domestic and civil life, became some of the most useful, influential and distinguished men. It shows how much man is the creature of habit; and that he is often governed more by the character; and the outward example of men around him, and the times in which he lives, than by any innate principle of good or evil, which may happen to predominate within him.

Some years ago, the following notice was posted about the estate of Lord Camden:—"Notice to Sportsmen.—In consequence of the universal scarcity of game, Lord Camden does not intend to shoot himself, or any of his tenants until after the 25th instant."

A short but comprehensive prayer was once made by a Scotchman, as follows:—Keep my purse from the lawyer—my body from the doctor and my soul from the devil!" Nuff said.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation untilit is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. Selected Poetry.

VERSES.

We all do fade as a leaf.—Bible.

Fading, fading, all are fading—
No substantial thing is here;
Loved ones leave us—we are passing,
Passing to another sphere.

Beauty with her 'customed smilings,
And her love-inspiring eye,
Fadeth, like the day-god dying
In the twilight summer sky.

Like to pilgrims, worn and weary,
Toil we on our lonely way;
Thro' this night of life, while gazing
For the dawning of the day.

Like a stately pageant, moving
Slowly o'er the trembling earth;
Pass the ages dim and hoary,
Bending all to sceptred earth.

And the tread of valiant nations,
Thundering on in mighty line,
Leaves a faint and fainter echo
In the crumbling halls of Time.

Yes, these bright majestic heavens,
In their mighty march proclaim
We are passing, we are passing
Unto nothing, whence we came.

But, when, like a baseless vision,
All have faded thus away,
There is built a home eternal
For the weary pilgrim's stay.

On the hills of God it standeth,
Rearing high its golden dome,
And the song comes swelling from it,
"Welcome, pilgrim, welcome home."

The Politics of Christianity.

NO. IV.

FOR ALL AND EACH.

In our last number we learnt the view taken by Christianity of the general Object of civil government—a ministration for Good. This we may look upon as a description applying to essential quality only—leaving every thing special wholly out of sight. We have the stuff, the raw material of which the fabric, if a genuine one, will be exclusively wrought—the precise texture, shape, color, and uses of it, are still to be determined. Good, to whom—good, in what form, and by what means—good, with what necessary limitations—these questions come next in order. We proceed, therefore, to examine them, one by one in the light of God's revelation.

And, first, for whom is the good aimed at by civil government, manifestly designed? Here is a letter, the main purport of which we know to be pleasing—to whom is it addressed?

Look at that bright and blazing sun—image of his Creator's glory—image, too, and in this respect most to be admired, of His universal and impartial beneficence! See how he bathes in light the mountain tops, or gilds the clouds in which at times they hide their hoary heads!—But these uplifted spots, although the first to catch, and the last to lose, the benefits of his presence, rejoice only in their share of blessings common to all other parts of the earth's surface. The open champaign basks in his beams—the sequestered dell catches between its leafy locks glimpses of his countenance—ocean upon which time sets no mark reflects his radiance—and every polished pebble of the countless myriads which lie scattered upon its beach, sparkles in the glow of his noon-tide effulgence. Forth walks the great to greet him with gladness; and forth, too, from the dingy courts of cities, and through narrow casements, obscure and pining sickness glances heart-felt homage, blessing him that his favors are not with held from the poor. The sailor, after a tempestuous night—the laborer trudging forth to his daily toil—the lone traveller whose short rest has been taken under the friendly shelter of a jutting crag—the wealthy citizen, after wooing sleep upon a bed of luxuary—all classes, all ages, all individuals, at home or abroad, ill or in health, destitute or possessed of abundance, worthless or virtuous, mournful or merry—all participate, to the full extent of their capacity, in the advantages conferred on man with such unsparing liberallity by the bounteous and joyous orb of day.

Now turn and contemplate Christianity, the luminary of the moral world—in its design, adaptation and powers, equally diffusive with its physical prototype, although, in its actual results, not as yet as equally enjoyed, because its benefits, owing to their high superiority of nature, can only be received and distributed by human choice. It restricts its blessings to no class, nor tribe, nor nation, nor variety of our fallen race. All may go out into the light of it, and sun their understandings and their hearts in its life-giving beams. It is not only for all, but for each—is full fraught with gladness, not merely to our national and social, but to our individual, modes of being. No man can say with truth, "It means no good to me." Set aside all the indirect advantages which its introduction to the world has brought, or is rapidly bringing, home to every man's door—its chastening influence upon manners by the stimulus it has ministered to the development of moral consciousness—its assiduous and successful cultivation of the nobler & more generous impulses of our nature—its gradual elevation of mind to pursuits above the range of the animal senses—its encouragement of peace, and good-will—the quickening energy it has communicated to intellect, to which we are so largely indebted for the growth of science, and for the application of purposes of every day wants and enjoyments—passing over all these things, in the benefit to be derived from which there are few, indeed, who do not more or less share, you may yet, if so minded, discover in Christianity, an aptitude to distribute individually, to each separate member of the human family, its inexhaustible resources. Which of our mental or moral powers does it not prompt to activity? What craving of our nature does it fail to meet and satisfy? To what motive of the heart has it not addressed its appeals? What variety of wretchedness can be found to which it offers not some alleviation? Where is the passion so strong that it cannot meet and subdue it? Where the habit of vice so deep-rooted that it cannot grapple with, and tear it up? But we must not linger.—The theme is a tempting one—but since we have touched upon it, not for its own sake, but for the sake of the light it casts upon the matter we have in hand, it behoves us to quiet it and pass on.

We advance then to civil magistracy—"an ordinance of God." Guided in our inquiries by analogy, may we not fairly expect to discover in it, the same characteristics as those in other ordinances upon which He has set the impress of his authority—the same universality and impartiality in the distribution of good—the same benign regard to man as man, leaving out of sight the circumstances which surround him? "The greatest happiness of the greatest number"—or in other words [Just here the Reader's special attention is invited] a majority enjoying advantages at the expense of a minority, is an object quite out of keeping with all the known designs of God, and surely could not have been his purpose in the institution of civil government. The good which must be purchased at the cost of injustice, though the good may be made available for the nine hundred and ninety-nine, and the injustice fall upon the one only, savors far more of human than of divine contrivance. So lofty an edifice as that now under our survey, could not be based, according to the original plan, upon the necessity of wrong to any class, however helpless, or any individual however obscure. If so, it is not only unlike to, but is inconsistent with, all else which has proceeded from the mind of the Supreme. Let us dismiss, then, from our thoughts, in attempting to track the range of advantages meant to flow to us from government, all idea of numbers—of majorities and minorities—of the relative positions of classes and of countries. If there is any correspondence between this appointment and others ordered by the same wisdom, its object is good to all and each—to mankind as a race, and to every man as an individual.

This conclusion to which analogy lights our path, is ratified by Scripture. "He"—the ruling power—"is the minister of God to Thee for good." To Thee! The language individualises the receivers of the benefit. Every one upon whom the obligation of obedience rests, is included, as of right, a sharer in the advantages bestowed. The very form of the expression, if not intended to suggest, was probably itself suggested by, the idea upon which we have just dwelt. Government, framed and administered on principles in harmony with those of revelation, would bless each without injuring any. What it must needs take, in each case, would be more than made up in what it renders back.

It follows from what we have advanced, that such ends as cannot be reached without the infliction of injustice even upon the few, are are as clearly beyand the legitimate of civil magistracy, as of individuals. It may suit the plausible and the superficial to urge and to justify the commission of trivial wrongs, with a view to what they regard as the public good, and to plead as a trespass upon private the necessities of the ruling authorities of an empire. It may be convenient for them, when reminded of whole classes of the community whose progress law directly impedes, to point to other, and, perhaps, more numerous classes, who, in virtue of the same law rise to prosperity. It may square with their notions of political right and wrong to strike a balance between good and evil, and to decide that where the good preponderates the magistrate is bound to act. But all this, if our view be correct, Christianity condemns. It was not left to the wisdom of rulers thus to calculate chances, and weigh tendencies, and transmute crime into virtue by an estimate of future consequences. No such responsibilities were ever laid upon man in any of his relationships. No powers have been conferred upon him adequate to the discharge of them. If the proper object of civil government had not been missed, none such would have been needed. The governing authority unless utterly misdirected, need violate no principle of equity—place at disadvantage no class—achieve no benefit for the many at the expense of the few, much less for the few at the cost of the many. And what it cannot effect, save by these means, Christianity does not warrant it to attempt.

THE EFFECTIVE PREACHER

By Professor Shepard.

The effective preacher is a man of extensive knowledge, not a novice. He has clear and comprehensive views of truth. His mind is filled with illustrations. He is a man of deep experience; his heart is pervaded with the spirit and power of truth. He is a man of benevolence; his soul is filled with intense desires to achieve, by its instrumentality, those grand purposes of love for which the truth was given. He is a man of logic and of feeling; he can prove his points and press them. He is a man of simplicity who aims to be understood; a man of intention, who means to be felt. He clothes his message in garments of light, imbues it with the energies of emotion, adjusts it to the sensibilities, points and pours it into the drowsy chambers of the conscience. He is a man of taste; he can soar if he pleases, he can write and speak with winning beauty and a chastened elegance. He is a man of boldness; and is not afraid, in distinctness and strength, to utter the whole truth—all doctrine—all duty, or whoever may forbear. He is a man of independence; his rules are his own, gathered from all proper sources, and incorporated with his habits of thought and feeling. He speaks in his own way, from the impulse of his own spirit, and in accordance with his own consciousness and good sense. He speaks not so much for beauty, as for effect. He likes beauty very well, but strength, impression, effect, more. We cannot but approve of his sentiments and course. If he is moving in power, and doing the work of God on the souls of men, we can forgive him, even if in the rush of emotion he chance to fall upon a figure or word at which Quintillian would frown If he has strength to lift up and move away mountains of difficulty, and to shiver rocks of obduracy, we will not insist upon his doing the work with absolute smoothness. Let him by all means do the work. The highest exertions of power are sometimes inconsistent with an exact and perfect finish. The sublime and resistless agents of nature are not accustomed to do things very precisely. The lightning does stop to polish its shaft in its rending, scorching track.—American Pulpit

Ladies' Department.

A Touching Story.

A short time since, a young girl came into town, an entire stranger to every body here, to seek employment. She succeeded in obtaining a situation, and after working a fort-night was taken ill, and died. During her illness, she was attended by the woman with whom she boarded, by neighbors, and by such young ladies in the employment of the Messrs. Bakers, as were able to devote their time to her. After her death, the oversees of the poor were applied to, to discharge the funeral rites, as she had neither money nor relatives. They were able to furnish only a plain cheap coffin, with neither glass nor plate, and a spot in the town burial ground, at Forr Hill, for her interment. As soon as it was known that this was the extent which they were authorthorized to do, a subscription was raised by the young women of Messrs. Baker's factory, a neat coffin was purchased, with a plate bearing the name and age of the deceased; and a lot was bought in the cemetry. The bell was tolled, the funeral services performed, and the friendless one was followed to the grave, and consigned to the earth, by the young ladies, whose only bond of sympathy with her was that she was alone here, a stranger, and seeking, like them, to gain a livelihood and independence by the honest labor of her hands. And there, in our beautiful cemetery, she sleeps, & no unhallowed foot will tread rudely upon her grave. In the hearts of those young girls, who so quietly and lovingly paid these ministrations, will her memory remain, and like guardian spirits, they will watch over the bed of her repose, and cherish the flowers that will spring up there as spontaneously and as sweetly as if the lovely one had been borne to a burial by troops of rich friends and kindred.—Ingham Patriot.

ADVANTAGES OF INTEMPERANCE.

If intemperance should cease, how many lawyers would have nothing to do! How many physicians would wait in vain for patents' calls! The laborious farmer, who should toil all the season to raise as much corn as he could, to put into the hands of the distiller, to convert into the producing cause of good to the souls and bodies of his fellow-beings, would be entirely disabled from showing mankind his disinterested benevolence in this way—and all who proximately or remotely lend their influence towards securing the advantages of intemperance, would be cut off from this great means of blessing their species. If intemperance should leave the earth, what a stagnation there would be in many departments of business! The man who enjoys the summum bonum of intemperance has peculiar liberties—he walks which side of the road he pleases, and if he chooses to walk both sides at the same time, who calls in question his right!—He lies down and rises up when he desires, and so great is his freedom, that he lies down sometimes when he has no desire to. He has unlimited control over his family—his wife and children fear him as they do a raving maniac.—Such a man is regular in his habits—he daily and frequently pours out, and pours down, libations to Bacchus, his god, whom he loves and worships with increasing fervor. Intemperance makes a man as eloquent as Demosthenes, as rich as Crœsus, as strong as Samson, and as wise as Solomon. How it improves the personal appearance of a man! It causes him to stand, like the Indian, so straight as to lean a little the other way! What social advantages intemperance affords! What warm emotions characterize inebrates when they meet together—what a warm, friendly shaking hands! They do not greet each other with a low, inaudible voice—they are heard. How benevolent too! They will spend all their property, and often more, to secure to themselves and their associates the blessings of intemperance. O, how it makes the man!

When half-slewed, how docile! When half-shaved, how pious! When a little tipsy, how benevolent! When a little boosy, how kind?—When so-so, how accommodating! When a little high, how polite! When pretty much over the bay, how peacable! When half-seas over, how effectionate! When pretty well shot in the head, how oratorical! When half-snapped, how wealthy! When considerably worsted, how bold! When dead drunk, how harmless!

Behold him, as he awakes from his sound slumber & sweet repose, rising, reeling, staggering towards home! At length he comes to his abode, scolds his wife, beats his children, knocks over the table, breaks the dishes, dashes out the windows, swears and curses, and imitates the devil. Who would not desire to enjoy the advantages of intemperance? Benefits often resulting in a permanent home in the magnificent State-house, where regular employment is furnished, food gratuitous, & as many attendants as needed. Advantages which often result in the high elevation of the scaffold, and in having the name and deeds recorded on the page of history, to be read by succeeding generations! E. S.

Parent's Department.

Scolding Children.

Children should be taught to know the connection between action and consequence as soon as possible. What good do you suppose it would do to tell your boys not to roll in the drit, or run through a mud-puddle, telling them as a reason that it cost the parent a great deal of labor to procure clothes for them, and a great deal of trouble to keep them clean when they roll in the dirt and run in the mud with them; and then as often as they disobey your orders give them a thorough scolding, and wash their clothes and clean their shoes yourself? I will tell you what good it does to scold at your children for doing what you have told them not to do—just as much good as to scold an unruly ox for jumping over the fence and eating the green corn, contrary to orders previously given to them. Children are governed by two motives: the hope of reward and fear of unpleasant consequences. A stream of scolding, as long as from sun to sun, never yet had any other effect on children than to render them wholly regardless of what is said to them. If you wish to make your children troublesome, scold them occasionally. If you wish to make them bad, scold at them a little harder, louder and more frequently.—If you wish to ruin them, and relinquish all hopes of conquering them, scold continually, and you will be sure to gain your object.

A Short Sermon for Parents.

It is said that when the mother of Washington was asked how she had formed the character of her son, she replied that she had endeavored early to teach him three things—obedience, diligence and truth. No better advice can be given to any parent.

Teach your child to obey. Let it be the first lessen. You can hardly begin too soon. One of the most successful parents that I have known said that this point was usually settled between him and his children before they were 3 months old. But it requies constant care to keep up the habit of obedience and especially to do it in such a way as not to break down the strength of a child's character.

Teach your child to be diligent. The habit of being always employed is a great safeguard through life, as well as essential to the culture of almost every true virtue. Nothing can be more foolish than the idea, which some parents have, that it is not respectable to set their children to work. Play is a good thing. Innocent recreation is an employment, and a child may learn to be diligent in that as well as in other things. But let him learn early to be useful.

As to truth, it is the one essential thing. Let everything else be sacrificed rather than that. Without it what dependence can you place on your child? And be sure to do nothing yourself which may countenance any species of prevarication or falsehood. Yet how many parents do teach their children the first lesson of deception.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Signs of the Times.

On Saturday evening last, a meeting of the friends of Henry Clay was held at the Court House in this city. The large room in the Court House was crowded. With the political objects of the meeting, we as editors, have, of course, nothing to do. But we wish to refer to the eloquent remarks made by the orator of the evening, Charles Thruston, Esq., on the subject of slavery. Mr. T. said that all the old questions bank, protection, &c., had given away to a more important one—that of slavery. Every one might see that this was the great question. He went on to speak of some of the evils of slavery, and exclaimed, "would to God we were rid of it!" Here the pent up feelings of those present burst forth in enthusiastic applause. We feel that that meeting has pronounced the doom of slavery—that then, at least, the voice of the people, was the voice of God! Let no one say now that our prospects are gloomy. Mr. Thruston said he hoped an emancipation clause would be inserted in the new Constitution. Here again he was interrupted by the most hearty applause. This may be considered the first vote taken on the subject, and not a voice was lifted up in defence of slavery.

This may be considered the begining of good times. Let all orators throughout the State take a noble stand, Mr. Thruston has done, and they need have no fear that they will not be sustained by the people. The hour is ready for the man.—Louisville (Ky) Examiner.

Mr. Nathaniel Hardy, a highly respectable hardware merchant, of Louisville, was found drowned, near the wharf boat. He is supposed to have thrown himself into the river in a fit of insanity. He left a family and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss.

War vs. Schools.

The Hon, Horace Mann, Secretary of the Board of Education in his Eleventh Annual Report contrasts the cost of the war and its preparations with the cost of education, in the following extract:

Since the organization of the Federal Government in 1789, the expenses or our military and naval establishments and equipments, in round numbers, is $700,000,000. Two of our ships of the line have cost more than $3,000,000. The value of the arms accumulated at one time at the Arsenal in Springfield in this State, was $900,000. The Military Academy at West Point has cost more than $4,000,000. In our town meetings, and in our school district meetings, wealthy and substantial men oppose the grant of $15 for a school library, and of $30 for both library and apparatus: while at West Point they spend $50 in a single lesson at target firing, and the government keeps a hundred horses, and grooms and blacksmiths to take care of them, as an indispensable part of the 'apparatus' of the Academy. The pupils of our Normal schools, who are preparing to become teachers, must maintain themselves; the cadets at the Academy receive $28 a month, during their entire term, as a compensation for being educated at the public expense.—Adding bounties and pensions to wages and rations, I suppose the cost of a common foot soldier in the army cannot be less than $250 a year.

The average cost of female teachers for the public schools of Massachusetts last year, was only $13,60 a month, inclusive of board; or at a rate which would give $163,20 for the year; but the average length of the schools was but eight months, so that the cost of two common soldiers is nearly that of five female teachers.

The annual salary of a Colonel of dragoons in the United States Army is $2,950; of a Major General $4.502; that of a Captain of ship of the line, when in service, $5,500, and when off duty, it is $2,600!

There are but seven towns in Massachusetts where any teacher of public schools receives so high a salary as $1,000; and in four of those towns, one teacher only receives this sum.—Horace Mann.

He might have added that the annual expense of a regiment of dragoons in the service of the United States is $700,000, more than $30,000 greater than the annual cost of the public education of the people of Massachusetts. Three such regiments are now in service, costing annually $2,100,000, a sum greater than the cost of all the colleges in New England.

The $100,000,000 which have been expended in the late Mexican War, would have been sufficient to found 126 free Colleges, each as richly endowed as Harvard University—Library, Professorship, scientific schools and all.

If sums of money were thus liberally expended, and for education and its appliances, instead of war and its horrible enginery, who can estimate the happy results which would be the fruit of such policy.—Rochester American.

Unostentatious Benevolence.

Some time ago an unknown individual in this Commonwealth, gave $1,000 towards founding a State Reform School. The same individual afterward offered $10,000 more, on condition that the State would make a similar appropriation; which has been done; and now, within a few days, the same princely benevolence has furnished the additional sum of $2,500 to this State Institutions, for the purpose of enlarging the farm accommodations of the school.

The name of this princely giver is, we believe, entirely unknown except to the gentlemen through whom the gifts are presented.—In these days of greedy accumulation, and lust for holding property to the last gasp of life, and handing it down to children's children—such an instance of munificence is worthy of all commendation.—Boston Traveller, 27th.

The Sunday Watch.

We knew that the corporation maintained a night watch for the city; but it did not occur to us, until recently, that we had a Sunday watch in particular. In passing to church, we have often observed groups of men stationed at the corners of the streets, carefully scrutinising the passers-by, and we have felt like pronouncing them wanting in good breeding; but possibly we judged wrong. Seeing the regularity of these standings, we have rather concluded it must be in obedience to the "powers that be." Why the town authorities should set a watch so much stronger on the Sabbath than on other days and nights, we cannot say, unless it be to give greater security to property while people attend church. It may be, that the people who attend church are more disposed to riotous conduct than others, and therefore need to be thoroughly watched on their way to and from the places of worship. But the admission of such a supposition will be deemed a bold slander upon the good people of our quiet town; therefore we must not indulge the idea, much less speak of it. But we cannot help thinking of the cost of keeping such an extensive watch.—Where the town gets the money to pay them, we cannot guess. Now if our church-going population only had religion enough, that they might be safely trusted to pass to and from church, without being watched, what a saving it would be to the town.—Family Quarto.

Pay Your Small Debts.

1. Because you may forget them, and consequently be liable to the charge of being a dishonest man. 2. Because the man to whom you owe 25 cents may be very much disappointed. He may be a poor man, and depending upon it for marketing to-morrow morning. The want of it may be as serious an evil to him as the lack of a hundred dollars to a rich man. Yet the amount being so small he feels ashamed to ask you for it. 3. Pay your small debts, if you are a christian; for if you are careless of this duty, you will be set down as having no religion, more readily from this fact, than if you postponed the payment of your large debts. 4. Pay your small debts if you wish to obtain and retain ary influence in the community where you live. Small things advance or destroy a man's influence as effectually as great things.—Family Quarto.

A sufficient amount of stock (100,000) has been subscribed to the Cincinnati and Hillsborough Railroad, to authorize the organization of the company incorporated to construct this work, and a meeting has been called for that purpose, to be held at Hillsborough to-day.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Expanding the Chest.

Those in easy circumstances, or who pursue sedentary employments within doors, generally use their lungs but very little—breathe very little air into the chest, and thus, independently of bad positions, contract a wretchedly narrow, a small chest, and lay the foundation for the loss of health and beauty. All this can be obviated by a little attention to the manner of breathing. Recollect the lungs are like a bladder in their structure, and can be stretched open to double their ordinary size, with perfect safety, giving a noble chest, and perfect immunity from consumption. The agent—and all the agent required—is the common air we breathe; supposing, however, that no obstacle exists, external to the chest, such as lacing, or tying it around with stays or tight dresses, or having the shoulders lay upon it. On rising from bed in the morning, place yourself in an erect posture, your chest thrown back, and shoulders entirely off the chest; now inhale or suck in all the air you can, so as to fill the chest to the very bottom of it, so that no more air can be got in; now hold your breath, and throw your arms off behind, holding in your breath as long as you can, again fill your chest and walk about, holding in your breath as long as possible. Repeat these long breaths as many times as you please. Done in a cold room is much better, because the air is heavier and denser, and will act much more powerfully in expanding the chest. Exercising the chest in this manner, it will soon become very flexible and expansible, and will enlarge its capacity and the size of the lungs.

While forming a fine chest, and after it is formed, great care is requisite to establish perfectly correct positions, so that the chest shall not be contracted and all your efforts counteracted by bad positions. If your positions are habitually bad in spite of all you can otherwise do, the chest will be more or less contracted. The rule with you should be, and the rule of health is, to keep the bottom of the chest, and the ends of the short ribs, and the lower end of the breast bone, as far out from the back bone as possible. To effect this, the chest must be perfectly straight, and thrown a little backwards from the waist at all times. The small of the back is made flexible, but the hip joints are the points from which to stoop either backward or forward. The joints are ball-and-sockets joints, like a swivel in some degree. The trunk of the body may bend forward as much as you please, for all useful purposes, and the chest, and the whole spine, and neck, be kept perfectly straight. Hence no lady should ever make a table of her lap, either for sewing, reading or writing, or any occupation whatever. Let all these, and all work you do, be arranged on a table before you, and that table be raised to the armpits, or as high as possible, so as to keep the chest straight.

A little practice will make this infinitely more agreeable than to stoop, whilst little or no fatigue will be experienced at your occupations, compared to what is experienced whilst stooping, or from habitual stooping. The weight of the shoulders will thus be kept off the chest, which is one of the grand causes of fatigue from manual labor. You will thus entirely prevent the mark of servitude being impressed upon your person, in a pair of round, stooping shoulders, and flat, contracted chest.—Fitch's Lectures.

Earthquake at Batavia.—Letters from Batavia, in the Island of Java, of Feb. 10 state that on the 16th, 17th, and 18th, shocks of earthquake were felt at Batavia, and in the regencies of Cheribon, Bonjoemak, Kaddock, Samarang, and Rambay. At Batavia, the towers of the church were a good deal shaken and that of the town hall had taken a strong leaning to the left, whilst a cross in cast iron, which surmounted it was overthrown. In the town of Cheribon all the buildings except the stores, the walls of which are of great thickness, were so much injured as to threaten destruction, and oblige the inhabitants to seek refuge in the plains of the environs. At Parimang the residence of the Governor was thrown down, and all that it contained destroyed. Forty houses in the Chinese quarter shared the same fate, and seventeen inhabitants were crushed to death under the ruins. A great number of sugar and indigo manufactures in the open fields were destroyed. Intelligence from all points of new disasters were reaching Batavia, and the greatest alarm prevailed in that capital.

Four Dead Bodies Found.—Coroner Reagin held an inquest on the bodies found in the Ohio river yesterday, and two on the day before.—Two were found on Thursday at the foot of Vine street, but so much decayed as to be past recognition. One of them, however, is supposed to be that of Mr. Bailey, who was drowned about two months since, by falling from a wood boat near the mouth of the Little Miami. In his pockets were some gold rings, &c. Another was found yesterday at the foot of Smith, barefoot, carelessly dressed, and another shortly afterwards at Collin's landing, below the junction of Fifth and Front. There was nothing on their person to render anything certain as to identity.—Cin. Com.

Heavy Robbery.—A Mr. Maret a passenger on the French ship Niobe, was robbed at New Orleans on the morning of the 27th ult., of $5,900 in gold; the money was taken from his trunk, and so keenly was he affected by the loss, that he fainted and remained for some time entirely insensible.

Steamboat Gambling.—The practice of Gambling, so common on Western steamboats, is likely to be abolished altogether, as by a law, recently passed in Kentucky, the boat permitting the same, is liable to a fine of $500, and gamblers to arrest and imprisonment. We learn that the Louisville line of packets strictly comply with the requisitions of the law, and prohibit all playing for money. It is right and the example is worthy of universal imitation. This law, if enforced, will restore the Ohio river from the mouth of Big Sandy to the Mississippi to its aborigina respectability.—Cin. Com.

Sound vs. Lightning.—Whilst in 1825, when the Erie Canal was first opened, it required 'one hour and twenty minutes' to announce the fact from Buffalo to New York, (544 miles,) by means of cannon, eight miles apart, the like intelligence can now be instantaneously communicated by telegraph. This was done on Monday, when navigation was resumed. The average velocity of the cannon mode of communicating intelligence, was about half the velocity of sound, which travels at the rate of 1,142 feet per second.

Br. Bassett: After so long a time, I desire to say something with regard to this circuit and its prosperity. The Lord has not utterly forsaken us in our feeble efforts to do good. We commenced a protracted meeting on New Year's day, in Boyer's School-house, where we never had had an organization: And the happy result was a number were converted, and joined the Methodist Protestant Church. We have organised a class at this place, of twenty members; and at Laurel Point we have another society to organise of about the same number, and there is a very good prospect entertained that we shall, before conference, organise another society at Charles South's. We have had several protracted meetings this year, and the Lord has been with us in converting sinners and building up believers and reclaiming backsliders, until we have received in all forty-seven members since conference.—We commenced our third quarterly meeting at Cusville, on the 29th of April, with the assistance of Brothers Clawson, Laishley, and Gillispie. We had a very interesting meeting from beginning to end. Brother Clawson preached at 11 o'clock on Saturday, and Brother N. Gillispie on that night, and Sabbath Brother Clawson addressed a very large congregation with a general seriousness pervading the assembly. To God be all the glory. Brethren pray for us.

Yours. &c.,

Br. Reese,—In my last communication it was stated that we were in the midst of a most gracious revival, and intimated that I would give you and your readers further intelligence respecting it; but circumstances have delayed the fulfilment of that intention till the present. Now having to write on business, I will send you a few lines respecting our Station. The protracted meeting continued some nine or ten weeks, which brought us near to the sitting of our Conference; the good work continued up to the close of the meeting. More than double the number reported in my last have united with our church, making in the aggregate over one hundred and thirty persons: and with very few exceptions, they are all striving to serve the Lord and save their souls. Some fifty or more have been received into full membership. I read in 42 a few evenings since at one time; a like circumstance never occurred in the history of my short ministry, nor any thing like it in point of number.—May the Lord keep them faithful. Our church is in a prosper condition; our meetings spiritual and well attended: our prospects are more flattering than ever before. Our little Conference passed off in the most delightful manner, as you have already been advised. Our increase of churches and members in the District, and the openings for successful operation and spread of the work of the Lord within our borders, is truly encouraging. Our District might be compared to a beautiful garden all in bloom: and excepting myself, I think we have excellent garden men, who understand their work.

At this time we have peace throughout our borders and prosperity within our palaces. We have entered upon our work with new energy and zeal, and hope, at the end of this conference year, to be able to make a far more favorable report than the past.

Yours, in the bonds of love,

J. R. NICHOLS, Pastor

Dear Br. Reese,—I would inform our friends through the columns of the Methodist Protestant what the Lord has done for us the past year on Bridgeport Circuit. At our third quarterly meeting, we commenced a series of meetings and the Lord poured out his Spirit—sinners were awakened, the church revived, and though almost single-handed, seventeen found the pearl of great price, and fourteen united with us in church fellowship. Could we have had assistance, I have no doubt many more would now have been rejoicing in God and rock of our salvation. Our prospects on this Circuit are much more prosperous and brighter than in some former days. Brethren, pray for us.

Yours in brotherly love,

Dear Br. Reese,—I cannot well forbear informing you of the present condition of our Church in this part of her operations. Our first Quarterly meeting, of the Fort Smith Circuit, under the superintendence of bro. J. E. Miller, was held on Saturday, the 26th of Feb., 1848, on Big Creek, at bro. John Eppler's.

There were not many of the official members in attendance, but a tolerably good number of the neighborhood were out for preaching at all the appointments, who evinced great concern for the good of the meeting, and a great many seemed willing to distinguish themselves as seekers of religion. These symptoms continued increasing till Sunday night, when the Lord powerfully broke in upon the great deep of their hearts, and discovered to many the worst of their conditions, which was followed by a terrible trembling and outcry for mercy: and amidst the shouting and praises of Christians, and the cries of penitents, some ten or twelve were hopefully converted to God. It was truly a time for great rejoicing among the Christians, whose prayers had long been ascending to the Throne for this great work. There were fifteen accessions to the Church during the meeting, and six have since united with the same class. This is now quite a flourishing society. One year ago there was but one member of our Church in this settlement, now there are twenty-six, and still a growing interest among the people, which makes us look for more.

I have been at all the appointments on the Ct. since this meeting, & found the people generally looking up for the refreshing shower. A glorious revival has recently commenced in several of our sister Churches in this State, which we hope will result in humbling many hitherto obstinate Church parties, and change the current of their bitter arguments and reproachful disputes into the warm and animating congratulations of loving and faithful Christians. What a happy time, if the whole Christian world was more united in that one great essential of Christian prosperity, love!

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, May 25, 1848.

☞ Our readers of this village, and of the Muskingum and Ohio Conferences will feel interested in the following extract of a private letter from Br. R. F. Shinn of the Illinois Conference, dated May 13th.

"Old Br. Jacob Myers, formerly of your place, is in Rushville. His health is tolerably good, and his prospect for a better world, bright. We have many encouragements amongst us, as well as discouragements."

☞ That marriage notice in another column, with its accompaniment, pleases us better than would a pound cake. Good luck, say we, to the happy pair.

Death of Eminent Ministers.—It is remarkable that on the same day the death of Dr. Emory of Baltimore was announced in the General Conf. at Pittsburgh, and the death of Dr. Ashbel Green, of Philadelphia, the oldest Presbyterian minister in the country, was announced in the General assembly of that Church, in session in Philadelphia.

Death of Mrs. Mary Ann Springer.

It becomes our sad duty, to announce the death of this estimable and much respected woman, wife of Rev. C. Springer formerly Editor of this paper. She was taken ill in Sept. last, during the absence of her husband at Conference in Youngstown, and from that time continued to linger in a state of extreme suffering, from a most painful disease,———until she was released by death, on Saturday last, 20th inst. Her remains were conveyed to the rest of the grave after religious services at Springfield Chapel, on Sabbath afternoon, attended by a numerous concourse of mourning friends and acquaintances. The large number that attended through almost incessant rains, and the solemn sadness which pervaded their countenances, evidenced the estimation in which the deceased was held. We know that this intelligence will be received with regret by many at a distance, in the cities of Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, and many intermediate places, where she has been long and favorably known.

Sister Springer was daughter of the late Dr. McDowell of Chilicothe, O. She was born in the State of Georgia, where her father for some time resided previous to his seuling in Ohio. She was married about 1819 or 1820, at Chilicothe, to Br. S. who was then engaged in the itinerant ministry, and has been thus engaged during most of the time since at various points. By this means, our departed sister became extensively known. We therefore hardly need speak of her character. She was a member of the M. P. Church from its organization, and we believe was ever esteemed an exemplary Christian. She took a zealous interest in the cause of religion, and the Church of her choice, and one of the last acts of her life was to appropriate a handsome amount towards a religious and benevolent object. We write thus much from personal acquaintance of some 18 years, but are not in possession of sufficient biographical data, or particulars of her last moments, to write an extended obituary. We have a good hope in Christ, that our sister has gone from suffering to rest in the paradise of God. With her > ——The toilsome strife is o'er,

> Of sublunary care,
> And life's dull vanities no more,
> Her anxious breast ensnare.

We will add, that on Friday, 19th inst. Mrs. Rebecca Cochran, youngest sister of Br. C. Springer, departed this life, and was interred at Springfield Chapel, on the very day of sister Springer's decease. Several other near relatives of Br. S. are at this time suffering serious affliction. May the consolations of the gospel sustain those who suffer bereavement. And may these providential dispensations be sanctified to the good of all surviving friends and acquaintances.

General Conference, M. E. Church.

Saturday, May, 13.

Bishop Morris presided. The following resolution was adopted, in response to the communication of Bishop Soule:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this General Conference that they have no jurisdiction over the Rev. Bishop Soule, and can exercise no eclesiastical authority over him."

The following questions were submitted to Dr. Dixon the Delegate of the British Conference:

1. What construction is put upon our General Rules by the British Connection, in regard to the admission of persons into full membership? Do they admit seekers, as well as regenerate persons; and if so, as a Church do they still approve of the usage and the rules?

2. What is the practice of the British Connection in regard to enforcing the attendance of members upon class? Is the rule strictly enforced, and is it a general conviction that the enforcement of it is wholesome?

3. What is the practice of the British Connection in regard to reporting numbers? Do they report probationers as members?

Doctor Dixon proceeded to answer the questions.

The first question proposed, he said, is the construction we put upon our rules with regard to the admission of persons to membership. I understand by the words "general rules," the rules of our body at home, which, I presume, constitute the rules of your society in America. The question I must answer in a three-fold sense.

We do admit seekers of salvation. Persons on trial are persons earnestly seeking the Lord. We do not consider them members of society while they are on trial for three months.

If they do not find the blessing of justification in this time, we do not consider this as an objection to their admission. If they continue importunate, devout seekers of salvation, we admit them as full members. This is, of course, connected with another principle—while we do not require regeneration as an absolute test of membership, we require persons to give evidence of sincerity by a diligent attendance on all the ordinances of grace and salvation.

He supposed the reason for this question was, that it was the impression of many that great numbers remained in the society without having experienced justification; but, continued he, not many remain a long time in our society without regeneration. Many that are not found in a happy state, are persons which have lost grace and the witness of the Spirit.

It is a matter of practice with our ministers that they constantly insist on the necessity of seeking salvation. Our class leaders take care not to allow their members to continue destitute—not to allow persons to remain in society without constantly insisting on the importance of salvation.

Your question relates to taking persons into full membership, and says: If so, do they still approve of the usage and the rule? Answer: Most certainly we do. I have heard no doubt on this subject. We hardly ever attempt to mend our rules—our desire is to keep them; and we think our principle and our practice agree well together. We go on in this matter just as our father John Wesley conducted the business in his life time. Wesley from the beginning admitted seekers of salvation to his societies.—This is our practice.

The second question is with regard to the practice of enforcing upon our members attendance upon class-meetings; and if we consider this enforcement wholesome. I had better answer the last part of the question first. Most assuredly we deem it extremely wholesome that our members attend class-meeting. We are as deeply convinced of the necessity of class-meetings as we were from the commencement.—There is no sort of inclination to slacken the reins. It is the very vitality of union & strength in our country. With regard to enforcing the attendance of members upon class, we do enforce it.

As to the necessity of meeting in class, we do not admit honorary members in our society; but discretion and prudence is necessary, as we often meet with persons in affliction whom a thousand things may combine to keep away. We find it necessary to encourage and reprove them and such should not be cut off without examination and an effort to save them from excision from the Church of Christ. But when they are immoral we invariably reprove them, and we have not much trouble in getting them out of the society. Persons destitute of grace will have little or no desire to remain with us.

To question third, I answer, we do not report probationers as members. They are kept on trial three months. We have a schedule in which we have a column for the names of persons on trial. They remain there for a quarter of a year, and when our numbers are taken, as for instance at our March quarter, we have sometimes from fifteen to twenty thousand reported on trial.—When they are admitted on trial they are reported, but not in the public minutes, only on the quarterly schedule.

It is our practice for the preachers of the circuit to meet every class on the circuit once a quarter, for the purpose of giving the tickets.—It is a pastoral visit, and in my circuit, it takes me six weeks to get round. When I am at home I have to meet the classes in the bounds of my circuit. This gives me a good opportunity of ascertaining the spiritual state of our people.—I do not believe that the rules with regard to class meetings were ever more strictly kept than at the present time.

Question by S. A. Roszell: — Are contributors made statedly in the classes?

Answer: —Our rule is, that each member give a penny a week and a shilling a quarter. This is the general rule and usage, but some of our more wealthy members give more, according to their means. Some give a half sovereign, some a sovereign, and a wealthy member on my circuit gives five sovereigns a quarter. But we have many poor, who can contribute little or nothing. We have a poor fund, for the assistance of the poor among us, as we have the means. In our circuit, Birmingham, we give about two hundred pounds sterling a year, I think about that.

Question by M. Trafton: — Have you any colored members in your societies—if so, do you report them?

Answer: —If our excellent brother knew more of England than he appears to do, he would not make such an enquiry. I never met with but one colored man in society in England in my life.

This was in the vicinity of London. In meeting the class for the distribution of tickets, with the Class Book in his hand, he came across the name of Madison Jefferson, and he looked up, and there stood before him a fine, large, athletic, and he thought beautiful black man. [A laugh.] I thought him beautiful. I said, you have a fine name—this is the name of two American Presi-

"My massa give it to me." I enquired, have you been a slave? He replied, "Yes." And did you run away from your master? "Yes, I did." And did you not think it wrong to run away from your master, and thus deprive him of his property? "No—he thought the wrong was on the other side; for his master had no right to hold him as a slave."

The Doctor, in continuatian, said he thought it improper to continue these questions any longer in the class, but when the people were gone, he asked the colored brother more fully in regard to his history. He told him that he had had two masters. The oldest one, he thought, was no Christian; but the young master, he believed, was a good man. He said he had been flogged frequently, and he and two or three others concluded to escape.

He knew if he was detected and brought back he would be flogged; and if he stayed he would be flogged any how, and he could but be flogged, staying or going; so he concluded to run the risk. An old negro directed them to follow the North star, and always travel by night, evading the light of day. They followed his direction, and after incredible hardships they got safe to Canada.—But not thinking himself sufficiently safe there, he saved his money, and, as soon as he could get off, went to England, and is now employed in a starch factory, and appears to be a worthy and spiritual man.

Question by M. Trafton: —When you reported your members, did you report so many white and one colored?

Answer: No! no! no! We make no distinction among our brethren in Christ Jesus on account of color.

Question by E. G. Wood: What is the size of your classes?

Answer: We have nothing definite on this point. Some of our classes contain ten, some twelve, fifteen, twenty or thirty members. The most spiritual leaders always get the largest number of members.

Question by E. G. Wood: Have you any female leaders?

Answer: We have a large number of female leaders. We could not get along without them. In my present circuit we have twenty. They meet in our leaders' meeting. But on questions of Discipline they do not vote.

Question by B. Creagh: In the case of an accused member, have the preachers a right to set aside the decision of the leaders' meeting?

Answer: No.

Dr. Dixon said, if agreeable he would say a word in reference to their great missionary society, and its operations. He considered it their greatest glory. Their home missionary operations, and the spread of the work abroad, are very extensive. There is scarcely a society in our country without its missionary society. Our mode is to employ the young, and especially the young women, to collect. Our missionary collection during the last year amounted to £106,-000* He referred to their success in the islands of the Pacific,—and they had every reason to be satisfied, and to be grateful to the Lord for the work which he had wrought. They never wanted men. Their young men were willing to go anywhere. Two of their missionaries had died at Sierra Leone, and two young men at their theological school immediately offered themselves to go to Sierra Leone, to preach and to die there.

Monday, 15.

Bishop Waugh presided. Reports of Committee on Book Concern, and on Temperance, with an appeal case from the Troy Conference occupied this day's session.

Tues. 16.

Bishop Hamline presided. An appeal case from the Baltimore Conference, was under consideration.

Wed. 17.

Bishop Waugh presided. The appeal case occupied the most of the session. Rev. Dr. Dixon took his leave of the Conference, with an affectionate address and fervent prayer. This was gratefully responded to by the Conference, in a resolution unanimously passed by rising vote.

Thurs. 18.

Bishop Morris presided. Mr. Ryerson of the Canada Conference, took his leave of the Conference. The decision of the Baltimore Conference in the case of J. W. Osborn was reversed. An appeal case from Oneida Conference was also disposed of. The decision of that Conference was confirmed.

Friday, 19.

Bishop Janes presided. A resolution was offered to enquire into the expediency of so altering the Discipline as to admit of a preacher's remaining three years successively in the same station. This resolution was promptly laid on the table, on motion of J. B. Finley. A resolution was offered purporting that no preacher is under obligation to furnish a certificate of membership to any member, unless said member wishes to remove to another charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church, i. e. not in cases of withdrawal. This resolution was not disposed of to-day. A telegraphic despatch was read by Bishop Janes, announcing the death of Rev. Dr. R. Emory, President of Dickinson College, which took place at 9 o'clock, last night. Resolutions of respect and condolence were passed.

Sat. 20.

Bishop Waugh presided. A great number of resolutions were offered, which were not acted on.

Put that and that together. By the published proceedings of the General Conference M. E. Church, it will be seen that that body determined on the fifth day of its session, that it is "not proper at present to enter into fraternal relations with the M. E. Church South."

Yet on the very next following Sabbath, as we learn by the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, the venerable senior bishop Hedding, in commencing the solemn services of the Lord's Supper, "affectionately invited bishop Soule, who was in the congregation, to kneel with him at the sacramental table. They knelt together, as in other days, whilst emotions, too big for utterance swelled the hearts of hundreds in that assembly. Bishop Hedding gave vent to the deep emotions of his soul in expressions of heavenly joy and living faith." The Advocate adds: "The first two tables were occupied by preachers of which (whom) there were large numbers present, and among them, we rejoiced to see Dr. Pierce of Georgia.

This is good—excellent, and we too would have enjoyed the scene. But, then, we cannot help thinking what consistency is this, in high places. Is it not fraternity, and no fraternity, with a witness?

Ladies' National Magazine.—The June has come to hand. The frontispiece is the Chariot Race, a beautiful mezzotint engraving. The Summer Fashions, colored, is also a neat plate. The publisher promises improvements with the commencement of a new volume in July. Mrs. Ann S. Stephens is still the Editress. C. J. Peterson, Publisher, Chesnut St. Philadelphia. $2 per year.

MRS. ELIZABETH BURNS.

Died in the Lord, at Brownsville, Licking co., Ohio, on Sabbath evening the 14th inst., Mrs. Elizabeth Burns, wife of Mr. James Burns, and mother of Revs. John and Joseph Burns.

Mother B. was born in Ireland in the year 1784, was married to her now bereft husband in 1806, embraced religion in 1812, and lived a consistent christian to the time of her death.—Mother B. was of amiable disposition, which seasoned by grace made her an agreeable companion, an affectionate mother, a valuable member of the Methodist Protestant Church, and a kind and obliging neighbor, ardently loved by her family, and justly esteemed by the christian community in general.

The disease of which she died was erysipelas fever. She suffered much and long (about 12 weeks) but she bore her suffering with christian resignation. Though she evinced some anxiety to recover, or at least to live to see some of her absent children, but when she knew the Lord's will, she meekly bowed and said, "I am willing to go," and died at an unexpected moment without a struggle or a groan

I will furnish a short obituary of mother Myers, for next week's paper.

CHOIR SINGING AGAIN.

Mr. Editor: It is a saying, that the fish that is hooked, may be known by its struggling. I have been reminded of this, by the two articles in your paper, purporting to be in reply to mine, in regard to an article published by you from the Journal of Commerce, upon Choir Singing.—Those who have read the article you published, with attention, will recollect it was strictures disapproving the manner of conducting the choir singing in some of the churches of New England, whereby a large portion of the congregation were deprived of the privilege of uniting in that part of public worship, by the frequent introduction of new tunes; in many instances, expressly designed to prevent the congregation from participating; and giving one instance of the absurdity of the practice, by quoting two lines of a Psalm of David. My article was merely approving of the views taken by that writer, and giving a few cases, of frequent occurrence, of the absurd manner of conducting that part of public worship—asserting its prevalence at the West as well as the East, and calling those particular cases "Blasphemy; or rather mocking God." I did not mention the choir in Putnam, nor did any observation of mine, give any particular locality, except the fact stated, that I had not escaped such annoyance—signed "A Presbyterian," and dated here. I did not attempt to argue the question further than I have stated, but drew some inferences. The character of the articles in reply, appear to me to be objectionable in various ways; and I propose to reply; but must confine myself at this time, principally to "One of the Choir," reserving my reply to "Asaph" for a future occasion. I am pleased, Mr. Editor, that "One of the Choir" and myself agree in one thing: That is, "if the members of the church think as I do upon the subject," they owe it to themselves to abate the "nuisance." It is for this very reason that I have given my views of the practice: and as these writers have given it a locality, and justified the practice here, I will not refuse the issue, or in other words as they "have put on the coat" I will not object to their wearing it.

The first objection of the writer is to the epithet "Blasphemy; or perhaps more properly mocking God" as used in my article, when applied to the Chorister setting a tune to sing such pieces as I have there quoted, for the express purpose of keeping the congregation silent, while singing

> "Come we that love the Lord,
> And let our joys be known, &c."

The blasphemy intended is explained by the other part of the phrase, in view of the fact stated, that such pieces were often sung by the choir alone, because the congregation could not unite. The term blasphemy is used in various senses. The English & Classical Dictionary has, "blasphemy is an offering of some indignity to God himself." Webster: "An indignity offered to God by words or writing:" 2d. "That which derogates from the prerogative of God." Now it appears to me that a great indignity is offered to God, when the Chorister selects such tunes for the singing of such hymns: and may truly be said to usurp the prerogative of God, when he justifies himself as Asaph has done, because there are in the congregation those who have neither skill, ear, voice or judgment. Taking upon himself to say, who shall or shall not, be considered suitable persons to take a part in the universal praise of God.—Certainly it is mockery for the choir to assume that they only are amongst those mentioned "We that love the Lord"—and in the next verse,

> "Let those refuse to sing,
> Who never knew our God."

In Matthew ix: 3, the Jews accuse our Savior of blasphemy, because He declared to the sick of the palsy, "his sins were forgiven," thereby usurping the prerogative of God. In James ii: 7, —1 Timothy i: 19 and 20.—Romans ii: 24,—1 Timothy vi: 1,—Titus ii: 5,—Col. iii: 8,—and in many other places, it is evident any conduct which dishonors God or usurps his authority, is called blasphemy. In Buck's Theological Dictionary, blasphemy is defined, "An injury offered to God, by denying that which is due and belongs to Him, or attributing to Him what is not agreeable to his nature." Certainly God is the best judge whether all the "Tribes of Adam, with Heaven, Earth, and Seas, are called to offer notes divine to their Creator's praise," and the Chorister usurps the prerogative of God, when he undertakes to dictate, in the house of God, what portion shall be permitted to do this. I could bring a plenty of proofs, of the rightfulness of applying the term as I have: It would however make my article too long.

In the second paragraph your correspondent endeavors to weaken the assertion in mine, that "a portion of the choir make no pretension to know God in the sense of the Psalmist," by stating that 18 out of 19 in the Putnam Choir are professors of religion. A false impression is conveyed in the paragraph, and I conceive this is an attempt to throw dust in the eyes of your readers. It assumes that my article was especially designed, and limited to the "Choir and Chorister of the Putnam Presbyterian Church." 2d. That it was especially designed in view of its present organization; both of which assumptions are erroneous, as will appear to any unprejudiced mind, by reading your first article from the Journal of Commerce, and my article. I have not thought the choir entitled to any great pre-eminence in this matter, but have considered them as having adopted an obviously pernicious practice; and "only one amongst a thousand." But as your correspondents have made that issue, I will meet it by asking a few questions of your correspondents. How long is it since the members of the choir not then church members, behaved so rudely in the gallery as to call for a reproof from the Pastor? How many have acted as choristers since the organization of the church, who were not professors of religion? And how long is it since there was a member of the choir though not then nor now a member of the church, whose moral conduct disgraced this village? If these questions are truly answered, I think the present purity of the choir will be a poor reply to the charge that "How often do we hear such lines sung only by those in the 'gallery,' (a portion of whom at least make no pretensions to know God in 'the sense of the Psalmist.'"

In the third paragraph he says in view of the importance of the subject of church music. I (he) lack time, and talent to discuss it at large, &c." I hazard little in saying, he exhibits more than his usual diffidence of his talents, if he does not find time to discuss this subject, and had he the right side, he would be found not deficient in talents. His assumption in the last part of that paragraph is begging the question "entirely;" I hardly think his authority is sufficient to settle the question so summarily.

With the first period of the fourth paragraph I agree, but the first part of the second, is subject to the same remark as the one above; begging the question.

The fifth is founded upon the assumption of the two previous ones and is "too obscure to be seriously refuted."

The sixth requires no other reply than assenting that "Tastes will differ."

With the seventh I will only say his efforts may have been expensive, in time, and money; but when he assumes that no sort of church music would have been in existence in that church but for his exertions, I beg leave to differ.—There are others now in the congregation, not belonging to the choir, who have probably spent as much time, if not as much money, in endeavoring to render this part of worship profitable; and fiting themselves to take a part in it, as your correspondent, without having assumed to themselves any great merit remembering this "When we have done all, we are but unprofitable servants, we have done but our duty."

His eighth paragraph contains a sneer, not very creditable to his head or heart, in my estimation.

Having decided the whole matter, in favor of the present practice of the choir, he concludes by declining Controversy.

I think there is a studied attempt of both your correspondents to misrepresent the views I have taken of the subject; for I expressly declared (as did the writer of the article of the Journal of Commerce,) that I was not opposed to choir singing. I have belonged to a choir myself for some years, and think that under judicious regulations, and suitable choristers, they contribute very much to the propriety of the worship.—Under the Jewish Church, a portion of the Levites were set apart to perform that part of the service.

A PRESBYTERIAN.

Putnam, May 19.

Arrow Rock, Saline Co., Mo., April 23, 1848.

Mr. Editor: Having to write to you on business, I would make a statement in reference to matters in this State. I was surprised to learn by a number of your paper for March last, that there had been held an Annual Conference for a Missouri District, at Pilot Grove. It is but 15 or 20 miles from this place, and I knew nothing of it until I saw it published in the Western Recorder. I am partially acquainted in Cooper county, and I do not know of a single minister or member of our denomination in it. For this cause I am surprised that an Annual Conference should have been held in that part of the State without my knowledge.

I expect always to be a subscriber to the Western Recorder, so long as I am able to raise any thing larger than an Almanac, for I consider it one of the best papers that has made its way in this Western Empire.

JAMES KNOX, Jr.

Bevis's Hamilton Co., O., May 5, 1848.

Br. Bassett: You will learn through the medium of this communication, that myself and family are again on the same old "Ridge," where we used to be so well acquainted, when you travelled Cincinnati Circuit, in 1835-6. Two weeks ago the day before yesterday, we left Hubbard, Trumbull County, and we have been here nine days. So you see that our trip down was short, though not very pleasant. All Steam Boats are not so worthy of commendation as some that have been spoken of in the Recorder. After our arrival in the Queen city, we had an interesting interview with Br. J. Dalbey—found him and family in health. Found my connections and friends generally in health. My brother Isaac Edwards is here, and preaches nearly every Sabbath. We rode together last Sabbath to Cumminsville, and held meeting. We expect to remain here this summer. Next fall, by permission of Providence, I will either travel as an itinerant, in the———District, or try to promote the cause of my Heavenly Father in some other way.* I never can forsake the ministry and be happy. I want to be devoted wholly to my Master's service, in some way or other. My post office address is as above.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From the News by the Cambria which arrived at New York on the 14th inst., we glean the following particulars.

FRANCE.

The French election passed off quietly, the moderate party being every where in the ascendant.

At a meeting of the council a decree was adopted definitely abolishing slavery in all the colonies and possessions of the French Republic. The decree is to take effect two months after its publication in the colonies. An indemnity is to be granted to the slave-owners, the amount and form of which will be fixed by the national assembly.

All traffic in slaves between proprietors in the colonies is interdicted from the day of the publication of the decree. All introduction, by hire or otherwise, of negroes into the colonies is also forbidden. This clause is especially intended to prevent the introduction of negroes from Senegal by any system similar to that of the Hill-coolies in the English colonies.

Latest advices from Paris state that the election returns, from the sections as well as from the departments, continue to be most satisfactory to those who desire to see the moderate party, represented in the provisional government by M. Lamartine, prevail. In almost every arrondissement in Paris M. Lamartine and the moderate party in the government head the lists, and throughout the departments the commissaries of M. Ledru Rollin are at a great discount.

On Wednesday M. Richard Rush, the Minister of the United States in Paris, waited on M. Lamartine, at the Hotel de Ville, and formally recognized the French Republic in the name of the American Union.

The French army now comprises 530,000 men, and has greatly increased since the revolution. In the provinces great discontent prevails, and the schemes of the ultras to overthrow the government still caused apprehension in Paris.

Battle between the Danes and Holsteiners.

Altona, April 24.—Intelligence has been received of taking of the towers of Schlesswig by troops of the Confederation, after an engagement which lasted from 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Easter Sunday until 11 o'clock at night.

The fortification on which the Danish artillery was placed, was taken by Prussians at the point of the bayonet. After the battery had been silenced by field pieces Schlesswig fell into the hands of the confederation. The conflict was most bloody.

The Danes having a strong position, done great execution with their artillery. The Danes had from 10,000 to 12,000 men. The force of the confederation army was greatest, but they were not all engaged. The loss of the Prussians, as far as ascertained, from unauthenticated accounts, is about 3,000 in killed and wounded. The less of the Danes is not known, but probably, having fought comparatively under cover is not very great.

In Lombardy, the state of affairs is not materially changed. The army of Charles Albert, after having been repulsed before Peschiesa, which, up to last accounts, had not been taken, continues to maintain its position on the banks of Masio. The King's headquarters are at Volta. There is evidently a pause in the courage of Charles Albert.

The Milan Gazette, not bad authority on such points, although very little relied upon respecting real incidents of the war, hints that Minio is the limit, seperating Lombardy from the Venitian provinces, and having driven the Austrians out of Lombardy, the mission of the Sardinians and the King would terminate when Parma and Mantua had fallen.

On the 19th, an attempt was made to surprise the advanced force of the later fortress. The king advanced to the ditches, but the garrison kept itself vigorously with the walls, and four of the besiegers were killed.

At Peschierie, on the 18th, skirmishes took place, in which the Austrians were victorious, and had taken possession of Trievano, Valvascene and Codroips. Reinforcements were coming from the pass towards Udna, and steamers of the Austrian allies were armed and placed at the disposal of Count Negent.

SPAIN.

In Spain matters are steadily progressing towards an outbreak. The utter absence of all constitutional government must soon provoke the people to a rebellion, however attached to their present form of government.

Advices from Madrid indicate that a month will not expire before a serious outbreak. Business is at a stand.

PORTUGAL.

Portugal seems on the eve of some serious movement. Publications are extensively circulated, in which are canvassed the abdication of the Queen in favor of her son, a new dynasty, and even a Republic. The latter form of Government, after discussing the question in very inflammatory language, is declared best, and it is asserted that the nation desires it.

GERMANY.

Deplorable accounts from Baden have been received. The insurgents intimated that they wished to capitulate to the force sent against them, but would treat with none but the general in command, unless General Gagern advanced from Schliengen, which insurgents had evacuated, to Gandern, which they occupied. The general stepped from the ranks to parley with the rebels. The chivalrous warrior exhorted the rebels to obey the voice of the law, but they refused to listen to his counsels, and as he retired was most treacherously shot and mortally wounded by three balls.

The troops, exasperated to see their chief basely slaughtered, fell upon the insurgents and completely routed them, leaving a great number dead upon the field. The troops kept up the pursuit, and encountered another party, headed by Strome, which they also attacked and routed, when night put a stop to the engagement. The rebels suffered greatly.

In Prussia public attention is absorbed in the Schlesswig and Holstein war, and the approaching elections were not expected to pass peaceably.

Vienna was tranquil at the latest dates.

The Schlesswig territoty has been the scene of another action. The bands of Prussian and other volunteers which passed the river, came in collision with the Danes between Kliel and Eckenford, in the wood of Schnellmarker, on the morning of the 21st; and after a battle of five hours, the free corps were driven back with a loss of three wounded and twenty killed. To what extent the Danes suffered is not known correctly. The Danes have exercised their rights as belligerants, and laid an embargo on Prussian, Mechlenberg and Hanoverian ships in the port of Copenhagen. Vessels of Hamburg and Lubec are only respected as long as they abstain from joining in the attack on Denmark.

SARDINIA.

A dispatch arrived at Milan on the 20th of April, from the headquarters of the Piedmontese army, bringing the news of an attack directed by the King of Sardinia in person, against the Austrians stationed in the neighborhood of Mantua. The Duke of Savoy was also present at this affair. After a very warm engagement, the Austrians were obliged to retire and shut themselves up in the fortress. Another attack was to be made on the fortress of Peschiera. The Piedmont army was busily engaged in fortifying the bridges of Golto Valegio and Moyamhano.

An engagement has also taken place between the Italian corps of General Zucchi and the Austrians, at Vischo, a village situated on the frontiers of Illyria. The contest lasted four hours, and the Italians succeeded in gaining possession of the village.

IRELAND.

Harrangues and letters from Mitchell, Duffy, and Co., continue to keep up the political excitement which has prevailed in this country for a lengthened period. On the other hand, demonstrations of loyalty and expressions of confidence in our Government, and a satisfaction with the institutions of the country, are going forward, chiefly in Ulster. It must be admitted, that as far as numbers are concerned, throughout Ireland there are at least ten to one in favor of repeal. On the part of the Government activity prevails. They seem to be in possession of some secret, warning them of the near approach of a crisis, when the daring boasts of the Irish confederates will be put into operation, and an attempt made to throw off the yoke of "Saxon oppression." From all we can see in the Irish papers, as well as the tenor of our private advices from several parts of the island, we are disposed to consider that the authorities will be able to put down in a very short time any attempt at insurrection. The Crown seems determined to push on the trials of the conspirators with the least possible delay. The Repeal Association continues its meetings, and the advocacy of the agitation on the principles of moral force only.

The following repeal declaration is to be distributed for signatures throughout the country:—

"We, the undersigned inhabitants of Ireland, believing that the legislative union between Great Britain and Ireland has proved detrimental to the interests of all classes of Irishmen, hereby declare our solemn conviction that its continuance is a grievance, and that the permanent peace and prosperity of this country, and the rights of property therein, can only be secured by an immediate repeal of that measure, and the re-establishment of an Irish legislature, and we hereby, individually and collectively, pledge ourselves to use our best exertions for the attainment of that object. Being also thoroughly convinced of the mischief of religious ascendency, we pledge ourselves at all times to oppose any infringement of the rights of conscience, or exclusion from political power of any class of Irishmen, on account of their religious faith.

"Samuel Ferguson, C. M. O'Loghlen, T. Gallway, A. R. Stritch, R. D. Ireland, J. B. Dillon, Secretaries."

The Confederates have also issued a declaration of a similar import, but more stringent and belligerent in its nature. It was signed by a large party at Limerick, where Mr. S. O'Brien addressed a party of his followers on Sunday last.

The government have issued a circular to the various magistrates of petty sessions throughout Ireland, calling their attention to the practice of drilling in the use of arms which now prevails, and urging them to put in operation the provisions of Geo. III., and 1st Geo. IV., cap. 1.

In order to put a stop to the prevailing excitement, the magistrates of the county of Dublin have called upon the Government to proclaim the metropolis and disarm the disaffected. The magistrates throughout the entire kingdom are recommended by Government to swear in special constables in every parish. A circular to that effect has been issued from Dublin Castle.

A memorial to the Queen from the Roman Catholic bishop and clergy of the dioceses of Cloyne and Rose, county Cork, has just been published. This document sets forth that there is a deep and general discontent in Ireland, and that English legislation is totally inadequate to remedy the evils of our social condition; and prays that her Majesty will order the summoning of the Irish Parliament of Lords and Commons in Dublin to allay the discontent alluded to. This memorial is signed by the bishop and 140 priests, being every individual of that order in the dioceses.

News of the Week.

Lebanon Branch of the Little Miami R. Road.—We are very glad to find that our neighbor Lebanon, in conjunction with the Directors of the Little Miami Rail Road Company, is making diligent efforts to construct a Branch Rail Road through that town, and is likely to succeed. The Lebanon Star gives an account of a spirited meeting held in that town, at which $12 000 were subscribed to the Stock of the Company. $40,000 is required. The Star thinks it will all be taken. A survey made through Lebanon, to a point, at or near Waynesville, established the fact, that the route is five miles nearer than the circuitous one round the East bend of the River. If the Company make the Lebanon Branch, they will also, we presume, continue it on the district line to near Waynesville, on a second track.—The effect of this will be, to shorten the road five miles, for the 'through travel,' whilst the way travel, and that by the village of Tod's Fork, will use the old route.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.

Phineas R. Griffin, a young man 18 years old, of a respectable family in Vinton, Gallia county, Ohio, left his father's house about one year since, on the Sabbath, to go to meeting. He left without any conceivable cause or previous intimation, and without even a change of clothes, and has not, since the second day, been heard from. What makes the event the more mysterious is, that he has always been a dutiful and affectionate son, of correct habits and morals.

He is a young man of fair countenance and person, height of a moderate-sized man, with grey eyes, with a speck in one eye and brown hair, intelligent, active, and of respectable address, generally. Any intelligence of such a person communicated to Allen Griffin, Vinton, Galia county, Ohio, or to this office, will be gratefully received by his afflicted parents.

The Rich Man and the Day Laborer.—A merchant, who is as avaricious as opulent, has recently excited some public attention in London. He had obtained, at the cheapest possible rate, a poor day laborer to do some work in his house. The unfortunate man, fatigued with work, represented to the merchant's wife, that with so low wages he could not procure a glass of beer to quench his thirst. The compassionate woman gave him a tankard of ale, but the husband learned this circumstance on his return, and when he settled with the laborer, retained the value of the drink; the poor man exclaimed against it and raised so great an uproar that the police took him to prison. The next day when he was called before the Judge he explained the affair and was discharged on the payment of two shillings, but the merchant had another account to render to justice; he was condemned to pay fifty pounds sterling as fine for having sold beer without license, and the poor laborer, as the informer of the offence, received a third of the sum.—Courier des Etats Unis.

American Gold Pens in England.—Among the files per Caledonia steamer we notice an advertisement of Mr. Samuel Cave, Plymouth, England, in which he states that he has been appointed sole agent in that place by Messrs. Corwin, Wheeler & Co., of London, importers, for the sale of the Genuine American Gold Pens, superior to any in the world.—Scientific American.

The London Lancet commences an article about army surgeons, with the remark that "it is a subject of much and serious regret that the Duke of Wellington was not wounded during his war."

Philadelphia, May 9—9 P. M.

The passenger train of cars, this afternoon, when near Reading, ran over three children, killing one and severely injuring another, who is not expected to survive; the third escaped unhurt. They were children of a Mr. Young.—Balt. Sun.

Manumitted Slaves.

The Rev. Mr. King, a Scotch minister residing in Canada, West, has just passed through this city from the South, taking with him fourteen colored people, to whom he became heir by marriage. He takes them to Canada, that he may there find them a home, and secure to them education and religious instruction. He stated to us, that although several of them had been in his possession some four or five years, he had been unable, until now, to remove them from Louisiana, and manumit them, because they were connected by marriage with others not within his reach. On Monday evening he delivered, in the Central Presbyterian church, an address on the subject of slavery, in which he expressed his conviction that the church in the South is now doing what she can to improve the condition of the slaves, especially by preaching to them the glorious gospel; that no plan of securing freedom to the slave, which does not contemplate the influence of the gospel in effecting the object, can succeed; that the christians in the South should be encouraged in the good work in which they are engaged, not denounced for not having done what is impracticable; and that he could adopt the view of the ultra Abolitionists on this subject, because he had found them from experience impracticable.—Presbyterian of the West.

From Mexico.

Philadelphia, May 15, P. M.

Arrivals at New Orleans from Vera Cruz bring dates from that place to the 3d inst., and several days later from the city of Mexico.

Pena y Pena will assume the responsibility of ratifying the Treaty, if a qourum of Deputies do not assemble at Queretaro before the time limited by Mr. Sevier for its ratification.

Generals Pillow, Townsend and Cushing have arrived at New Orleans, where the Court of Inquiry will be re-organised.

Gen. Scott, & staff left the city of Mexico on the 22d of April, and reached Vera Cruz on the 30th, where they embarked on the ship Petersburgh direct for New York.

The Court of Inquiry.—Adjourned to meet at Frederick, Md.—The Court of Inquiry in the case of Gen. Pillow have adjourned, after a temporary organization at New Orleans, to meet at Frederick, Md., where the investigation will be continued to its close. This will cause quite a stir in "the Mountain city."

Wheat Harvest Began!—A late Montgomery (Alabama) paper says that a "specimen of new wheat was left at this office on Saturday last, April 20, fully ripe, from the plantation of Mr. Albert A. Holt, in this county, and will be harvested this week, if the weather is favorabl."

Burned to Death.—A little girl, the daughter of James Davis, six years of age, while building a fire in a stove, at the residence of her father on Elm, between Front and Columbia streets, accidentally set her clothing on fire, on Thursday, and was so severely burned as to cause der death yesterday morning.—Cin. Com.

James Gogers, late of Hanging Rock, and formerly of this place, died a few days since, very suddenly, while on his way home from N. Orleans, on a steamer.

Terrible Storm and Loss of Life.—The noth end of Montgomery county, Ky., was visited by a terrible and destructive storm on the 6th instant, by which the dwellings of Mr. Kemper and Mrs. Mitchell were prostrated, and the family of the latter buried beneath her dwelling.—Mrs. Mitchell and Mrs. Anderson were both killed instantly. Several other persons in the house of Mitchell, Mr. Calahan, Miss Treadway and Mrs. S. Mitchell, and her litule son, were severely injured; the latter, it is feared, mortally.

Manufactory in Vincennes.—The Wabash Navigation Company intend making, during the coming season, a dam a little above Vincennes, the construction of which will create water power sufficient for one hundred or more manufacturing establishments.

GREAT CONFLAGRATION.

Three Hundred Buildings Burned!—300 to 400 Families Houseless!—Loss From $200,000 to $300,000 at a low estimate.

The city of Detroit was yesterday visited with a most disastrous conflagration. It is estimated that the loss cannot fall short of $250,000, and at least 300 families are houseless.

The fire originated in the large storehouse between Bates & Randolp sts. unoccupied, by sparks from the propeller St. Joseph, which was firing up at the time, at about half past 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and continued to rage until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The warehouse occupied by De Wolf, the old Berthlet Market, the Steamboat Hotel; Wales' Hotel, &c., are all in ashes. Not a building is left standing below Jefferson Avenue, between Brush street and an alley between Bates and Randolph streets, except the warehouse of Brewster & Dugeon, & Thompson's Hotel, and many are burned above both streets.

On Jefferson Avenue, every building on the south side is destroyed from the new Campau Block, which was partially destroyed, to the second building below the Congregational church. All between that and the river is in ashes.

It is impossible to give the names of the sufferers, as all is excitement at the time of preparing this account.

The building in which was the Advertiser, was greatly damaged, but the materials were principally saved; but of course there will be a loss by damage and delay in publication.

Jefferson Avenue is almost entirely blocked up with furniture and store goods.

Mr. Wales, of Wales' Hotel, saved a great part of his costly furniture, but his loss is quite heavy, as is the loss of Major Biddle, who owned the building—probably $ 20,000 above insurance. This building was the first brick edifice built in Michigan, and was occupied by General Hull during the last war with England.

We are unable to say how much of the property destroyed was insured, but we presume very litule, from the fact that insurance companies declined taking insurance in that neighborhood.

The Steamboat Hotel, we understand, and the large block of Wales' Hotel was insured for only $5000. The small wooden buildings occupied as groceries and butcher shops below Jefferson avenue were probably all uninsured. The cabinet, wagon, blacksmith and bake shops, &c., were nearly all uninsured, and their loss is large. One cabinet shop contained about $2000 finished work which was all destroyed.—Detroit Free Press.

Fire at Camden, N. Y.—On Monday morning the extensive piano manufactory of Wm. Fenning, Camden, N. J., in which there was a heavy stock, was totally destroyed by fire. Loss about $11,000. Insurance $8,000. An adjoining frame dwelling, occupied by C. J. Hollis, Esq., was also totally consumed. It was the work of an incendiary.

Brig Malaga.—The brig Malaga, of Beverly, Mass., which was seized by the U. S. brig Boxer, nearly two years ago, in Kabenda Bay, (coast of Africa,) and sent to the United States on suspicion of her aiding and abetting the slave trade, was acquitted at the trial, and went out again to the coast of Africa, and made two trips between the Brazils and the coast. On the 11th of December last she was captured under Brazilian colors, by H. B. M. sloop Ferret, with eight hundred and thirty slaves on board, and taken into Sierra Leone and condemned.

Died, at his residence, Palermo, near Alexandria, on the 13th instant, the Hon. William Brent, Jr., of Richland, Virginia, late Charge d'Affairs of the United States at Buenos Ayres.

Br. J. S. Thrap, please send along as much more as you please of that same.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he givos the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribors, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encourging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	18
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chaneyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	5
Rev. A. S. Robinson, Ridgefield Four Cor. O.	7
Rev. J. Nichols, Hoskinsville, O.	5
Rev. R. M. Dalbey, Bethel, O.	5
Rev. O. P. Stephens, Catawba, O.	6
Rev. C. H. Williams, Bournville, O.	5
Rev. S. P. Kezerta, Bainbridge, O.,	8
Rev. T. Finkbine, Cincinnati, O.,	7
Rev. W. G. Fowler, Paintersville, O.	9
Rev. V. Lucas, Johnstown, Pa.,	5
Rev. W. Hatfield, Alum Creek, O.	5

☞ We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

☞ AN AGENT is wanted in every City and County in the United States to procure Subscribers and sell the following Elegant Work, just published and ready for delivery:—

SEARS' NEW AND POPULAR PICTORIAL DESCRIPTION OF THE UNITED STATES:

Retail Price $2,50.

☞ We have prepared this volume at great expense: the type large, clear and handsome; paper smooth and white; binding strong and substantial; engravings neat and appropriate. This work is decidedly the cheapest and most popular ever issued from the American press; and, from the orders already received for it, we are satisfied it is destined to have an immense sale throughout our vast extended country. From peculiar circumstances we are able to offer this book extremely low to book-pedlars, postmasters, and others, who may feel disposed to act as agents.

☞ The principles of morality and of a well-regulated freedom are introduced with sufficient frequency throughout its pages; the editor exercising a careful discrimination, while honestly desirous of enlarging its circumference, not to admit within the circle the elements of licentiousness, to which we are liable in the present state of society. Let every parent remember it is to an Education wisely and liberally provided for our people, America owes her proud superiority over other nations. This will preserve a love of freedom, and detestation of oppression, pure and unadulterated, in the young and rising generation.

☞ As the publisher is desirous of giving this useful Family Work a very extensive circulation, he 'offers the most liberal inducements to Agents,' and is satisfied that any man of good address can make from FIVE to TEN DOLLARS A DAY from the sale of it. There is scarcely a town or village in the Union but will furnish more or less subscribers. A small capital, of from $25 to $100, will be necessary to make a commencement.

☞ No letters attended to unless the postage is paid.—For further particulars, address

PROSPECTUS OF THE

Fourth Volume of the American Pulpit.

The American Pulpit is a Monthly Magazine, published in the city of Worcester, Massachusetts. It contains thirty-two pages in each number, and will be well supplied with that kind of Literature which is adapted to Ministers and Theological Students, such as Sermons, Sketches, Essays, Biographies, &c. &c.

The leading Sermon, will be of the highest order; and all the Sermons, we intend, shall bear the stamp of superiority. They will be sought, and obtained, so far as it is possible, from the most eminent Divines, on the American Continent. Arrangements are already made to accomplish this end; and no reasonable pains or expense will be spared, to make this department of the Pulpit superior to anything of the kind in existence.

The Sketches will be of the first class. We have accepted the proposals of an eminent minister in England to supply this department, partially—the Rev J Burns, D D, of London, author of "Pulpit Cyclopedia;" &c &c. By securing the correspondence of Dr Burns, the patrons of the Pulpit will enjoy a fine opportunity of comparing British and American talent in the same pages.

In the Miscellaneous Department will be found, Essays, Biographical Sketches, Poetry, and such et ceteras as shall enhance the value of the work.

The Pulpit is edited by

REV J D BRIDGE,

who will spare no pains to render it not only a welcome visiter to the Minister's study, but a 'profitable' one.—The work is evangelical in its character, and will avoid all controversy, except with sin and the popular errors of the day.

Its patrons, hitherto, have been gathered from all of the orthodox denominations in the country, all of whom the Publisher hopes to return. And we wish it distinctly understood, that Ministers in all the evangelical denominations are invited to become contributors to the pages of he Pulpit. We solicit from them, Sermons, Sketches of Sermons, or Criticisms, on any subject within the compass of Homiletics; and, that no one may feel embarrased in his desire to accept this invitation, we shall dispense wish the "List of Contributors" which has formerly appeared on our cover. We do this not out of any disrespect to any of the worthy names in that List, but that others may not be deterred from contributing, because not numbered in the distinguished catalogue.

By far the largest amount of matter contained in the Pulpit will be 'original;' but it will also be enriched by choice 'selections' from Books and periodicals.

Terms--One Dollar Per Annum, in Advance.

The Pulpit will be mailed regularly during the latter part of the month preceding that of its publication, so that it may reach its destination, in ordinary cases, by the first of each month.

We solicit Agents for the work. We will allow them a reasonable and just compensation for their services, and we authorize all the ministers of every evangelical denomination, and all laymen who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and who desire the extension of his kingdom on earth, to co-operate with us in extenhing the circulation of this work.

All orders for the work and all remittances for the same should be addressed to

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS.—The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

☞ All orders must be accompanied by the MONEY post paid, to insure attention.

POET'S CORNER.

The Invitation and Call.

O, come, come away,
From sin that dreadful monster,
Let Christ awhile upon you smile,
O, come, come away!
O, come and taste redeeming love,
And then its truth and friendship prove,
And onward sweetly move,
O, come, come away.

From death and the curse
In which you now are sinking,
Redeeming love will you remove,
O, come, come away!
O, come along and join our throng,
And with us sing the cheerful song,
And heaven will be your home,
O, come, come away!

While watchmen are standing
On the walls of Zion,
Inviting you to join in too,
O, come, come away!
O, will you still refuse the call,
And into misery blindly fall,
And drink the burning gall,
O, come, come away!

The bright morn of youth
Will soon be gone forever,
Its morning light will set in night,
O, come, come away!
O, come while youth is in its prime,
And seek redeeming love divine,
And in Christ's army shine,
O, come, come away.

When freed from this world
Of sorrow and temptation,
We'll sail above on wings of love,
O, come, come away!
And while angelic armies sing,
And make the heavenly arches ring,—
We'll praise our eternal king;
O, come, come away!

The Restrictive Rule--Per Contra.

NO. VI.

MR. EDITOR,—Prudentia in his number five endeavors by a strain of affected irony to ridicule the idea that preachers of the gospel by being continued long in a place lose their power to be useful to the people. After which he adds:

"Why are ministers so frequently less useful a third year on circuits than they were the two preceding? It is from the very fact that they know it to be the last year and cease making an effort to extend their influence. The fact that ministers are so frequently less useful a second year in stations and a third year on circuits, is generally used as an argument in favor of the Restrictive Rule, when it really is the Restrictive Rule which is the cause of it."

This idea of holding the Restrictive Rule responsible, for the abalement of a ministers' usefulness, is novel indeed. It seems that Prudentia has such an inveterate hatred, to this rule, that he not only heaps upon it all manner of calumny, but is determined to make it accountable for all the sins of the ministry. We never could have conceived such a sentiment as this unless we had thrown away our brains and thought with our skull. Our Lord, himself, has established the principle that a "prophet" is shorn of his "honor," or usefulness in his "own country" and among his own "kinsman." There is a reason for this, and the same reason which accounts for our Lord's maxim will account substantially for a minister's being less useful when he becomes familiar with the people. Take a consideration or two:

A desire of knowledge is one of the strongest original powers of the human mind. Man desires knowledge, not because of any end it leads to, but because his Creator has stamped the principle, upon his nature. And it is not only gratifying, but, it is his duty to cultivate this laudable passion. Introduced, therefore, to him a strange preacher of the gospel, whose store of information is original and new. From the impulse of this passion he sets under his ministry with great profit and delight, until he has became familiar with his stock of ideas. After that you could no more keep up his interest, in the ministrations of his preacher, than you could alter the destinies of nature. Education may form habits which will lead him every Sabbath to the house of God, but it is only to doze on his seat while the minister plays his part in the pulpit. He may respect him as a citizen, but to be interested in him as a "prophet," or teacher, is out the question, because he has now very little new and entertaining to give him. This, then one strong reason why ministers are more attractive in new fields of labor, and accounts for the loss of usefulness after a time.

Out of this desire for knowledge originates our taste for novelty, as it is called. And the passion for novelty, notwithstanding all that is said against it, when kept within due bonnds, is not only laudable, but is a powerful stimulant to the human mind, and an instrumentality that every wise ecclesiastical economist would wield for the promotion of religion. That man must be very limited in his observations, indeed, who is not sensible of the most powerful influence that strange and talented preachers wield over the Methodist community—yea, over the whole community. When a minister becomes familiar with the people, the absence of this principle is also another reason for his being less attractive and useful.

Again, most ministers are beset with imperfections. These are not so much in their way when they go into their charges as strangers. but as the public becomes once acquainted with these traits of character, it often accounts for their being less useful than they were at the outset. These, and other reasons, then, explain why ministers are not so useful a second or third year without making the Restrictive Rule the scapegoat to carry off their sins.

Beside, we cannot see why Prudentia's reason, that a minister will not labor to extend his "influence" a third year, because "it is his last," will not as well apply to his first year, as he is only stationed one year at a time, and can have no assurance that we will be continued over a second year.

"If no man can know how long he may be useful in a place, I hold it to be sinful for him to say that he will in no case stay longer than given period, or for those who have the control of his continuance to say it of [for] him."

So then, it has come to this at last; unless we work in the leading strings of Joseph Burns, John Scott, Washington Maynard, & Co., we must go to hell, it seems. For any man who will indulge in "sinfulness" is a sinner, and hell is to be the portion of all such. We had often heard the Restrictive Rule made a question of expediency, but never before have we heard it made a moral question. Prudentia must be a man of great and powerful "natural instincts" or he certainly never could have made this discovery. He is not only in a a fair way to achieve a reputation as a logician but also as a casuist. But, alas, this discovery, of our friend, makes sad work with Wesley and the Fathers of Methodism. For, inasmuch as they have both lived and died in their "sinfulness," there seems to be no hope for them, unless our enlightened author can some way or other save them on the score of ignorance. But it is a matter of great consolation to us who still survive the tomb, that there is, in our case, a small ray of hope, as there is a possibility that we may yet become enlightened, forsake our "sinfulness" and turn to the ways of Joseph and company and be saved.

Now the Fathers of Methodism instructed us that we must not only labor where we could be "useful," but where we could be the "most useful." But who but God himself knows whether that will be in the new field or in the old one. So, then, at last; it will probably be as well to submit ourselves to the council of our brethren, and the operations of the Restrictive Rule, and go ahead trusting in God. So far as our own experience is concerned, in this matter, we believe we never received an appointment in accordence with our own choice which was to us a very profitable one. But we have frequently received appointments against which every sensibility of our nature rebelled, but, by submitting to our destiny, and going forth trusting in the Lord, He has made those apparent unpropicious fields of labor sources of usefulness and great ministerial consolation. If the boys only had a correct opinion of their own merits they could not fail to see that their brethren would be better judges as to where they would be likely to be the most useful than they could possibly be themselves, as no man is so good a judge in his own case as another.

"Other churches have their settled pastors in almost every neighborhood, and the attention of the greater portion of community is directed to them to the neglect of such transient visiters as Methodist itinerants."

This is a fair specimen of the reckless declarations with which the essays of Prudentia abound, and which he would—perhaps for the want of something better—feign have us take for argument. Does he presume so much upon our ignorance as to suppose we cannot see for ourselves? but that we will "go it blind" merely because a "prudent" man says so.

Mr. Editor, I now answer such dogmatism with dogmatism, for this is the only way you can get along with a dogmatic man. I offer my assertion against his assertion and my declaration against his declaration. I affirm, then, the statement that the "community" have forsaken "Methodist itinerants," in favor of "settled pastors in almost every neighborhood," to be grossly false in fact, and I appeal to the public for the truth of the declaration. Far more public attention, if our senses do not deceive us, is given to "Methodist itinerants" than to any one church, if not all the churches in the land put together. Let the reader look over the circle of his acquaintance and determine this matter himself. I ask not for belief in either of our dogmatisms only as they accord with facts. It is true Sir, that similar unprofitable controversies, as that in which Prudentia assumes to be a leader, has been a great draw back upon Methodist "itinerants," but itinerancy is not to be held responsible for this. The agitators and leaders of these fruitless disputations are the ones whom God will hold accountable for the harm done thereby.

Mr. Editor, I wish to say, at the close of this article, that it was not my intention, at the outset, to give this special review of Prudentia, but as his admirers in various directions what few there is of them, kept harping that no one had answered Prudentia's arguments, this course seems to be inevitable to do justice to the subject. And if he should find the operation rather severe, he may thank his quondam friends for it. —The subject seems to call for one more article from me, with that I will close until something more is said.

Yours, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

THE RESTRICTIVE RULE.

MR. EDITOR: It would seem that it ought to be evident to every attentive observer, that no church organization, (as already observed by another,) can be productive of as much good or prosper, while some of its leading members are advocating a change in some of the essential features of its governmental practice, as though union existed among its members on the subject.

Not that we are opposed to a dispassionate investigation of any or all of the tenets and principles connected with, either the doctrines or government of the Methodist Protestant Church, that may be erroneous or detrimental to the success of the gospel; but that, brethren would present their objections, and also their antidotes or substitutes, so that they might not be misapprehended; and there be no accusations of misrepresentations, that all may know where they are, and where to have them. It is hardly to be expected, that an association of men possessed of ordinary intelligence or forethought, would be willing to loose from their moorings, and set sail without chart, rudder, anchor or cable, and expect to pick them up by the way. But I am one of the boys, still, Brother Springer, is, perhaps, near half right in his estimate of the productions of some, for, if the authors have the advantage of years to boast, the productions themselves, at least in some respects, present a youthful appearance.

A settled pastorate is denied to be the object of agitation. Then what kind of a system of itinerancy? From what we have seen we cannot determine. But right here we are answered, 'An itinerancy, untrammelled, and narrowed not down by restrictive rules,' in which the conference, the minister, and the people whom he serves, are to compose the stationing committee. Then there are to be as many stationing committees, as circuits and stations.

But suppose one of these new-fangled committees should disagree, who would settle the difference? The conference could not, seeing that it composes but a third part of the committee.—What is a restrictive rule? Is it one that will not allow an annual conference to station a minister longer than 2 successive years in a station nor longer than 3 in a circuit?

Then let the term be extended to 5—10 or 20 years, would that be better? No. For a removal at the end of any of those periods might be considered a violation of the openings of Providence, as much as under the present rule.

Suppose then the restrictions be removed from one portion of the church only, no matter whether from stations or circuits, would that be right? It would be partial, selfish, and create two distinct interests in the church and consequently divide it against itself. But our reformers desire a removal of all restrictions from both stations and circuits, and leave all of the ministers where they are, and there to remain, as long as they and their charge may agree, for the conference could not remove them, it being only one against two.

But this would be robbing the annual conference of its stationing authority, and if it be robbed of this, where do you find your itinerancy? It this would not be narrowing it down to a tolerably slim point, we are at a loss to determine what would. Can you perceive any difference between this, and a settled pastorate? It is true, that this system would afford a better temporal support to the regular clergy; but their number would be greatly reduced. It would involve a direct contract between the minister and his charge, and, perhaps in many cases, the amount offered as a salary, would determine the openings of Providence, whether to remain or depart.

Will those who wish to deprive the annual conference of its stationing authority, volunteer to leave their nest and go and call the poor, the maimed, the halt, the blind, and feed the Redeemer's lambs and sheep, that are scattered up and down through the thinly settled portions of our country, as long as they shall desire it, (for the minister should be as one that serves,) half fed and half clothed, for they are poor, and cannot do more?

The present system and modification of rights, of both preachers and people in the M. Prot. Church are equal, and the whole ministry one after another may, and should circulate from centre to circumference, supporting the labors of the weak by the labors of the strong in regular periods, and if one member suffers, all suffer with it, and vice versa.

But to keep the whole body in harmony, requires much of self-denial and resignation to the will of God by the ministers, and a willingness to count all things less for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ. But whatever diversity of talent, gifts and graces exist among them, circulates throughout the whole, and all are benefitted, all are edified, built up and confirmed in the way of life and salvation.

Hence we see, that a ministry to be willing to adopt and carry out an efficient itinerancy, must be the most self-sacrificing men in the world:—But by it they learn how to suffer need, and how to abound; how to become all things to all men, that they may be instruments in the hands of God to seek and to save that which is lost and themselves from being castaways.

Western Sketches.

DAVIS' CAPTIVITY.

In the fall of 1792, when the spies were discharged, Davis concluded he would make a winter's hunt up the Big Sandy river. He and Mr. William Campbell prepared themselves with a light canoe, with traps and ammunition for a fall hunt. They set off from Massie's station, (Manchester,) up the Ohio; thence up Big Sandy some distance, hunting and trapping as they went along. Their success in hunting and trapping was equal to their expectation. Beaver and otter were plenty. Although they saw no Indian sign, they were very circumspect in concealing their canoe, either by sinking it in deep water or concealing it in thick willow brush. They generally slept out in the hills, without fire. This constant vigilance and care was habitual to the frontier men of that day. They hunted and trapped till the winter set in. They now began to think of returning, before the rivers would freeze up. They accordingly commenced a retrograde move down the river, trapping as they leisurely went down. They had been several days going down the river—they landed on a small island covered with willows. Here they observed signs of Beaver. They set their traps, dragged their canoe among the willows, and remained quiet till late in the night. They now concluded that any persons, white, red or black, that might happen to be in their neighborhood, would be in their camp. They then made a small fire among the willows, cooked and ate their supper, and lay down to sleep without putting out their fire. They concluded that the light of their small fire could not penetrate thro' the thick willows. They therefore lay down in perfect self-security. Sometime before day, as they lay fast asleep, they were awakened by some fellows calling in broken English, "Come come—get up." Davis awoke from sleep, looked up, and to his astonishment, found himself and his companion surrounded by a number of Indians, and two standing over him with uplifted tomahawks. To resist in such a case, would be to throw away their lives in hopeless struggle. They surrendered themselves prisoners.

The party of Indians, consisting of upwards of thirty warriors, had crossed the Ohio about the mouth of the Guyandotte river, and passed thro' Virginia to a station near the head of the Big Sandy. They attacked the station and were repulsed, after continuing their attack two days and nights. Several Indians were killed during the siege, and several wounded. They had taken one white man prisoner from the station, by the name of Daniels, and taken all the horses belonging to the station. The Indians had taken, or made, some canoes, in which they placed their wounded and baggage, and were descending the river in their canoes. As they were moving down in the night, they discovered a glimpse of Davis's fire through the willows. They cautiously landed on the island, found Davis and Campbell fast asleep, and awakened them in the manner above related.

Davis and Campbell were securely fastened with tugs, and placed in their own canoe. Their rifles, traps, and proceeds of their successful hunt, all fell into the hands of the Indians. The Indians made no delay, but immediately set off down the river in their canoes with their prisoners, while the main force went by land, keeping along the river bottoms with the horses they had taken from the station—keeping near the canoes so as to be able to support each other in case of attack. Early the next day, they reached the Ohio. The wounded and prisoners were first taken across the Ohio, and placed under a guard. They returned with the canoes, (leaving their arms stacked against a tree,) to assist in getting the horses across the river. It was very cold, and as soon as the horses would find themselves swimming, they would turn round and land on the same shore. The Indians had a great deal of trouble before they got the horses across the Ohio. The guard who watched Davis and his companions, were anxious, impatient spectators of the restive disposition of the horses to take the water. Upon one occasion, the guard left the prisoners twenty or thirty yards, to have a better view of the difficulty with the horses. Davis and his fellow prisoners were as near to where the arms were stacked as were the Indian guard. Davis, who possessed courage and presence of mind in an eminent degree, urged his fellow-prisoners to embrace the auspicous moment, seize the arms, and kill the guard. His companions faltered—they thought the attempt too perilous—should they fail of success, nothing but instant death would be the consequence. While the prisoners were hesitating to adopt the bold plan of Davis, their guard returned to their arms, to the chagrin of Davis. This opportunity was permitted to pass by without being used. Davis ever after affirmed, that if the opportunity which then presented itself for their escape had been boldly seized, their escape was certain. He frequently averred to the writer of this narrative, that if Duncan McArthur, Nat. Beasley, or Sam. McDowell had been with him on this occasion, similarly situated, he had no doubt they would not only have made their escape, but killed the guard and wounded Indians, and carried off or destroyed the Indians' arms. He said, if it had not been for the pusillanimity of his fellow prisoners, they might have promptly snatched themselves from captivity, and done something worth talking about. The opportunity, once let slip, could not again be recalled. The Indians, after a great deal of exertion, at length got the horses across the Ohio, and hastily fixed litters to carry their wounded. They destroyed their canoes, and went ahead for their country. This body of Indians was commanded by a Shawnee chief who called himself Captain Charles Wilky. After Wayne's treaty, in 1795, when peace blessed our frontiers, the writer of this sketch became well acquainted with this Captain Wilky. He was a short, thick, strong man, with a very agreeable and intelligent countennace. He was communicative and social in his manners. The first three or four years after Chilicothe was settled, this Indian mixed freely with the whites, and upon no occasion did he show a disposition to be troublesome. He was admitted by the other Indians who spoke of him, to be a warrior of the first order—fertile in expedients, and bold to carry his plans into execution: Davis always spoke of him as being kind and humane to him.

The Indians left the Ohio, and pushed across the country in the direction of Sandusky; and as they were encumbered with several wounded and a good deal of baggage, without road or path they traveled very slow, not more than ten or twelve miles a day. As many of the prisoners taken by the Indians, were burned with slow fires, or otherwise tortured to death, Davis brooded over his captivity in sullen silence, & determined to effect his escape or die a fighting. The Indians moved on till they came to Salt Creek, in what is now Jackson county, O., and there camped for the night. Their manner of securing their prisoners for the nignt, was as follows:—They took a srong tug, made from the raw hide of the Buffalo or elk. This tug they tied tight around the prisoner's waist. Each end of the tug was fastened around an Indians's waist.—Thus with the same tug fastened around two Indians, he could not turn to the one side or the other without drawing an Indian with him. In this uncomfortable manner, the prisoner had to lay on his back till the Indians thought proper to rise. If the Indians discovered the prisoner making the least stir, they would quiet him with a few blows. In this painful situation, the prisoners must lay till light in the morning, when they would be unconfined. As the company of Indians was numerous, the prisoners were unconfined in day-light, but were told that instant death would be the consequence of any movement to leave the line of march, upon any occasion whatever, unless accompanied by an Indian.

One morning, just before day began to appear, as Davis lay in his uncomfortable situation, he hunched one of the Indians, to whom he was fastened, and requested to be untied. The Indian raised up his head, and looked round, and found it was still dark, and no Indians up about the fires. He gave Davis a very sever dig with his fist, and bid him lay still. Davis' mind was now in a state of desperation. Fire and faggot, sleeping or awake, were constantly floating before his mind's eye. This torturing suspense would chill his soul with horror. After some time, a number of Indians rose up and made their fires.—Davis again jogged one of the Indians to whom he was fastened, and said the tug hurt his middle, and again requested the Indian to untie him.—The Indian raised up his head and looked round and saw it was getting light, and a number of Indians about the fire, he untied him. Davis rose to his feet, and was determined, as soon as he could look round and see the most probable direction of making his escape, to make the attempt, at all hazards. He "screwed his courage to the sticking point." It was a most desperate undertaking. Should he fail to effect his escape, death, instant, cruel death, was his certain doom. As he rose up to his feet, with this determined intention, his heart fluttered with tremors—his sight grew dim at the though of the perilous plunge he was about to make. He rose up to his feet—stood a minute between the two Indians to whom he had been fastened, and took a quick glance at the Indians who were standing around him. In the evening the Indians had cut two forks, which were stuck into the ground; a pole was laid across these forks, and all their rifles were leaned against the pole. If he made his start back from the Indian camp, the rifles of the Indians who were standing round the fires, and who, he knew, would pursue him, would be before them; and as they started after him, they would have nothing to do but to pick up a rifle as they ran. On the contrary, if he made his plunge through the midst of them, they would have to run back for their guns, and by that time as it was only twilight in the morning, he could be so far from them that their aim would be very uncertain. All this passed through his mind in a moment. As he determined to make his dash through the midst of the Indians who were standing around the fires. he prepared his mind and body for the dreadful attempt. The success of his daring enterprize depended on the swiftness of his heels. He knew the bottom was good. A large, active Indian was standing between Davis and the fire. He drew back his fist and struck the Indian with all his force, and dropped him into the fire; and with the agility of a buck, he sprang over his body, and took to the woods with all the speed that was in his power. The Indians pursued, yelling and screaming like demons; but, as Davis anticipated, not a gun was fired at him. Several Indians pursued him for some distance, and for sometime it was a doubtful race. The foremost Indian was so close to him, that he sometimes fancied that he felt his clutch. However, at length Davis began to gain ground upon his pursuers—the breaking rustling brush was still further off. He took up along sloping ridge; when he reached the top, he, for the first time, looked back, and, to his infinite pleasure, saw no person in pursuit. He now slackened his pace, and went a mile or two further, when he began to find his feet gashed and bruised by the sharp stones over which he had run without picking his way, in his rapid flight. He now stopped, pulled off his waistcoat, tore it in two pieces, and wrapped them around his feet instead of moccasins. He now pushed his way for the Ohio. He crossed the Scioto river, not far from where Piketon, in Pike county now stands. He then marched over the rugged hills of Sunfish, Camp Creek, Scioto Brush creek, and Turkey creek, and struck the Ohio river eight or ten miles below the mouth of Scioto. It was about the first of January.—He was nearly three days and two nights without food, fire, or covering, exposed to the winter storms. Hardy as he undoubtedly was, these exposures and privations were almost too severe for human nature to sustain. But as Davis was an unwavering believer in that All-seeing eye, whose providence prepares means to guard and protect those who put their trust in him his confidence and courage never forsook him for a moment during his trying and fatiguing march.

When he arrived at the Ohio he began to look about for some dry logs to make a kind of raft, on which to float down the stream. Before he began to make his raft, he looked up the Ohio, and to his infinite gratification, he saw a Kentucky boat come floating down the stream. He now thought his deliverance was sure. Our fondest hopes are frequently blasted in disappointment. As soon as the boat floated opposite to him, he called to the people in the boat—told them of his lamentable captivity and fortunate escape. The boatmen heard his tale of distress with suspicion. Many boats about this time, had been decoyed to shore by similar tales of woe; and as soon as landed, their inmates cruelly massacred. The boatmen heard his story, but refused to land.—They said they had heard too much about such prisoners, and escapes, to be deceived in his case. As the Ohio was low, he kept pace with the boat as it slowly glided along. The more pitiably he described his situation, the more determined were the boat crew not to land for him. He at length requested them to row the boat a little nearer shore, and he would swim to them. To this proposition the boatmen consented. They commenced rowing the boat towards the shore, when Davis plunged into the freezing water, and swam for the boat. The boatmen, seeing him swimming towards them, their suspicions gave way and they rowed the boat with all their force to meet him. He was at length lifted into the boat, almost exhausted. (Our old boatmen, although they had rough exteriors, had Samaritan hearts.) The boatmen were not to blame for the suspicion. They now administered to his relief and comfort every thing that was in their power. That night or next morning, he was landed at Massie's station,—Manchester,—among his former friends and associates, where he soon recovered his usual health and activity.

THE COMPLAINER.—The man who is fond of complaining, likes to remain amidst the objects of his vexation; it is at the moment that he declares them insupportable, that he will most strongly revolt against every means which could be proposed for his deliverance. Indecision is in his character, and the misfortune of having to decide would be to him the greatest of all; for a choice always supposes a preference for some advantage, or an inconvenience to be shunned; and this man would not wish it to be supposed, or to suppose himself, that there is a single circumstance in his life in which he is able to follow his inclinations, or meet with an advantage: that there is even one in which he is not obliged to have the greatest possible inconvenience. He therefore increases misfortune: he wishes for mishaps; the fatal influence of his destiny is his favorite topic. A power against which no act can set him free, which compels him to suffer, without being able to protect himself, and permits him to complain without the fear of obtaining justice. This is what suits him: he asks nothing better than to sigh over his position, and to remain in it.

ACCIDENT.—Mr. Steele, employed at Barr's saw-mill, below Mill Creek Bridge, had both his thumbs cut off on Tuesday afternoon, by getting his hands into the lath machine.

To drive Rats away.

Mr. Charles Pierce of Milton, recommends potash for this purpose. The rats troubled him very much, having eaten through the chamber floor; they appeared in great numbers, and were impudent and troublesome; so that he felt justified in resorting to stratagem and severe treatment for their expulsion from the premises. He pounded up potash and strewed around their holes, and rubbed some on the sides of the boards and under part where they came through. The next night he heard a squealing among them which he supposed was from the caustic nature of the potash that got among their hair, or on their bare feet. They disappeared and he has not been troubled with them since that time, which was nearly a year ago.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.—In a factory at the corner of Callowhill and William streets, Philadelphia, a man named James Lithcoe, in the act of greasing a circular saw, had his right hand caught by it and severed from the arm near the wrist.

Thunder can be heard at a distance of thirty miles.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisnness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive orgāns, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. Original Poetry.

BR. BASSETT,—In looking over your paper of last week, my mind was forcibly struck with the account of the great monthly concert, that was held at Constantinople January 4th. And in contemplating the great work, which is, as yet just begun, and which seems to promise so glorious a result, my mind at once appeared to catch the spirit of poetry, or some other spirit, perhaps only that of rhyme: but let it be of whatever spirit it may; the Muses so constantly haunted my waking moments, that I have resolved to obey their dictations: and this being done, the next step is, to submit it to Br. Bassett's inspection; thence to the public eye; provided he deems it worthy a place in the Recorder.

LINES,

Suggested on reading an account, (in the last week's Recorder,) of the great monthly concert, in four languages, held at Constantinople, January 4th, 1848.

Methinks I see them now surrounding
The table of our common Lord,
And hearts uplifted—all adoring,
Their same eternal, Savior, God.

They now receive the broken emblem,
In memory of his dying love;
With joy now take the cup—thus owning
His blood can all their guilt remove.

And now they pray—behold how fervent—
Their breathings, with a power are fraught—
The little cloud so long appearing,
Is now seen lengthening, spreading forth.

O yes! they pray—and now prevailing,
Israel's God his power displays;
Though of different kindred nations,
All are one in shouts of praise.

They need no vain interpretation—
No clarion's blast to pierce the skies;
Jehovah's voice is heard,—thus saying,
These are mine, I bid them rise.

Now the sweetest notes of music,
Break on my enraptured ear;
In Armenian, English, German—
No confusion, discord there.

True, the voice of many nations,
In one long, loud song is heard;
Jews and Gentiles, Scots and Grecians,
All redeem'd through Jesus' blood.

Hark! the anthem reaches Heaven!
Angels listen—now rejoice!
From their bright, celestial stations,
Echo mortals' chiefest joys.

Glorious work! just now beginning,
Spread thy light, o'er land, and seas;
Gather gems from every nation,
Crown the world with love and peace.

NO. V.

The Sword Bearer.

"For he beareth not the sword in vain."

The proper object of civil government, so far as it can be made out by the light of revealed truth, is, at present, our readers will bear in mind, the matter of enquiry. We have already ascertained it to be, good to the governed, all and each. What kind of good, and by what means to be secured, is the next question. To this also, we think, a definite reply may be given. Let us hear what it is.

It has become fashionable, of late, to assign as a sufficient reason for enlarging the sphere of the Ruler's responsibility, authority and action, the supreme dignity of his office. They who insist upon confining the exercise of his functions within certain limits—limits coextensive, however, within the reach of instrumentality within his command—are charged with entertaining low and unworthy notions of the duties of government. They are said to strip from it all that could gain the reverence of mankind—to sink its claims to the level of the merest common place—to take from it all moral grandeur—and so to reduce its pretensions by their narrow definitions, as to divest it of its proper majesty, & exhibit it to the world as a menial, scarcely deserving of even the outward show of homage.—We take leave, by a remark or two, to push aside this obstacle to free enquiry in this matter. Real dignity—that which is truly becoming—that which may rightly claim and enjoy universal respect—attaches, not to extravagant pretensions, far outstretching the original design & obvious aptitude of any order of agency, but to its exact and constant fulfilment of its allotted part. Things are comely only in their place—out of it they are ridiculous. The horse doing the fitting work of a horse, humble as that is, excites admiration—the same animal, if we could conceive such a case, assuming to himself the responsibilities of a man, would but provoke laughter. Who that has witnessed the performances of "the industrious fleas," or has seen a canary go through the sword exercise, or has gaped in wonder of the performances of "the learned pig Toby," ever retired from such exhibitions without a sense of the incongruities they present. Now, the same law which settles our judgment in these instances, ought to guide it to a right decision in higher ones. The dignity of civil government consists in its doing well what it was appointed to do—and the assumption for it of a wider sphere than that which it is qualified to fill, is just one of those mistakes of self-conceit which our dramatist has held up to the merriment of the world, in the character of Bottom—"Let me play the lion too; I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar that I will make the duke say, 'Let him roar again, let him roar again.'"

On our guard, then, against being misled by these will-o'th'-wisp notions of moral grandeur, we proceed in our investigation and seek a response from the oracle, in reference to the question—What is it that the civil magistrate is appointed to do? We have it in one emphatic sentence, the more luminious because incidentally set forth—"He beareth not the SWORD in vain."

The sword, then, is at once the emblem and the instrument of magisterial authority. He weilds, for purposes of justice and protection, the physical force of a nation. It is his to be "a terror to evil works—a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil." Private retaliation of injury would render the social state impossible—would make its elements mutually repellent of each other—would set each man's hand against every one, and every one's against each. To prevent this, all resign their right to the use of the sworn, and trust it to a common arbitrator—civil government. To develop the principle of justice in law—to ascertain deviations from it by judicial process—to exact penalties by a resort, if need be, to physical force—these constitute the primary object of civil rule. The kind of good, then, which a subject is entitled to expect from those placed in authority over him, is the good that may be secured by the right use of the sword, made over exclusively to them by common consent—the vindication and defence of his just rights. And this is all—literally all, which in their magisterial capacity they can sucessfully effect. Here is the necessity for this "ordinance of God"—and this necessity, and this alone, is it duly qualified to meet.

Take now the general idea of magistracy suggested to our minds by the simple image under which it is set forth in Holy Writ and analyze it! The sword-bearer! Wherein is the special fitness of this representation of the intent and scope of government? Ponder it well—and see whether these are not the associations which it naturally calls up.

First, command. The appropriate utterance of physical force is "You shall." Hence, the laws of the State should be such only as may fitly be cast into the imperative mood. The magistrate is not appointed to teach or persuade—the sword is useless with a view to any such object—but to declare and to enforce. Legislation, then, should be, in all cases, the voice of authority, speaking beforehand what it will, if driven to it, employ the sword to encompass. And if this be so, the realms of thought and motive are beyond its jurisdiction—for neither can be reached by the only instrument at its command. Acts alone, or purposes so far as they are clearly made known by acts—come under the rightful cognizance of the sword-bearer. His laws should have exclusive reference to these, because with these only is he competent to deal. There are not a few individuals, we are aware, claiming, too, an intimate acquaintance with philosophy, who devolve upon government the task of doing for a people whatever may be best done by concert and organization. They leave out of sight, however, the primary element of all magistracy—command, enforced by the sword. Almost all public objects require concerted action, few, however, can be fitly accomplished by the agency of physical force. The proclaimed intentions of the ruling power may wear a most benevolent aspect, but he who would judge of them aright must submit them to the test of this question—"Are they such as may be backed in the last resort by the sword?" If not, kindly and generous as they may seem, they lie beyond the legitimate scope of government.

Secondly, judgment and the execution of it. These belong, of course, to the nation's sword-bearer. This man in the pursuits of his fancied rights, whether of liberty, property, or person.—What is my remedy? How shall my weakness prevail against his strength? Law has beforehand denounced the wrong, and affixed to it the penalty. Who is to ascertain the extent of the one, and to exact the other? Where is my appeal? To Cæsar—to him who is the minister of God to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil"—the depository of my country's physical force—the sword-bearer. He is "the strong arm of law"—clothed with authority to shield each from the aggression of others, and to vindicate for each his individual rights. To administer justice, then, is his especial business—the main end for which he is elevated to office. This done, even those who arrogate for him a sphere little short of that filled by Divine Providence, will be compelled to confess, "He beareth not the sword in vain."

Lastly, defence of the community. This also is fitly shadowed forth by the scriptural emblem of magisterial power. The Government mounts guard for the nation. Whilst all are busy within the enclosure of a nation's limits "the powers that be" keep watch and ward upon its walls—proclaim the advent of danger from without—decide upon the kind and amount of resistance to be opposed to it. In short, to command where command is necessary, to judge wherein judgment is required, to defend wherein defence is called for—these are the objects which civil government undertakes to effect for its subjects—which it is qualified by its very nature to attempt—which no other instrumentality can secure—and, which, consequently, define with the utmost precision, the boundaries of the sphere within which it is to act.

With a view to work out these, its legitimate results, civil government has a right to command, to the whole extent required, the resources of the empire—to claim homage, to exact tribute, to enforce service. Its authority so far at least as it enjoys the sanction of Christianity, extends no further. Whatever else it attempts, is beyond the terms and tenor of its commission. Its duties are not parental, but rectorial. It is summoned into existence, not to do good, in a positive sense, but to prevent mischief. It is neither chief baker nor butler, nor purveyor, nor almoner, nor presiding demagogue, nor high-priest—but it is SWORD-BEARER, and all that such an officer properly implies—nothing more, and nothing less.

Benevolent Associations.

American Tract Society.

Abstract of the Twenty-third Annual Report,
MAY 10, 1848.

All the departments of the society, its receipts, its printing and issues, its grants, and the prayerful labors of colporteurs and others accompanying the distribution, are largely in advance of any preceding year; and the rich blessing of the Holy Spirit, in our own and foreign lands, has been graciously bestowed.

Alexander Henry and Peter G. Stuyvesant, Vice Presidents; Hon. Samuel Hubbard and Rev. Drs. Codman and Palmer, Directors; and Dr. Stearns, an original founder and member of the Executive committee, have deceased.

New Publications sixty-three, in six languages, of which ten are volumes; making the whole number of publications on the society's list, 1,313, of which 231 are volumes; besides 2,303 publications sanctioned for publication at foreign stations, in nearly one hundred languages and dialects.

Circulated, during the year, 694,303 volumes, 6,987,262 publications, 211,730,285 pages; making the total circulation, in twenty-three years, 4,068,928 volumes, 96,949,992 publications, 2,035,001,326 pp. Christian Almanac, 128,000; American Messenger, upwards of 100,000 copies monthly—the expense of the paper having exceeded the receipts by $117.

Gratuitous Distributions, sanctioned in 2,172 distinct grants for the destitute, with those drawn by life-members, 40,948,459 pages, in value upwards of twenty-seven thousand dollars; including 24,933,738 pages distributed by colporteurs, and grants for foreign lands, the army and navy, seamen's chaplains, shipping, lakes, rivers, canals, home and domestic missionaries, Sabbath schools, etc.

Expenditures, for paper, printing, binding, engraving, and copy-right, $143,699 32; for presses and machinery, $6,741 70; remitted in cash for foreign lands, $11,000; expended for colportage, (exclusive of grants of publications to the value of $16,622 49,) $50,539; total expenditure, $237,155 95—leaving a balance in the treasury of $140 09. There was due for printing paper, payable within 4 months $16,509 07.

COLPORTAGE.—The report presents a cheering view of this enterprise, exhibiting the hand of God in its history, the necessity for its application to the destitute native and foreign immigrant population, and its adaptation to rural districts, German, French, Norwegian, and other immigrants, thoroughfarers, sailors, and soldiers, and various other classes; and the moral result in the promotion of education, temperance, Sabbath observance, individual conversions, and the revival of religion, under the divine blessing.

Colporteurs.—Two hundred and ninety-one colporteurs have been in commission for various terms of service, of which two hundred and six were in commission April first. Fifty of the number were employed among the German, French, Irish, Welsh, Norwegian, or Spanish population. Three have recently commenced their operations in Mexico. In addition to the above, one hundred and six students, from seventeen theological or collegiate institutions, have been employed as colporteurs during their vacation; making a total of 397 colporteurs in commission for the whole or a part of the year, apportioned among the States as follows: Rhode Island, 1; Connecticut, 4; Vermont, 2; N. York, 75: New Jersey, 15; Pennsylvania, 36; Delaware, 1; Maryland, 11; Virginia, 35; North Carolina, 3; South Carolina, 1; Georgia, 14; Florida, 2; Alabama, 15; Louisiana, 12; Texas, 5; Mississippi, 3; Arkansas, 3; Missouri, 12; Tennessee, 29; Kentucky, 20; Ohio, 47; Indiana, 23; Illinois, 12; Iowa, 4; Michigan, 8; Wisconsin, 3; and Mexico, 1. Nearly forty thousand families were visited by students, who sold more than forty-two thousand books, and granted more than ten thousand books and seven hundred thousand pages of tracts.

General Agents.—Fifteen general agents have been employed in various large districts, in presenting the society's claims, exploring destitute fields, and raising funds.

FOREIGN AND PAGAN LANDS.—Every year a more perfect knowledge of the language is acquired, new facilities for printing are enjoyed, and the value of the personal labors of missionaries, native assistants, and colporteurs among the people, accompanying the distribution of books by religious conversation and prayer, is seen to be more and more essential. The recent wonderful events in France and other countries of Europe, give great encouragement of access to the people by colporteurs and books.

The pecuniary grants for foreign lands are designated according to the immediate necessities of the countries and stations supplied; and those for foreign mission stations are sent through our respected foreign missionary boards, by whom they have been gratefully acknowledged.

Remitted during the year, to Toulouse, $300; Paris, $300; Baptist mission, France, $200; Belgium, $200; Basle, $100; Hungary, $200; Hamburg, $200, and $500 for American Baptist mission; Russia, $500; Italy, $100; Armenians of Turkey, $1,300; Nestorians, $300; Ceylon, $700; Madura, $700; Madras, $300; Lutheran miss., Guntoor, $100; Orissa, $300; Northern India, $1,500; Siam, Baptist mission, $300; Board of Commissioners, $200; China, General Assembly's Board, $300; Canton, Southern Baptist Convention, $300, Board of Commissioners, $300; Hong Kong, $200; Amoy, $300; Fuh Cohu, $200; Ningpo, $200; Shanghai, $200; Sandwich Islands, $700—total, $11,000.

American Sunday School Union,

Twenty-fourth Anniversary.

The Annual Meeting held in Philadelphia,—May 15, 1848.

Receipts $137,468 19, of which $31,092 95 were donations and legacies, $103,010 12 for sales, and $3,365 12 loans and balance from last year.

Expenditures—for stereotype plates, copyrights, engravings, paper, printing, and binding $79,729 96; missionaries and donations $35,715 77; expenses of conducting the business, paid for Bibles and Testaments and other books, rent, interest and incidental items $ 21,850 87. Total expenditures $137,296 60, leaving a balance of $171 59 in the treasury.

The Society is now indebted for paper, binding, &c., $14,193 25, which with the overdraft of the donation account ($8,017 99,) makes a present debt of $22,216 24, which added to the amount of loans bearing interest $44,960 29, exhibits an indebtedness of $67,176 53.

Sunday School Missionary Colporteurs.—Forty-three have been employed for various periods of time in seventeen different States and Territories.

These Sunday School missionary colporteurs have established 770 new schools, or 241 more than were established by the same means last year; and have visited and revived over 1,000 other schools, embracing 11,004 teachers and 81,808 scholars. They have distributed by sale and donation nearly $15,000 worth of religious books for children and youth. Their salaries and expenses were $11,894 04.

Donations of books, tracts, &c., have been made, (including $3,928 16, the details of which are not yet reported,) to the value of $13,629 35, and these, with the charges to the donation account specified in the general report of receipts and expenditures, makes the amount expended in missionary labor and donations $35,715, 77, which, with the over draft of last year, shows a balance against the donation account of $9,744,38; deduct books in hands of missionaries, 1,729 39, makes the actual expenditure of the Society for Sunday School missionary colporteurs and donations to Sunday Schools, $8,017 99 beyond the contributions received for this purpose.

Many urgent applications from various parts of the country for missionary labor, and donations of books to poor schools, have been unavoidably denied for want of means to supply them.

Publishing Department.—Eighty-three new publications have been issued during the last year, amounting to a fraction short of ten thousand pages, 18mo. new reading matter. Of the whole number of publications the past year 53 were written for the Society. Not more than one in ten of the works offered for publication during the year, have been approved for the Society's purposes.

The Circulation of the Sunday School Journal and Youth's Penny Gazette has increased; of the latter over 150,000 numbers have been published per month, or more than 2,000,000 numbers in the year. This is not attended with profit to the Society, the price merely covering the outlay for paper and printing.

The total value of publications distributed during the year is $125,873 33, a larger amount than has ever been circulated by the Society in any one year since its organization.

Narrative.

A ROYAL SPY.

The friends of the restoration were begining to recover from the alarm of the hundred days, and a numerous society, composed of discontented Imperialists, were assembled at the Hotel of the Duc de Rovigo. The conversation turned on the eclipsed glories of the Tuilleries, and the difficulty of forming a junction between the old and new nobility. On a sudden the folding doors were thrown open, and an attendant, in a loud voice, announced a Messenger from the King. At these words every one arose, for they considered that a message brought by an officer of the household must be an advance towards reconciliation. The gentleman approached the master of the house, and bowing, placed a billet, sealed with the royal arms, in his hand. The Duke broke the seal, and read the contents to his guests. There were but three lines.

"The King will receive the Duke de Rovigo to-morrow after mass.

Signed LOUIS XVIII."

After the departure of the Messenger, various conjectures were formed respecting the first overture of the court, and it was late before the party seperated, having first agreed to meet on the following evening, to learn the result of the important interview. The Duke on rising next morning, took up the Odes of Horace, and read over some of the most remarkable passages—the flatterer: and then dressing, desired his valet to take more than usual pains with his coiffure.—Arrived at the Tuilleries, this favorite minister of the Emperor, who was accustomed to the homage of an obsequious crowd, had now to elbow his way as he best might, in order to arrive at the door of the sanctum sanctorum. He was announced, and the King waved his hand to Messrs. Blacas, Lachaitre, and Abregeax, who retired smiling. The door closed after them, and the great subject of the empire found himself tete-a-tete with the King of France.

'Be seated, M. le Duc.'

'Sire, it is my duty to stand in your Majesty's presence.'

'Sit down, I tell you, for I have 'much to say,' and the Duke obeyed with an expression of respect, and placed him in an attitude to listen with attention to the Monarch.

'You were a long time Minister of police to Bonaparte, M. le Duc?'

'Sire, his Majesty the Emperor, honored me by naming me of his council.'

'Far be it from me to blame your devotion,—I honor faithful servants. But France has recovered her legitimate prince, and you are now my subject. Duc de Rovigo, in that character, I ask you a piece of service, which to me is of some importance.'

'Will your majesty put my zeal to the proof?'

'The question I am about to ask you must be answered with sincerity.'

The Duke bowed.

'It is the misfortune of princes to be surrounded by traitors; not only in prosperity, but in adversity. I am in doubt on a point which you alone can relieve, and again I appeal to your sincerity.'

'I shall obey your Majesty!'

'Well, then it is my pleasure that you do not quit my presence until you have told me the name of the wretch who betrayed his unfortunate master at Hartwell, and corresponded with you?'

'I did not expect this question,' murmured the ex-Minister of Police, turning pale.

'Sir, I wait your answer!'

'I am profoundly grieved that I cannot obey your Majesty in this particular; honor commands me to be silent.'

'Darkness brings counsel, Duc de Rovigo, therefore, I give you till to-morrow, when I hope for your interest, as well as mine, that you will be more conformable.'

The Duke regaining his hotel, shut himself in his cabinet, and refused to see any of the numerous visitors, whom curiosity brought to his door.

The following day he again presented himself before the King.

'Well M. le Duc, I hope a night's reflection has induced a resolve to oblige me.'

'I have spent the night, Sire, in regretting that your Majesty had not tried my devotion by requiring a possiblity.'

'Then you persist in your refusal?'

'Irrevocably, Sire.'

'Perhaps we may have the means of rendering you more accommodating. Do you know this writing?' continued the Monarch, taking from his bureau a packet of letters.

'This writing is mine!'

'And this?'

'Is also mine; your Majesty greatly surprises me!'

'Examine these papers Monsieur, if you please you will find that I have in my hand the whole of your correspondence with your agent at Hartwell. You perceive that I am very nigh the truth; but I would have it from your lips, so M. le Duc, I ask again the man's name.'

'Will your Majesty be pleased to pity my embarrassment?'

Instead of convicting and punishing one unworthy person, would you rather that my suspicions should attach to all the companions of my exile?'

The Duke lamented the awkward situation he was placed in.

'To relieve your scruples, shall I tell you the amount of the sums which you transmitted to your emisary—was it not 4,382,000 francs?'

'Good heaven!' exclaimed the Duke, 'who could have informed your Majesty?'

'Have I been rightly informed?'

'I cannot deny the exactitude of the statement.'

'And yet you hesitate?'

'Will your Majesty permit me to retire?'

'Not yet, M. le Duc—presently. I see that to triumph over unconquerable obstinacy, I must resort to other means.' And the Monarch wrote the following question, and placed it before the Duke:—'The King of France desires the Duc de Revigo, to divulge the name of the traitor who sold his secrets at Hartwell.' The character of the writing caused the Duke to tremble, and he returned the paper to Louis, who immediately added these words:—'If the Duke de Revigo resists the order of his King, he will, perhaps, yield to the entreaties of his best friend, the Duke de Blacas?

'Gracious powers!' cried the ex-Minister, his eyes fixed on the paper, 'I am confounded—that name of Blacas—my correspondence in your hands, Sire; that writing so similar—my ideas are wholly confused—I know not—'

'And you will have the solution of the enigma from me. I will be more communicative than you, Duc de Revigo. Know then, that the spy of Bonaparte—your correspondent at Hartwell—was no other than Louis XVIII. King of France and Navarre. Necessity taught me to disguise my writing. The sums of money received from you were distributed in relieving the distresses of my poor emigrant, who were suffering from privations of all kinds; and thus you contributed to a good work unknowingly. This secret was confided to only one friend—my faithful Blacas, and you evinced want of tact when you selected him, Mons. le Duc. How could you think that a gentleman so nobly descended could sell his sovereign for gold, and become that hateful thing—a spy?'

The Duc de Rovigo, completely abashed, bowed, and retired without the reply; and a smile of malicious triumph lighted up the features of the Monarch as the fallen ex-Minister left his presence.

FROM THE CITY OF THE SALT LAKE.—Letters have been received in this city, by persons connected with the Mormon colony at the City of the Salt Lake, dated in the latter part of December. They represent the situation of the colony as a comfortable one. They had not been molested by the Indians, many of whom were in the habit of visiting the city. An enclosed square, formed of continuous dwellings on each side, facing inwards, intended for defence, of the adobe material, and been erected, as well as other buildings for the colony, comprising some three thousand souls. Up to the time of writing, only two deaths had occurred in the colony. Last fall, they sowed about three thousand acres of wheat, and they intended, besides, to put in a spring crop of about six thousand acres more. If the crops should prove good, they will have grain to spare to the imigrants to California, taking the Salt Lake route. They had erected two saw mills and a grist mill, and were industriously employed. Seed potatoes were selling at ten dollars per bushel, peas fifty cents per pound, and other things at about the same rates.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Effects of Encouragement.

The following happy illustration of the influence of encouragement upon children, and of the importance of understanding a child's character, and addressing him in the right way, we are unable to credit to the author. We find the extract as we give it:—

Last Summer, I had a girl exceedingly behind in all her studies. She was at the foot of the division and seemed to care but little about her books. It so happened that as a relaxation, I let them at times during school hours, unite in singing. I noticed that this girl had a remarkably clear, sweet voice; and I said to her, "Jane, you have a good voice and you may lead in the singing." She brightened up, and from that time her mind seemed more active. Her lessons were attended to, and she soon gained a high rank. One day as I was going home, I overtook her with a school companion, "Well Jane," said I, "you are getting along very well, how happens it, you do much better now than at the begining of the quarter?"

"I do not know why it is," she replied.

"I know what she told me the other day," said her companion.

"And what was that?" I asked.

"Why, she said she was encouraged."

"Yes, here we have it—she was encouraged. She felt that she was not dull in every thing. She had learned self-respect, and thus she was encouraged,"

Some twelve or thirteen years ago, there was in Franklin school an excessively dull boy. One day the teacher wishing to look out a word, took up the lad's dictionary, and on opening it, found the blank leaves covered with drawings. He called the boy to him.

"Did you draw these?" said the teacher.

"Yes sir," said the boy with a down-cast look.

"I do not think it well for boys to draw in their books," said the teacher, "and I would rub thes out if I were you; but they are well done. Did you ever take lessons?"

"No sir," said the boy, his eyes sparkling.

"Well, I think you have a talent for this thing. I should like you to draw me something when you are at leisure at home, and bring it to me.—In the meantime, see how well you can recite your lessons,"

The boy felt he was understood. He began to love his teacher. He became animated and fond of his books. He took delight in gratifying his teacher by his faithfulness to his studies; while the teacher took every opportunity to encourage him in his natural desires. The boy became one of the first scholars, and gained the medal before he left the school. After this he became an engraver, laid up money enough to go to Europe, studied the works of the old masters, sent home productions from his own pencil, which found a place in some of the best collections of paintings, and is now one of the most promising artists of his years in the country.—After the boy gained the medal, he sent the teacher a beautiful picture as a token of respect, and I doubt not, this day, he feels that that teacher, by the judicious encouragement he gave to the natural turn of his mind, has had a great moral and spiritual effect on his character.

A CHILD'S TEARS.—A Welsh clergyman asked a little girl for the text of the last sermon.—The child gave no answer—she only wept.—He found out that she had no Bible in which to look for the text; and this led him to inquire whether her parents or neighbors had a Bible; and this led him to begin a Bible Society for Wales. Some good people in London said, "Why should not we have a Bible Society for England, too?" and others said, "And for France and the nations of Europe?" And then another said, "And why not have a Bible Society for the whole world?" The tears of that little girl led to the formation of the British & Foreign Bible Society.

BRIDGE AT NEWARK.—We are pleased to learn from the Newark papers, that the commissioners of Licking County have made contracts for the erection of a bridge over the South fork of the Licking creek as the point where it is crossed by the Jacktown road. Jas. Moore, of Nashport, has the embankment and mason work to do, while the wood work is given to Mr. W. A. Bos. The bridge is to be on the plan of the Putnam bridge, and is to cost, by estimate, $4,000, to be completed by December 1st.

Indian Rubber is now proposed to insulate telegraphic wires. Gutta percha has been tried in the Pasaic river with so much success that the company propose to make an effort to cross from Jersey City to New York by laying insulated wire under water. Mr. Wilson, of the Trenton Telegraph office, has suggested to the company, according to the Gazette, the experiment of insulating their whole line with gutta percha, and burying it six inches in the ground instead of supporting it, as now, upon poles. At present the great exposure of the wires subjects them to innumerable and constant interruptions.

Cincinnati, May 19, 9 P. M.

A slave trader, from the South, purchased a negro man, wife, and child yesterday, in Covington, Kentucky, and placed them in jail for safe keeping. Last night the woman, in the excitement of despair, we suppose, murdered her child by cutting its throat—after which the man cut the woman's, and then his own. The former are dead—the latter is living, with but faint hopes of his recovery.

The Washington (Pa.) Press states that on Thursday morning the citizens in the neighborhood of the residence of Mr. Charles Gree, on Rich Hills were aroused from their slumbers by the appearance of fire, and on reaching the spot found the bodies of Mr. Greer wrapped in flames, and the house of Mr. and Mrs. Greer, stretched upon their bed and burnt to a cinder! It is supposed that the old couple had been murdered in their bed by some demon in human form, in order to possess himself of G's. money, and that after committing the robbery, to cover over the villainy, had set fire to the house.

FEATHERED PHENOMENON.—Thousands of birds called in popular phrase, sea, swallows, about the size of doves, made their appearance on Friday last, near the lower Millcreek bridge. They have beautiful plumage, red legs, and are web-footed, and the measurement from tip to tip of wings is from twelve to fifteen inches. One is now at Mr. Coates' on Third street, where it can be seen. No one knows whence they came or where bound. Like the Snowbird and the Martin, they may be ranked among the ornithological mysteries.—Cin. Com.

SOME NOTICE OF "ASAPH."

Mr. Editor: I confess that I have been strongly tempted to answer your correspondent Asaph, "according to his folly," but a little reflection has convinced me that a private injury, was not a suitable subject to be introduced into your paper; and that so much of my intended reply to him, as could be construed into a spirit of retaliation, would injure the cause I profess to advocate; as well as being wrong in itself. He has however paid so little regard to facts, and has manifested a spirit, so repugnant to the station he holds in society, that much I may have to say, may appear to partake somewhat of that spirit, though not intended for that purpose, but to expose the absurdity of his communication. He seems to be concerned for my consistency, in remaining in a church, "which not only tolerates, but actually sanctions and supports what "he (I) considers as a "nuisance," "mocking," "blasphemy," and the like." If it were true that the church had done this, (which it has not,) he manifests rather too much solicitude, seeing he does not belong to the Presbyterian Church, nor to a church that holds communion with Presbyterians. In the "Directory for the worship of God in the Presbyterian Church" chapter iv, section 2d it says, "In singing the praises of God, we are to sing with the spirit, and with the understanding also; making melody in our hearts unto the Lord. It is also proper, that we cultivate some knowledge of the rules of music; that we may praise God in a becoming manner, with our voices, as well as with our hearts."

"Sec. 3d. The whole congregation should be furnished with books, and ought to join in this part of worship." This rule has been in existence for about fifty years, certainly, and has received the sanction of the General Assembly for that period, without being repealed, and the church in Putnam, as such, has taken no action, to alter or annul this rule; neither have they the power to do so, if they would. The question may be asked what have I condemned as "blasphemy," &c. I reply the frequent setting of tunes, by such Choristers as Asaph, with which the congregation are unacquainted, for the avowed purpose of preventing them from taking part in singing such hymns, as "Come we that love the Lord"—"Ye tribes of Adam join"—"Let every creature praise"—&c., &c., and the sanctioning of such a practice by the choir. There is not a shadow of truth in Asaph's assertion, that I regard "Choir singing as a "nuisance," " and I very much doubt whether he had ever read the article in your paper of the 4th instant, to which my article was intended to apply. Certain it is, that what you term "speaking strongly against unprofitable choir singing" did not excite the indignation of "Asaph," or "one of the choir," sufficiently to produce a reply; but when I asserted that the evil existed here at the west, and made use of the term 'blasphemy,' then they feel themselves especially called upon to attack me: And, Asaph admits the propriety of the practice while, "so long as numbers in the congregation attempt to sing who have neither skill, ear, voice, or judgment—so long will a judicious leader hesitate to give out such tunes as are certain to be executed by such executioners." The question then is not whether such a practice as I have condemned, exists here, but whether it is right. That there will always be, in every congregation, persons not well skilled in the science of music, I admit, but his right to exclude any part of the congregation, designedly, from participating, I again assert is "blasphemy," according to the legitimate meaning of the word: and all who sanction are also guilty of "partaking in the sin." It is evident that he wished to be understood as referring to me, in his references to those having special disqualifications for worshipping God in this ordinance. He certainly could not have any personal knowledge of my qualifications, or disqualifications, from what he had seen, or heard in the "Great Congregation," for I have not since he has lead the singing here, or for sometime previous, been in the habit of taking a part, for I cannot consent to receive from him, or any other MAN, permission to do, occasionally, what God has enjoined as my duty, and privilege constantly. If God has given me talents which I have neglected, or refused to cultivate, as I ought, to his glory, to Him I must render my account, and not to Asaph; or any other man, no matter what his station. My reverence for rank or titles is very limited, so that I seldom tremble, much, in the presence of the great ones of the earth, even if they write Professor after their names. As to his qualifications to discharge the duties of a teacher of music, I do not pretend to judge, as I have not heard him except in the choir. It is his assuming the province of the DEITY to which I object. As to his parallel between preaching, praying, and singing, I am of the opinion he will not feel much pride in the knowledge of Scripture which he has exhibited, or the truthfulness with which he has interpreted the command of God to preach; or of the obligation for all to pray in the "Great Congregation." Certain it is, that as I have "refused to be charmed, though he charmed ever so charmingly," so I shall probably refuse his services, as my religious instructor. He has also intimated that I had contended that "no new tunes should be sung in the church." This is also an untruth; nor is that my opinion. But that I object to making new tunes the RULE, and those which the congregation do not know, the exception: and especially, when the character of the hymn anticipates that all should unite in praising God with their voices. That the extent of the evil complained of, may in some measure be appreciated I will state, that in the few years that the Presbyterian Church in Putnam has been organized, there has, if I am not greatly mistaken, been four large volumes of music books introduced into the meeting house, for the use of the choir, and as a general rule, the members of the choir have to use these books on the Sabbath, to assist in conducting that part of worship.

I think, if Asaph means to be understood that thirty measures of hymns have been, or are in use, in our congregation, differing from those to be found in the books in use previous to the one now used the facts will not bear him out in the assertion. As to his observations about forms of prayer, Episcopacy and Romanism, let them go for what they are worth; & so with his personal reflections. and insinuations, as to "those who never lift to God the voice of praise, except in the Great Congregation;" and edifying the church by their hideous noises, &c., let the people judge. That the Chorister has other motives besides shewing off the choir, and his own skill I admit; he wishes to prevent the congregation from spoiling the music, by their "hideous noises," or "voices as unmusical as the braying ass" or because they "cannot keep time, pitch or spirit of the music." Verily he has been kind enough to admit the charge, that at least one object he has, is to "shew off the choir, or his own skill. As to the writer's desire to "force his own views upon the congregation,"—"Of the taste and wishes of others," &c., that is begging the question, but I do not admit that expediency is the rule of judging, but God's revealed will should decide the question. What that says I will abide by. As to the kind invitation in his last paragraph, it is assuming rather too much, for him to intimate that all have neglected to qualify themselves to discharge he duty in question acceptably, except those who have received his instructions, or have learned all the tunes that Lowel Mason may have published, (for the sake of the loaves and fishes.) There may be some in the congregation who have before this teacher was born, devoted more time to the cultivation of music, than he has done, without so large a compensation, and whose present avocations will not admit of their accepting his kind invitation; and who are still unwilling to be deprived of the privilege of worshipping God in the way of his appointment; in the house they have dedicated to his service, at the will of a stranger, or, even by a majority of voices, for they have yet to learn, that a majority are infallible: Certainly Peter and John thought otherwise, when the rulers of the Jews commanded them not to preach in the name of Jesus.

A PRESBYTERIAN.

In my reply to "One of the Choir," I observe the word 'obscure' for absurd in a quotation from his article. Probably my writing is to blame.

Choir Singing Yet Again.

Mr. Editor: I can neither be dragged nor driven into a newspaper war with your correspondent, "A Presbyterian." It is not to be presumed that the public care anything about our personal likes or dislikes, and while it might gratify the lovers of discord to witness a personal controversy between us, my unfeigned respect for your correspondent deters me from engaging in that kind of discussion which his article seems intended to provoke.

I take leave of the subject by repeating my former suggestion, that the church are freely competent to abate the "nuisance" (if our choir is regarded as one,) and if no effective measures are taken to do so, my respected brother should begin to suspect that he has the misfortune to be, "on a jury with eleven obstinate men."

Yours truly,

A MEMBER OF THE CHOIR.

Arrow Rock, Mo., April 22, 1848.

Mr. Editor: It seems to be my deplorable task to remain where the evil practice of slaveholding exists, though in a much milder form, than in the more southern States. When I behold the oppressions which come under my notice almost daily, (though mild) I am left almost in suspense, especially when these things are practiced by professors of religion. Neither I nor any other man would wish to be thus treated. And indeed it looks exceedingly strange to see our fellow creatures used and treated as chattels. The prices of the three following articles, negroes, mules and cotton in the south, always rise and fall at one and the same time. Thus is governed the market in this State for negroes and mules. When the price of cotton is up in the south, mules are worth from 30 to 60 dollars, whilst the souls and bodies of men are considered worth from 100 to 700 dollars. The anguish of spirit, which is produced by the horrible traffic, is beyond description. But I must say, I believe there are many good men who own slaves. I could not consent however, under any circumstances, to occupy their relation, no, not for the whole United States.

AN EYE WITNESS.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Columbia Ct., May 20th 1848.

Br. Bassett: It appears to us due to the cause of God & Justice that we should say a few things in relation to the Columbia Circuit. We lament poor fallen nature through which the adversary of souls has affected such an unpleasant state of things among us. Those acquainted with Columbia circuit know that there is a diversity of sentiments respecting some subjects in common agitation, especially slavery, and it would need but little investigation by the unprejudiced to decide that those that have had the charge of this circuit for the last two or three years have not always remembered the injunction, "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

With relation to Br. G. M. Scott's communication (we saw it first in the Recorder) we could not from its mildness have consented to erase one sentence—and yet I am credibly informed that Br. S. E., is making quite a handle of it.—Had that brother left the Church without endeavoring first to discourage and afterwards to tear down the circuit, we could have taken him by the hand and bid him God speed. But we commend him to God, and refer him to the 11th chapter of 1st Corinthians. We have always believed Br. E. to be a devoted Christian. but a little too fond of promotion (in which he has been pretty well fed among us.) All are aware that at our last An. Conference, he was advanced to elders orders from necessity, inasmuch as he was appointed to take charge of this circuit. But Columbia Circuit must yet live. We want a minister next year who is humble, pious and devoted, and who will spare no pains for the purity and piety of the Church. Brother Scott is devoted and is doing all he can.

Things I Don't Like.

Mr. Editor: It is easier to see faults than to rectify them. I will notice a few.

I don't like to see at the beginning of articles so frequently, something like this: "your excellent paper," or something that looks like making an editor trumpet his own praise.

I don't like to see in a communication a certain brother, preacher or President applauded too high, placing him under the painful necessity to blush a little, or get a new hat.

I don't like to see a young preacher, whose head is the biggest part of him, and if the bump of self esteem was gone, would be too small, undertake to condemn the writings of Dr. A. Clarke, J. Wesley, Watson, &c.

Religious Intelligence.

OHIO DISTRICT.

Port William Ct., May 24, '48.

Br. Bassett: I rejoice to have it in my power to contribute to the great fund of revival intelligence that has appeared in your most excellent paper from time to time during this Conference year.

Our Presidential protracted meeting commenced at Port William, on the sixth of this month, and continued seven days. We had been looking forward to this meeting in anticapation of a revival, and thank God we were not disappointed. The Lord of Hosts met with us at our first coming together, and our souls were animated with Divine love; and from that time the meeting appeared to increase in interest. The word preached, not only encouraged believers, but also got hold of the hearts of sinners. The anxious seats were crowded from time to time, with those enquiring, "Know ye him whom my soul desireth to love?" and the house was made to echo with the shouts of new born souls. Our sacramental season was one of the best I ever witnessed. Here were surrounding the table of our common Lord, believers of different names without distinction, Protestant Methodists, Episcopal Methodists, Disciples, and others, in all, over one hundred, commemorated the death & sufferings of the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." It appeared almost like a heaven on earth begun. Brother Young continued with us until the close, and labored with his characteristic zeal. We also had the assistance of Brother Channell from Washington circuit, and the unstationed preachers of this Ct. The meeting resulted in an addition of twenty-seven to the church, the most of them young men and women of great promise. Sixty-five have united with us thus far on this circuit, this Conference year. To God be all the glory. Amen.

Superintendent.

WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, June 1, 1848.

Help!—Our receipts for a month or more past, have, somehow, so fallen off, as not perhaps to afford more than half enough to meet our expenses, and this week we believe the amount is less than any previous week during the present volume. We are consequently falling behind in our obligations to others, which is very unpleasant to us. Now many a brother who owes us two dollars or four, for the paper or for pamphlets, is not aware that the amount due from him would essentially aid us. We ask not charity—but only our dues. We doubt not that many a clever brother will deem this hint sufficient, and respond at once.

Thanks.—Hon. N. Evans, our Representative in Congress will again accept our acknowledgments for documents sent us, which we are almost daily receiving.

Daily Christian Advocate.—This spirited publication answers well the purpose proposed in its publication, to give full reports of the proceedings of the General Conference during its session. It is a good idea. We missed several numbers each week for the first two weeks, but it since comes regularly. Edited by Rev. Wm. Hunter. It is from his paper that we make out our weekly abstract of the proceedings.

Christian Fellowship, Again.—Our readers may recollect that we copied an article a week or two ago from the Family Quarto, in reference to the friendly interchange between the Presbyterian Churches of Zanesville and Putnam, Old and New School, appending thereto some friendly sentiments and suggestions of ours. Our brother of the Quarto, in his last paper, says in reference to our "friendly remarks," "we most cordially respond in the feelings of our heart." As however he thinks we misunderstood him a little, he proposes in the following statement to set us right in the matter.

"Our stating that the Putnam church was organized antecedent to the general division of the church at large, was set down as an additional reason for the cultivation of fellowship; not as an apology for it. We trust our good Brother will accept the correctioon. We unite with him most cordially in every effort to bring about christian fellowship wherever it can be done in accordance with truth."

Thank you Br. Brown.

General Conference, M. E. Church.

Monday, May 22, 1848.

Bishop Morris presided. A Report was presented from the Committee on the State of the Church, in reference to the line of separation, which was made the order of the day for Wednesday. J. B. Finley and others recommended sitting with closed doors, whilst the report should be discussed, but this did not prevail. Another Report of same committee was presented, concerning the property question. Made the order of the day for Wednesday. A petition was presented from chiefs of the Wyandot tribe of Indians, asking aid in paying for the erection of a house of worship. The action of the Conference was favorable to the wish of the petitioners. A Report in reference to the German Missions, recommending no change, was adopted. A Report was presented from Committee on Missions, upon the Memorial from Oregon, recommending that an Annual Conference be established on the Pacific coast, embracing Oregon, California, and New Mexico, to be called the Oregon and California Mission Conference. The Bishops are to appoint a superintendent for said Conference, one of their number to visit Oregon within the next four years if practicable.

Tues. 23.

Bishop Hamline presided. Session occupied chiefly, in discussing Reports on Boundaries.

Wed. 24.

A Report of Committee on the State of the Church, respecting memorials from persons in Kentucky, Missouri & Arkansas, complaining of the operation of the plan of separation, was presented. It disclaims any power in the General Conference to authorise, or sanction a division of the church, and declares the so called, plan of separation null and void, forasmuch as three-fourths of the Annual Conferences have not concurred therein, and its provisions, the Report further says, having been infracted by the highest authorities of the southern connection. Report of same Committee was also presented on the property question. The first Report was first considered, and its first three sections adopted.

Thurs. 25.

The Report on the separation was still under discussion, and was not disposed of.

Fri. 26.

The Committee on Episcopacy submitted report, approbating the course of Bishops Hedding and Janes, in the case of J. N. Maffit. Adopted. Bishop Hedding, on account of his age and infirmities, was by resolution exonerated from performing more episcopal or pastoral labor than he shall feel able, for the coming four years. A Report of Committee on Temperance, striking out the present rule on spiritous liquors, and inserting the original one of Mr. Wesley, was adopted.

General Assembly.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, (O. S.) is in session in the city of Baltimore, not in Philadelphia, as we said by mistake last week.

The Anniversaries.—We give, this week, abstracts of the Annual Reports of two of the leading Benevolent Associations, and will perhaps devote a considerable space next week to reports of other kindred enterprises.

Brattleboro Hydropathic Establishment.—We have received from Dr. Wesselhoeft, the proprietor, a large pamphlet giving a Description of the Establishment, with a Report of 563 cases, treated there within three years past. Dr. W. is very sanguine of the general utility and success of the Water Cure treatment, but says, "I do not claim for it either the character of an infallible or universal remedy, but I do claim that whenever it can be applied, it is both a safer and far more efficatious treatment than that by drugs, and that a very large proportion of the patients who are pronounced hopeless under the latter, may be wholly or partially restored by it." This establishment enjoys a delightful situation, among the mountain springs of Vermont. It has been incorporated by the Legislature of that State. Ample accommodations are in readiness for a large number of patients. From the Reports of cases it seems that more than fifty varieties of diseases have been treated in the establishment—166 of the cases cured, 157 greatly relieved, 106 partly relieved, 85 no better, 10 incurable, 6 died.

Various persons have visited Bratleboro from this place and vicinity, and we believe they report favorably of Dr. W.'s establishment.

☞ What has become of the Green Mountain Spring? The April number is the last we have received.

Foreign News.—The Ocean Steamers Caledonia and Hibernia have both recently arrived, bringing further intelligence from the Eastern World.

It is said that the moderate Republican party has triumphed in the recent elections in France, and that Lamartine has been chosen the first President. The new government is strengthening its military force. Disorders and riots have occurred in various parts of the country.

In Ireland, commotions are not uncommon. A serious riot has occurred at Limerick.

The Prussian and Danish Governments had accepted the mediation of the British government, which it is hoped will put an end to the Holstein war.

A frightful and bloody contest has taken place between the Russians and Poles.

It is reported that the Pope has declared war against Austria.

The present seems to be an eventful crisis the world over.

National Democratic Convention.—This body which held its session last week in Baltimore, has nominated for next President, Gen. Lewis Cass, of Michigan, and for Vice President, Gen. W. O. Butler, of Kentucky.

Evangelical Preacher.—The April and May No.'s of this work have just been received. The first, contains a Sermon by Rev. Dr. Church. Pastor of the 1st Baptist Church, Rochester, N. York, A sermon by Rev. J. B Scott, Chaplain of the University of Virginia. The second contains a sermon by Rev. Dr. Daniel Sharp, Pastor of Charles St. Baptist Church, Boston Mass., being a tribute to the memory of Hon. John Q. Adams. As this is short as well as good, we would be pleased to copy it into our columns, were we not crowded at present with numerous other matters. Also, a sermon by Rev. W. C. Crane, Vicksburg, Miss., on Christian Benevolence. The "Preacher" is increasing in interest, whilst its mechanical appearance also is improved. Rev. N. N. Wood, Editor and Publisher, 106, Main Street, Zanesville, Ohio. One Dollar per Annum in advance.

Christian Wreath.—We have received the June number of this work. Its embellishments are, The Periwinkle, a Colored Flower. The Witch of Endor, & a piece of Music. It contans as usual numerous interesting and useful articles in poetry and prose. J. Van Court, Publisher, Philadelphia. One Dollar per Annum, in advance.

American Pulpit.—The May number has come to hand, and is the opening number of Vol. IV. It contains, 1. Sermon by W. B. Sprague, D. D. of Albany, N. Y., on the death of Hon. J. Q. Adams. 2. A Sermon by Rev. D. C. Eddy, Pastor of 1st Baptist Church, Lowell, Mass. 3. Three sketches of Sermons. 4. A ministerial Miscellany. A useful work. Address, Samuel Chism, Worcester, Mass. One Dollar per year, in advance.

Biographical.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MRS. NANCY MYERS,

Wife of Mr. Henry Myers, Sen., of Brownsville, Licking county, Ohio, took her exit from the shores of time to the port of glory, on the 12th inst. Mother M. was born in Baltimore county, Md., on the 26th of June, 1775, married to her now bereft and disconsolate husband, in 1796, joined the Methodist Protestant Church in 1830, under the administration of the two Br. Evanses, when they both travelled Zanesville circuit, and has lived an ornament to her profession ever since. She was kind and affectionate to all with whom she associated, and loved and esteemed to the same extent. She was one of those of whom it may be said,

"They die in Jesus, and are blest!
How sweet their slumbers are!
From suffering and from woes released,
And freed from every care,"

Br. Bassett, you will observe I only report the deaths of a few aged members of my charge.—But death is not thus partial to us, for we have been dropping into the tomb during the first four months of this year (1848,) at the rate of one per week, and recently much more frequently, for in one short week we deposited not less than 6 persons in our village grave-yard. The principal disease is erysipelas. Brownsville was never known to be so sickly. The ministers of our place have been almost constantly engaged in conversing and praying with the sick and dying, or attending to the funeral obsequies of the dead. O may the Lord avert this heavy calamy; but above all, help us to live right, that we may die happy.

News of the Week.

FROM MEXICO.

Peace Treaty Rejected!

Louisville, May 26, 1848.

The Tuscumbia (Ala.) Flag has dispatches from New Orleans, by Telegraph and Express, to the 20th, stating that news had reached that city on the 18th, from Vera Cruz, that the Mexican Congress had rejected the Peace Treaty.

Later and Important from Mexico.

Philadelphia, May 22,

We have New Orleans dates, via Pittsburgh, to the 19th inst., from which we learn that the Mexican Congress has assembled.

Generals Almonte, Bustamente and Paredes, have united, and issued a pronunciamento against the government of Pena y Pena, and declared a war of extermination against the Americans, until they shall be able to conquer an honorable peace.

Progress of the Pennsylvania Railroad.—The Company which has this great work in charge appear to be pushing it with considerable energy. The contracts are all progressing as rapidly as is consistent with economy, and the road will be put in action as far as Lewistown during the ensuing winter. The line to Huntingdon will be ready for the rails early next summer. The light work between Huntingdon and Hollidaysburg will be contracted for in time to be completed as soon as the points now being commenced are ready. This arrangement for the work has been made in order to bring capital expended into activity with as little loss of interest as possible. It is expected that the road will be ready to Huntingdon in the summer following the present, and to the portage by the opening of navigation the ensuing spring.

Revolutionary Octogenarian Gone.—Judge Jas. M. Marshall, son of Col. Thomas Marshall, commander of the 3d Virginia regiment in the War of Independence, and eldest surviving brother of Chief Justice Marshall, died at his reidence in Farquier county, Va., on the 26th ult., aged 85 years. At 17 he entered the army, remaining in it until the close of the revolutionary struggle, when he embraced the legal profession. He was commissioned by John Adams a Judge of the U. S. Circuit Court for the District of Columbia. He served but a brief term on the bench.

Poisoned from Honey.—A distressing circumstance occurred on Sunday 23d ult., at Hardnot, N. C. Three young men who were taking bee trees, ate of the honey found. They became very sick and blind, and though measures were taken for their relief, one of them, Isaiah Mabley, died from its effects.

From the St. Louis Union, May 18th

Highly Important from Oregon.

Four Battles between the Indians and the settlers—Massacre of Dr. Whitman and lady—Prevalence of the Measles—Severe Winter in the Mountains.

Yesterday we had the pleasure of a few moments conversation with Major J. L. Meek who arrived at St. Joseph on the Mandan, and immediately took passage on the Genesee for the Ohio river, being bearer of despatches from the authorities of the Oregon to the Government at Washington.

Major Meek left Oregon city on the 4th January, in Company with General Gilliam and 500 troops, who were marching into the mountain districts to put down insurrectionary movements among the Indians. At Wallah Wallah, Lieut. Bowman, and eight others, parted from Gen. Gilliam's command, and bent their way towards the United States.

On Snake river they fell in with five villages of Snake and Ponark Indians. These Indians manifested hostility, and declared their intention of marching against the Oregon settlers early in the spring. The cause of their enmity towards the whites they alleged to be the introduction of the measles among them. This disease has been very prevalent in Oregon as well among the white settlers as the Indians. Owing to the peculiar habits of the red men, the malady among them proved fearfully fatal, causing death in almost every instance of its visitation. When the eruption fever made its appearance, the afflicted would use the cold bath, or roll themselves in the snow, which would almost certainly cause a retrocession of the disease and sudden death.

The saddest news brought by Major Meek is the death of the philanthropic Dr. Whitman and lady. They were murdered with eighteen others, at their settlement in the plains of Wallah Wallah, some time in January, by the Cayutes and Wallah Wallahs—Indians who have always heretofore manifested the most profound friendship for the whites.

When the troops arrived at the scene of the murder, they found the whole settlement laid waste, presenting an appearance dreadful in the extreme. The bodies of the murdered settlers were scattered around unburied. The heads of Dr. Whitman and his amiable lady were lying in the yard of their late residence, near the threshold, Most of the houses had been burned, and everything wore the aspect of desolation.

In the march from Oregon City to Wallah Wallah, the troops had four engagements with the enemy. In two there was a spirited resistance on the part of the Indians, and many were supposed to have been killed. The American forces lost but two men in their skirmish—James Jackson and James Packwood, killed at the Dalles of the Columbia while on guard.

From all we can gather, it seems that a spirit of hostility has gradually been engendering among the Indians of Oregon for several years. They have taken up the idea that a great chief was coming from the United States to buy their land, and render them independent. Finding however, the whites settling round them, without furnishing for the lands what they considered an equivalent, they have at last determined to drive out the invaders, and possess themselves of such implements of husbandry and the arts that might fall into their hands in the way of spoils.

It is the opinion of those conversant with the affairs of Oregon, and that the Hudson Bay Company is at the bottom of all these disturbances. At any rate it is singular that the Americans only should be the subjects of Indian malice.

ADDITIONAL.

Since the foregoing was placed in type, we have seen a copy of the St. Joseph Advertiser, of the 12th inst., from which we derive some additional items of information, relative to affairs in Oregon.

The last battle fought with the Indians was on the "Big Plains," in February last. Gen. Gilliam's forces maintained their position manfully against four times their number. The Battle commenced in the morning and continued till night put an end to the conflict. Both parties remained on the field till morning, but the Indians were indisposed to renew the engagement, and retired. No whites were killed, but very many wounded by Indian arrows.

At the time of the massacre of Dr. Whitman and companions, sixty or seventy persons were taken prisoner, but afterwards, through the intervention of Peter Skeen Ogden, principal Factor of the Hudson Bay Company, they were ransomed. The massacre, it seems, took place on the 29th of November.

Maj. Meek bears a message asking for immediate aid from the Government of the United States.

The latest dates from Oregon City is to the 30th January. The mail carrier who left there since for Wallah Wallah, was killed and the mail lost.

The Oregon Spectator of Jan. 20 contains a proclamation from Gov. Abenethy, in which he calls upon the citizens of the territory to furnish 500 men for the war.

Model Artistes.—A Mrs. Johnson at New York, on Wednesday complained to the Police, that her three daughters by the names of Isabella, Louisa, and Elizabeth Gordon, all under 18 years of age, were nightly exibiting themselves as model artistes, in tights, at Palmo's, thereby disgracing themselves and disobeying the orders of their mother. A warrant was issued for their arrest.

History of Printing.

The first attempts at printing with types can be traced to engravings on blocks of wood, the honor of the invention being claimed by citizens of three different cities—Haerlem, in Holland, and Strasburg and Mentz, in Germany: 'Laurentius Koster,' 'John Guttemburg,' and 'John Faust,' each claiming to be the inventors of the art.—But the most reliable information appears to side with 'Guttemburg,' who, as early as 1442, printed two small books in the city of Mentz. It is remarkable that the first book printed, of any note, was the Bible. It was printed in Latin, in 1450. Notwithstanding the improvements which have been made, the art cannot be considered as very permanently settled, until the year 1458, when a method of casting types in a mould was discovered. The art was first introduced into England in 1471, by William Caxton, and in 1500 it was known in between two and three hundred places. The first printing office in this country, was at Cambridge, in Massachusetts, in 1630—more than two hundred years ago.

The first printed newspaper appeared in the city of Vienna, in Germany; although but a few were printed until 1612, when they first appeared with dates to them. The first paper in England was printed during the reign of Elizabeth, in 1588.

The first paper in this country was printed at Boston, in 1704. Now, there are not in all Europe as many newspapers as there are in the U. States.

Slavery in the District of Columbia.

We remarked, the other day, that slavery, as it exists in the District of Columbia, presented many revolting features, some of which were then referred to. We had another of the features in view, and one to which we now ask attention.

There is a slave prison at the city of Washington, into which people of color are thrown on suspicion of being slaves. In February last the Marshal of that district presented a petition to the House of Representatives claiming $5361,60 for the board, jail fees, &c. &c. for certain persons alleged to be fugitives from "service and labor." Among the items of the amount are the following:

That one Moses Thornton was kept in said jail for the space of twelve hundred and forty days, for which such marshal has charged the United States $421 60. That four persons, designated as "Meade's Negroes," were kept in said jail for the space of five hundred and eighty-five days each, for which said Marshal has charged the United States 795 60
And had been before kept in said jail over fifty days, for which said Marshal has charged the United States. - - - - - 70 28

Hon. MR. HALL, of Buffalo who is a Member of the Judiciary Committee to which that Petition was referred, reported a Preamble reciting the facts, and concluding with the following Resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby directed to report to the House, with all convenient speed, a bill repealing all laws of Congress, and abrogating, so far as they are operative or in force in the District of Columbia, all laws of the State of Maryland which authorizes or requires the courts, officers, or magistrates of the United States, or of the said district within the District of Columbia, to issue process for arrest, or commit to the jail of said District, any runaway or any other slave or fugitive from service, or colored person claimed as such, except on due complaint and proof of or on a conviction for some crime or misdemeanor, the commission of which by any free white person would authorize in the same manner the arrest, commitment, and detention of such white person in like manner charged with or convicted thereof.

Slavery costs the country too much, in various ways, without taxing the United States Treasury directly. Mr. Hall's resolution was not adopted, but we hope, ere long, to see a House of Representatives not only prepared to discuss the question of Slavery in that District, but ready to wipe it out.—Alb. Evening Journal.

WESTERN ELOQUENCE.—The following is an extract from the speech of Rev. Mr. Magoon, of Cincinnati, made at the anniversary of the New York Baptist Bible Society, on Friday last.

In reference to the kind of preachers received at the west, he says:

"The education soaked in from the outside, like a Thompsonian bath, is useless there. There is no field for such preachers. Black-board knowledge and Latin roots, emptiness in the head, green glasses over the eyes, dyspepsia in the stomach, and a diploma in his hand, do not suit the people—they want what the Scotch call "gumption"—they want men like Ringgold's flying artillery, who know how to load and fire in the hottest of the fight. There is no need to wait for a church to call a pastor in the West; he can call his church himself. With a log cabin for a vestry he can have around him a cathedral whose arches were wrought and wreathed, whose roof was adorned in the way the temples of Greece never knew—the blue sky is visible thro' its dome, the settling sun streams in between its pillars, and there, in a garb as simple as the sublime truths he tells, he can preach the Word of Life; there is no need of fine linen in double quantity—linen under and linen over his garment—he will not want two shirts."

NEW ORLEANS TELEGRAPH.—The whole line of posts is now completed to New Orleans on the line constructed by Mr. O'Rielly through the Mississippi valley. It is now wired from Louisville via Nashville to Tuscumbia, in Alabama, & to Holly Springs (Mississippi) and Memphis.—The remaining wire from Tuscumbia to New Orleans, will be put up quick as possible.—Pitts. Com. Journal.

OCEAN STEAM NAVIGATION.—The New York Herald says—"At present there are eleven steamships on the stocks in the New York ship yard, making an aggregate of more than fifteen thousand tons. They are all ocean vessels, calculated to brave all weather, and range from 1000 to 3000 tons burthen.—Pitts Com. Journal.

A NEW STAR.—Mr. J. R. Hind, the celebrated astronomer, announces the discovery of a new star, of the fifth magnitude, and therefore visible to the naked eye, which has just made its appearance in the constellation Ophiucus. This remarkable star is in a line joining Eta and 20 Ophiuchi, rather nearer to the latter.

LUTHERAN STATISTICS.—The General Synod of the Lutheran Church has just finshed a session of 5 days. It appears that their clergy now number about 600. They have under their charge 1650 congregations, to which are attached 200,000 members. Their yearly increase by immigration is 20,000, and by membership 3,000 They also possess three incoporated colleges and five theological seminaries, in which about 150 young men are in course of preparation for the ministry.

The New Postage Bill.

The following are described to be some of the principal provisions of the bill reported by the Post Office Committee of the U. S. House of Representatives.

The circulation of all newspapers free of postage within thirty miles of the place of publication, not above the superficies of 1900 square inches.

Under one hundred miles and over thirty, one half cent, over one hundred, and for any distance one cent.

Newspapers above 1900 inches to pay pamphlet and magazine postage, which is two cents for the first ounce, and half of one cent for all greater distances.

Newspapers under 500 square inches go free for the first thirty miles, and pay quarter of one cent for all greater distances. Transient newspapers pay two cents when not sent from the office of publication.

Publishers of pamphlets, magazines and periodicals, are allowed a free exchange, the same as the publishers of newspapers.

ACCIDENT.—A young man by the name of Smith was drowned night before last in the Monongahela, from the steamer Cambria. The body was recovered last evening, and $195 in gold found upon his person. He was going to the West to purchase land. Drafts to the amount of $2000 were on his person when he fell in the river, but it is supposed they were destroyed by the action of the water.—Pittsburgh Com. Journal.

ACCIDENT—INHUMANITY.—A painful accident is recorded by the St. Louis Union, as having occurred on board the steamer Colorado, on the occasion of her last trip to that city. The conduct of Dr. Martin deserves to be mentioned with honor, as it will be where the case is known. After the Colorado had been in port some time, a negro fireman removed the manhead from one end of the boilers; the boilers were nearly full of hot water, and several deck passengers were sleeping near them—a German and his wife were scalded in a shocking manner—the man's back was raw, and on parts of his body blisters were formed holding a pint of water. The unfortunate couple being strangers, knew not where to go for medical aid. Some of the passengers on the boat started with them in search of a physician—the scalded couple writhing in agony, moaning and crying along the streets. They stopped at a coffee house on Olive street, where they asked permission to remain that they might have their wounds dressed; this privilege was refused them. One of the city guard then conducted them to the hospital kept by the Sisters of Charity, but arrangements there did not allow their admission. The watchman then conducted the party to a tavern on Second street, where they were again refused admittance—they now crossed the street to a German coffee house; here the scalded were once more driven from the house of their countrymen to writhe in misery.

"Dr. Martin, living at the corner of Fourth and Elm Streets, was now sent for. He soon arrived, and on seeing the situation of his patients, observed that he would take them to the Hotel of Invalides at his own expense, if they were not received he would take them to his own house—the sufferers were received at the Hotel, and remained there until noon yesterday, when they were taken to the City Hospital, where every attention is shown them. This but one of the many instances in which Dr. M. has displayed the noble humanity and benevolence of his character."—Pittsburgh Commercial Journal.

DEATH BY LIGHTNING.—Mr. Wm. Patterson Colmerry, of Wilmington, Del., riding out in the country on horseback, on Saturday afternoon, took shelter under a tree during a thunder-storm, which being struck by lightning, himself and horse were instantly killed.

PHYSICIAN KILLED.—Dr. Henry D. Magil, of Leesburg, Va., aged forty, was found lying on the turn-pike, nearly opposite to Belmont, having been killed, supposed by being thrown from his horse.

THE EX-KING OF FRANCE.—The London papers state that Louis Phillippe is almost continually in the streets of the Metropolis. He comes up in the South Western railway cars. M. Guizot is living in a very unostentatious manner in Pelham Crescent, Brompton, and is almost daily at the Athenœum club.

The New Iron Furnace at Dresden.

We spent an hour, on Saturday last, in viewing the works at Dresden, now being built by Messrs. Spaulding & Co. The buildings include a Stack and Engine-room under one roof, a store-house for charcoal, and seven ovens for making the latter article. These are all that are necessary to commence with. Other buildings will be put up from time to time, as needed. The furnace stack is large and will turn out, it is estimated, eight tons of pig per day. Situated as the buildings are on the canal bank, within 35 feet of the water's edge, the metal can be taken up from the sand and piled, by the same handling, convenient for shipment. Immense quantities of ore have already been drawn, and lay in heaps covering all the ground round about. This is obtained, most, by "stripping," is of an excellent quality, and it is combined with lime as to require but little additional flux. A few specimens that we examined contained flint, but not enough to be of any inconvenience, if proper care is used in the smelting.—The ovens for burning charcoal, seven in number, are built in a line upon the canal bank, and are constructed of large capacity upon the most approved plan. The brick of which these are built and all the brick used in the concern, are made on the spot: about 300,000 in all are required. The whole machinery of the works will be driven by a steam-engine of considerable power, the foundation for which is now being laid. The boiler will be heated by conducting under it the fire from the stack, which will be fully sufficient. Fire will be put in, for drying purposes, next week, and, by the middle of the ensuing month, the furnace will be in blast. An ample market for its products will be furnished in our own town; and, we trust, encouragement will appear for the establishment of another. About $20,000, or a little more, is the amount of capital invested in this. For the above details we are indebted to Mr. Josiah Spaulding, the senior partner in the concern, who politely spent much time in showing us through the works. Mr. S. and his partners have the warmest wishes of the public for their success.

This county of ours is rich in iron-ore, as well as other sorts of mineral wealth. Hundreds of millions of tons, containing a large per centage of metal, are found within its limits—a score of furnaces could be supplied constantly with the material; and the good quality of the pig is sufficiently established in the market by the products of the Licking furnace, which has been running for years. We should rejoice to see the day when the iron interest of our valley attains in the West its proper importance.—Zanesville Courier.

Indian War in Oregon.

FOUR BATTLES—THE WHITES VICTORIOUS—MASSACRE OF MISSIONARIES!

Correspondence of the Pittsburgh Gazette.

LOUISVILLE, May 21, 1848.

By the arrival of Major Meek, from the west, we have late and most important news from Oregon, where all its confusion and bloodshed between the Whites and Indians. Four powerful tribes have united, and commenced a deadly war. Four battles took place in January, in three of which the Whites were successful in beating their enemy. Five hundred Whites fought a body of two thousand Indians a whole day, when the Indians retreated, after wounding a great number of Whites.

On the 29th of November, a most horrid and brutal massacre was committed by the Cayuse Indians, at the Presbyterian Mission, at the Wallah-Wallah Valley. Dr. White, his man and wife, with eighteen others, were killed, and sixty or seventy taken prisoners. The houses of the Missionaries and their neighbors were burned to the ground. The unfortunate prisoners were subsequently ransomed, through the agency of Peter Sken Ogden, chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Major Meek pushed up the river yesterday, on his way to Washington, with despatches for the Government, asking for immediate aid on the part of the Oregon settlers.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—A fire broke out on Saturday night, about twelve o'clock, among the rags in the cellar of SPEER's paper establishment and spread to the establishment of Mr. WETHERBEE, entirely consuming the same. LEVERING & Co., of "Oak Hall," adjoining, suffered considerably from water; and but for the extraordinary alacrity of the firemen, the damage would doubtless have been much greater. Mr. WETHERBEE, in saddlery, stock, tools, &c., loses between five and eight thousand dollars, without a cent of insurance. Mr. SPEER, in rags, paper, books, &c., loses between $2,000 or $3,000—no insurance.—LEVERING & Co.'s loss is about $500. The building belonged to Mr. THOMAS LAWSON, and was insured sufficiently to cover the total amount of loss.—Cincinnati Commercial.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—As Mr. SAMUEL V. HILL, tobacconist, in company with Mr. GEO. BATES, were riding home in a buggy at noon yesterday, during the thunder storm, they made a narrow escape of their lives, at the corner of Third and Western Row. The fluid descended with a stunning crash, passed through the top of the buggy, tore Mr. Hill's hat to fragments, burned his head slightly, and passed off without doing other damage! Mr. H. it is said, owes his life to a silk handkerchief which he had in his hat—silk being a non-conductor turned the fluid! The horse was so frightened by the explosion, and dashed furiously off with the vehicle, breaking it to pieces, but fortunately, doing no injury to the inmates. Mr. Hill's hurts, we believe tho' serious, are not likely to prove fatal.—Cin. Commercial.

Law Case Adjourned by Telegraph!

The Telegraph is put to uses at once novel & valuable. We relate the following adjournment of a Law Case, from a knowledge of the transaction. A case originating between two steamboat captains was brought before MARK P. TAYLOR, Esq., but for certain reasons put off for two or three weeks. The day of trial came, but, in the meantime, one of the captains had gone to St. Louis—the other to Pittsburgh. A friend of the St. Louis captain suggested that the case should be referred to some future time, but this could not be done unless the parties agreed to it! A telegraphic despatch was sent to the captain in St. Louis just before the hour of trial arrived. He answered immediately, that he was willing to put the trial off, if his opponent was. A telegraphic despatch was then sent to the other captain in Pittsburgh, who immediately answered, giving his consent, and so the trial was adjourned to a day when both parties would be again in our city. The proceedings by telegraph were entered on the magistrate's docket, being the first legal lightning transaction in the world. Lawyers may as well be brightening up—they have now a competitor which is not 'slow,' at all events—one that can not be 'headed' by musty volumes, or looked out of countenance with impunity. He holds his office in the universal creation, and uses the storm-cloud for his sign-board.—Cin. Commercial.

From the Sandwich Islands.—The New Bedford Mercury contains intelligence from the Sandwich Islands to December 21, received by the whale ship James Maury, at that port.

The volcano at Kilanea, had exhibited increased action about the 1st of December, and on the 2d there was a slight earthquake.

A large invoice of standard books, from the establishment of the Harpers, in New York, was received at Honolulu, October 20th, and in less than six weeks about one thousand dollars worth had been retailed among the town's people and foreign residents. The foreign residents of East Maui, had ordered an entire set of Harpers' Family Library, consisting of one hundred and seventy-two volumes.

The whale ship Frances Henrietta, Captain Poole, of New Bedford, fell in with at sea, in May, lat. 42 N. lon. 150 E a Japanese junk, of 200 tons, dismasted, rudder gone, and otherwise injured in a typhoon, seven months previous.—The original number of the crew was seventeen, but when Captain Poole discovered them, they were reduced to four, and in a famishing condition. The crew had drawn lots for some time past as to who should be killed and eaten: the one upon whom the lot fell, if able, fighting for his life, and in some instances succeeded in killing one of the others, in which case the murdered man was first eaten. The survivors were shockingly scarred with dirk and knife wounds, as if their lives had been often attempted by their companions. Captain Poole kept them on board his ship for thirty days, and then put them on board some fishing boats, close in shore, about lat. 40 N. They were exceedingly grateful, & manifested much emotion on leaving the whaler.

Fire on the Atlantic Dock.—A destructive fire broke out on Monday night, about 12 o'clock, in No. 33 of the large stone warehouse on the Atlantic Dock, Brooklyn, N. Y., and was not subdued till four of them, Nos. 30, 31, 32 and 33, were laid in ruins, and their contents, consisting of a large amount of valuable machinery for raising grain, and between 35 and 40,000 bushels corn and wheat, destroyed, the property of various individuals, a small portion of which only is insured. The buildings were the property of Mr. Daniel Richards, with the exception of No. 30, which belonged to Mr. Brush. The total loss is estimated at $125,000, from $50,000 to $60,000 of which falls on Mr. Richards. Insured for about $20,000. Mr. Brush had an insurance of $25,000. The whole were occupied by Messrs. Verplank, Crane & Co. The fire is supposed to have originated from the heat of the smoke pipe.—N. Y. Jour. Com.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA EMIGRANTS.—Accounts from St. Joseph, Mo., represent that town as crowded with emigrants on their route to California and Oregon. Two hundred and ten wagons had crossed the river at that place, and forty or fifty at the ferry above St. Joseph. The emigration this year will not be so large as that of last year, probably not numbering more than five hundred men. Major Harris recently arrived at St. Joseph from the front camp of the emigrants. They were all getting on well. Maj. H. is to go out to California in company with Col. Fremont, who was expected at St. Joseph by the 15th of this month.—Cincinnati Commercial.

New Subscribers this week, 7. Discontinuances, 4.

The P. M. at Prospect, Ohio, informs us that C. Landon no longer takes his paper from the office. When a subscriber, wishing to discontinue, neglects to give notice to the publisher in time, he is responsible for another vol. Six numbers, over a year have been sent. If C. L. will settle with the Agent, we will stop sending it any time if he desires it.

Br. James Smith of Palermo, New York, has our thanks for his agency for our periodical.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encourging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	18
Rev. C. J. Sears, Chaneyville, O.	5
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	5
Rev. Jer. Jack, Bucyrus, O.	5

Rev. V. Lucas, Johnstown, Pa.,	5
Rev. W. Hatfield, Alum Creek, O.	5
Rev. A. P. Corey, Waitsfield, Vt.	6

☞ We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

Fourth Volume of the American Pulpit.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT is a Monthly Magazine, published in the city of Worcester, Massachusetts. It contains thirty-two pages in each number, and will be well supplied with that kind of Literature which is adapted to Ministers and Theological Students, such as Sermons, Sketches, Essays, Biographies, &c. &c.

The leading Sermon, will be of the highest order; and all the Sermons, we intend, shall bear the stamp of superiority. They will be sought, and obtained, as far as it is possible, from the most eminent Divines, on the American Continent. Arrangements are already made to accomplish this end; and no reasonable pains or expense will be spared, to make this department of the Pulpit superior to anything of the kind in existence.

The Sketches will be of the first class. We have accepted the proposals of an eminent minister in England to supply this department, partially—the Rev J BURNS, D D, of London, author of "Pulpit Cyclopedia;" &c &c. By securing the correspondence of Dr Burns, the patrons of the Pulpit will enjoy a fine opportunity of comparing British and American talent in the same pages.

In the Miscellaneous Department will be found, Essays, Biographical Sketches, Poetry, and such et cetera as shall enhance the value of the work.

The Pulpit is edited by

REV J D BRIDGE,

who will spare no pains to render it not only a welcome visiter to the Minister's study, but a 'profitable' one.—The work is evangelical in its character, and will avoid all controversy, except with sin and the popular errors of the day.

Its patrons, hitherto, have been gathered from all of the orthodox denominations in the country, all of whom the Publisher hopes to return. And we wish it distinctly understood, that Ministers in all the evangelical denominations are invited to become contributors to the pages of he Pulpit. We solicit from them, Sermons, Sketches of Sermons, or Criticisms, on any subject within the compass of Homiletics; and, that no one may feel embarrased in his desire to accept this invitation, we shall dispense with the "List of Contributors" which has formerly appeared on our cover. We do this not out of any disrespect to any of the worthy names in that List, but that others may not be deterred from contributing, because not numbered in the distinguished catalogue.

By far the largest amount of matter contained in the Pulpit will be 'original;' but it will also be enriched by choice 'selections' from Books and periodicals.

Terms—One Dollar Per Annum, in Advance.

The Pulpit will be mailed regularly during the latter part of the month preceding that of its publication, so that it may reach its destination, in ordinary cases, by the first of each month.

We solicit Agents for the work. We will allow them a reasonable and just compensation for their services, and we authorize all the ministers of every evangelical denomination, and all laymen who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and who desire the extension of his kingdom on earth, to co-operate with us in extenhing the circulation of this work.

All orders for the work and all remittances for the same should be addressed to

THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS —The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

Retail Price $2,50.

☞ We have prepared this volume at great expense: the type large, clear and handsome; paper smooth and white; binding strong and substantial; engravings neat and appropriate. This work is decidedly the cheapest and most popular ever issued from the American press; and, from the orders already received for it, we are satisfied it is destined to have an immense sale throughout our vast extended country. From peculiar circumstances we are able to offer this book extremely low to book-pedlars, postmasters, and others, who may feel disposed to act as agents.

☞ The principles of morality and of a well-regulated FREEDOM are introduced with sufficient frequency throughout its pages; the editor exercising a careful discrimination, while honestly desirous of enlarging its circumference, not to admit within the circle the elements of licentiousness, to which we are liable in the present state of society. Let every parent remember it is to an EDUCATION wisely and liberally provided for our people, America owes her proud superiority over other nations. This will preserve a love of freedom, and detestation of oppression, pure and unadulterated, in the young and rising generation.

☞ As the publisher is desirous of giving this useful Family Work a very extensive circulation, he 'offers the most liberal inducements to Agents,' and is satisfied that any man of good address can make from FIVE to TEN DOLLARS A DAY from the sale of it. There is scarcely a town or village in the Union but will furnish more or less subscribers. A small capital, of from $25 to $100, will be necessary to make a commencement.

"For So He Giveth His Beloved Sleep."

PSALMS CXXVII, 2.

Sleep, my beloved, sleep—
The stormy winds are high;
The gathered lightnings sweep
In splendor through the sky;
Yet fear not thou the tempest's voice of dread,
While keeps my love its vigil round thy bed.

Rest, my beloved, rest—
The ocean waves beat loud;
Each billow's foaming crest
Involves thee like a shroud;
Yet shrink not, Christian, from the raging main;
I bind the waters in their crystal chain.

Peace, my beloved, peace—
Do anxious thoughts appal?
At my command they cease;
My word dispels them all.
Dark though the visions o'er thy slumbers hung,
Rouse not, nor start—my arms are round thee flung.

Soft, my beloved, soft—
Through sickness and through pain,
Thou hear'st glad notes aloft—
The rich, angelic strain.
Do not I smooth thy couch, and hush thy dreams,
And cool thy parching lips from healing streams?

Sleep, my beloved, sleep—
Beneath the quiet sod,
In still repose and deep,
Till sounds the trump of God.
For thee, no terror has the awful grave;
Strong is mine arm to rescue—strong to save.

Wake, my beloved, wake—
On the right hand of love.
Thine, for the Savior's sake,
The crown prepared above.
Wake, my beloved one, to the eternal morn,
Robed in the vesture which the saints adorn.

RESTRICTIVE RULE---Palemon, &c.

NO. I.

MR. EDITOR,—I am very much gratified, to find that the brethren have consented to "speak out," upon the propriety, or impropriety, of this restricture feature in our economy; and that among them, are some of our old and esteemed brethren, whose many years of observation and inquiry, commend them to our attention and respect. From such men, we generally expect valuable information, and clear conclusive reasoning. Their names generally have a great influence over the church of their choice. And truly, we should esteem the elder brethren for their works' sake, to the full extent that their works are commendable. In the matter of unwritten history, their minds are always valuable. But surely, it cannot be the creed of the nineteenth century, that the theories of the Fathers are to be taken without examintion. Wonder if our good old brother of Meadow Farm really thinks so, and desires to make this impression upon the minds of "the boys?" Surely it is not a law of the human mind, that the opinions of an old man are invariably correct, and those of a young man incorrect. And I believe that it has not yet been made a law of the Recorder, that no brother shall say aught in opposition to the opinions, or argument, of one who is older than himself. I will, then, beg leave to offer a few thoughts in reply to some things which have appeared as a defence of the Restrictive Rule.

Palemon, in the Recorder of March 16, declares his intentions to speak out, in that, and in future numbers; and we were given to understand, that much argument should be forthcoming; but until thus time, we find but one succeeding article. So it appears that he will favor us no more upon the subject.

As to the question at issue between me and Palemon, I claim it to be one thing; he another. I ask for the repeal of the Restrictive Rule. He assumes that I ask for the abolition of the entire system of itinerancy, and the adoption of a system of settled pastorates; and urges that I cannot be an honest apposer of the Rule. Now, the design of all of this, evidently is, to raise a scare-crow, for the purpose of frightening the people away from a moment's consideration of the subject. Yet, you will find that he admits that this Rule may be removed, and the system of itinerancy remain; which will save me the trouble of proving this fact. The 7th Sec. of the 10th Art. of the constitution, "consists of two parts." The first, ("no rule shall be passed to abolish an efficient itinerant ministry,") provides for an efficient itinerancy. The second part, restricts and trammels that itinerancy, taking out of the hand of the stationing authority, the right to station the ministers of an Annual Conference where the judgment of the Con. dictates that they should be stationed. It gives to the Annual Conference no authority "to station their ministers longer than three years, successively, in the same circuit, and two years, successively, in the same station." Now, it is to this second member of the 7th Sec. that we object, & not to the first. Only see, what a beautiful thing it is! The constitution requires the Annual Conference to exercise their judgment, as to the propriety of continuing a minister in the same appointment up to the close of the third year, and then, to exercise the same judgment as to what other appointment he shall be sent to; but according to this member of the 7th Sec. they must, in no case, exercise their judgment as to the propriety of his continuance in the same circuit a fourth year. That would be entirely, "and forever," wrong. The Convention of 1830, could judge of it, a great deal better than the Annual Conference, to whom all of the the circumstances of the case might be known. —May be some of the older brethren will succeed in convincing us that it is not 'a senseless thing.'

But Palemon, and others, endeavor to make the impression, that if we give up the Restrictive Rule, we have a settled pastoracy. What, then, is the difference between an itinerancy, without the Restrictive Rule, and a seuled pastoracy?

In an itinerancy without this Rule, such as would exist in our church, the stationing authority is vested in the Annual Conference, and each minister, at the end of each year, falls into the hand of the Stationing Authority for an appointment; which authority, is to be according to the judgment of its holders, as to what would be the most likely to secure the true object of the gospel ministry, forming that judgment from their knowledge of all of the circumstances to be taken into the consideration, made known to them through the representatives of the people, and the ministers assembled. They station no minister for a longer period than one year at a time. If there is not a probability of his usefulness a second year, he is sent to another appointment. And for the very same reason, it must be clear, that he would be sent to a different appointment at the end of any succeeding year. The removal of the Restrictive Rule, simply leaves the stationing authority, which now exists, free to use their judgment, as to the propriety of continuing a minister more than two years in the same station, or three years in the same circuit; and a change of ministers would take place precisely in the manner that it now does, only it would be when the propriety, or necessity, of it would be drawn from existing and visible facts, and not from a blind arbitrary rule, which, with an imperial sway, controls all circumstances and necessities.

A settled pastoracy, is that regulation of the gospel ministry, under which a minister is placed in charge of a congregation for an indefinite period. Churches which have adopted this regulation, install, or marry, the minister to the congregation; and from it he can only be released, or they from him, by sueing for a divorce before an ecclesiastical court and the authority which gave him his appointment cannot remove him from it without his own consent being previously obtained. So he is there for life, unless he is removed by an ecclesiastical prosecution, or mutual consent.

You can now very readily see how far we should be, in removing the Restrictive Rule, from adopting a settled pastoracy. Just as far from it as we now are.

If the Rev. DR. SPRINGER'S "blister" plasters, should, unfortunately, fail to effect a cure for me, I may be troubling you some more.

A REVIEW OF REV. JAS. GAY'S NOTICE OF "ONE FROM OLD VIRGINIA."

BR. BASSETT: Once, and only once, in the course of my life, have I written, and published, any remarks upon the subject of slavery. Those remarks, appeared some weeks ago, in "The Western Recorder." Another writer, who styled himself, "A Virginian," appeared in your columns upon the same subject. Who the writer is, I know not. This, however, is of no moment to me now. In the last number of the Recorder, that has come to hand, there is a communication from the pen of Rev. James Gay, of Kingsbury, Indiana, headed, "An Answer to a Virginian," No. 5. Before closing his letter, in which he briefly "answers" my fellow Statesman, he also pays his respects to "one from old Virginia"—meaning, as appears from the quotations he makes, myself. I think he had an eye to my letter, and that some of his remarks were made in reference to an allusion of mine, before he spoke directly of me. Those remarks, for the reason now assigned, I feel myself at liberty to review, briefly. To this, I presume "A Virginian" will not object. To this, I presume the Editor will not object. To this, Rev. James Gay, cannot object. Before I proceed, I will make a general remark, or two. I do not love controversy. My letter was not written to provoke it. I had thought, too, that, in all probability, nothing would be written against the view of the subject in question, which I therein presented. With the comments of the Editor, upon it, I may say I was pleased. His remarks were in good spirit—which, as I judge, is the spirit of the man. I was somewhat disposed to think, after all, however, that we were not quite so near together, in our views upon the subject of slavery, as he supposed. Be this as it may, our mutual respect, and confidence, and friendship, have not been disturbed. May these ever continue, and increase, yet more, and more. I do not object to the liberty which Rev. James Gay has taken, to express his dissent from my views. My letter was before the world. It was, so to speak, public property. Br. Gay has exercised an inalienable right. It is a right that I concede very heartily. In reviewing him, I hope I shall not pen an improper word. I feel towards him no other passion than love. His positions I may not spare, but himself will I respect. In concluding these preliminaries, I will express the hope, that I may not again feel myself called upon to write upon this subject. As to this, however, I make no promise. While I give no challenge, I beg for no quarters. Let each one who may feel disposed to do so, express his views freely, and I shall be governed by my own sense of duty, and of propriety, as to whether I shall speak out any more, or for the future, keep silence.

In my former letter, I expressed my objections to an article which was published in the Recorder, some months ago—Whether from the pen of Rev. James Gay, or some one else, I do not now remember—in which the writer, as well as I could then recollect, attempted to prove that the slaveholder is a devil. I did not then, I do not now, combat this sentiment. It speaks for itself. To say it is erroneous, is to express but little that might very justly be uttered. It must recoil upon the conscience of its author. But let it pass. Rev. Mr. Gay, having disposed of "A Virginian," turns his attention to "one from old Virginia." My letter, touching the sentiment just spoken of, seems to have prompted the following expression. It contains a sentiment equally objectionable, and offensive perhaps, though in a different form. But let our writer be heard for himself. "That slavery is of the Devil I have no manner of doubt, and if he does not ultimately have all who will not repent of the wrongs they have done to the poor, suffering, and rejected slaves, there will be but little use of having a Devil." Upon this quotation, I will make a few remarks.

1. As to the origin of slavery. Our author is in no way reserved. Indeed, he "is very bold." Boldness, however, is quite as characteristic of the errorist, as it is of him who is thoroughly furnished with knowldge, on any given subbject. Br. Gay has no misgivings, as to whence slavery has proceeded. Viewing it, perhaps as some others of his party do, as "the blackest crime in the universe," he concludes, of course, that it emanated from the worst of all beings, in the universe. "That slavery is of the devil, I have no manner of doubt." This is surely a very clear "confession of faith," on this subject.—There is no mistaking its meaning. It would be well if all confessions of faith, were as free from ambiguity. We should then be the better prepared to combat the errors which some of them contain. In point of clearness, Br. Gay's confession, is an admirable one. In point of doctrine, and in point of fact, however, I cannot speak so well of it. Had he said—"that the abuses of slavery are of the Devil, I have no manner of doubt."—I should not have taken time to controvert with him. And, yet, I, as an individual, might very rationally entertain some "manner of doubt," that all the abuses of slavery, were "of the Devil." While the Devil excited man to his fall, and now excites him to many things that are wicked, man being a free agent, and possessing an active, and depraved mind, I am not prepared to admit, free from all "manner of doubt," that every wicked thing which is done under the sun, is "of the Devil."

In settling the question, as to whether "slavery is of the Devil," let us appeal to the Bible. If it be of the Devil, it is not of God. If it be of God, it is not of the Devil. The Bible is the word of God. It is true, some of the words of Satan, are in the Bible. But we learn that such and such are his sayings, upon the authority of God. From the Bible we learn that God,—and not the Devil—in speaking through his servant, to the people of Israel, declares in reference to certain "bondmen, and bondmaids," that "they shall be your possession. And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bondmen forever." This is from the mouth of God, through his servant.—Will Rev. James Gay pronounce it to be "of the Devil" "that it is from the Devil he has no manner of doubt!" If he still persists in his belief, as declared in his manifesto, or confession of faith, as cited above, "that slavery is of the Devil," he must consider that God, and Devil, are interchangable terms, representing one, and the same being; or, that God acts in concert with the Devil, —that God is Satan's coadjutor, and ally, and friend, kindly legislating for the establishment, and securing perpetuity, of what he regards as the diabolical institution of slavery. He can choose whichsoever horn of the dilemma that may be the more congenial with his fancy. Any institution or system, that originated with the Devil, "the enemy of all righteousness," would not receive the sanction of God; and laws would never be enacted by an infinitely holy Being, in view of its furtherance, and stability. But in the quotation above, from Leviticus,—which is only one of many, of a similar class and character, that might be made from the Old Testament —it is obvious, and I think, indisputable, that God not only tolerated, but positively sanctioned, and ratified, the institution of slavery.—Therefore, the origin of slavery, instead of being traceable to the malignant agency of the Prince of Darkness, was not repugnant to the will of God. And God being immutable, and moral principles being unchangable things, if the institution of slavery involved, or was based upon wrong principles—principles morally wrong —in its origin, it would not, at a subsequent period, have received his sanction. God would not change his mind, and the institution, how muchsoever it might vary in incidental circumstances, would not change its essential moral character. Rev. James Gay, in the view he has taken, has ascribed one of the Providential, wise, and no doubt benevolent, arrangements of God, to the implacable, and unquenchable maliciousness of the Devil! Such a position is alarming—it is blasphemous! See! The Bible is an inspired Book. "All Scripture is give by inspiration of God." It was inspired by the Spirit of God. "Holy men of God, spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The words of the above quotation, from Leviticus, were inspired by the Spirit of God. The passage sanctions, and ratifies slavery. The Spirit of God, then, confirmed the institution. But does he confirm the words of the Devil? Did not the Son come into the world, that he might destroy his works?—Would he confirm at one time, and destroy at another, works involving moral principles? He is the Lord—he changes not. He who declares that that institution, or relation, between man and his fellow, which the Holy Spirit of God authorizes, and establishes, "is of the Devil," is changeable with what many eminent Theologians, and Commentators, regard as the sin against the Holy Spirit. This sin consists in their opinion, in ascribing the work of the Spirit, to the Devil. Has not this been done by Rev. Mr. Gay! If I may speak to Br. Gay, however, I will, in the language of an Apostle, say—"But beloved, we are persuaded better things of you and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak." Though he seems to have blasphemed in a certain sense, against the Holy Ghost, I am confident he has done it unwittingly. But I have felt it to be my duty in this review, and in connection with this branch of the subject, to expose this blasphemy, to show how far abolitionists, of ultra views, and mercurial temperaments, may wander in the labyrinths of self-delusion, and frightful error.

2. As to the doom of slaveholders. Our friend, Mr. Gay, is a far-seeing man. His phraseology, in every word, gives the fullest evidence of a plenary inspiration, from the spirit-of-dogmatism. Hear it—and ponder it. "If he" —that is the Devil—"does not ultimately have all who will not repent of the wrongs they have done to the poor suffering, and rejected slaves, there will be but little use of having a Devil." Now, the "wrong," the radical and essential "wrong," which in the opinion of Mr. Gay, and abolitionists generally, is "done to the poor slaves," if I mistake not, is that of holding them in bondage. All other "wrongs," which the slaves may suffer, as slaves according to them are incidental only, and are to be traced to the original, or radical wrong, which is that of their being kept in bondage. Bondage, then, according to the abolitionists, is the greatest of these wrongs, it being the source and the pretext, for all the other "wrongs" that are incidental, which the slaves may, or do, suffer. All who wrong their fellow men wilfully, and will not repent of the wrong done, cannot in my opinion escape the vengeance of God. This I fully believe, whether the wrong be done to slaves, or to freemen. Mr. Gay, doubtless considers the holding them in bondage, as one of "the wrongs," if not the greatest of "the wrongs done to the slaves." In his opinion then, it would seem that slaveholders generally, if they "will not repent," of holding slaves, will go to the Devil! If the Devil does not get them, there will as he thinks, be but little use of having one. All slaveholders then, if they will not repent of holding their fellow men in bondage, will, in the opinion of friend Gay, go to the Devil, and be locked in hell, forever! "Hear (that,) O heavens! Give ear (to that,) O earth"—Hear that, Father Abraham! O Abraham, even Abraham, think not thyself too secure! Although thou wast called, truly, "the Friend of God," and "the father of the faithful"—though long after they exist, Christ himself showed that thou wast alive with God—though Lazarus after his decease, rested in thy bosom, in the paradise of God—though the church in all ages has been encouraged with the promise of sitting down finally with thee in the kingdom of heaven—though thou hast by universal suffrage, been canonized as a bright, and pure, and happy spirit in glory—yes, O Abraham, I say again, think not thyself too secure! A mighty spirit hath arisen, & insinuateth strongly, that thou, tho' exalted above the clouds, & actually in heaven, shall "ultimately," like Lucifer be brought down to hell! That Spirit, O Abraham, hath for its name—Abolition. Its predictions concerning thy "ultimate" ruin, are based upon the fact, that while on earth, thou owndst slaves, & didst not repent of the (alleged) sin, of so doing. One who is inspired by this Spirit, & one of the propagandists of the doctrine it brings to our ears, is Rev. James Gay. We are no where informed in the Bible that Abraham ever repented of the alleged sin of slaveholding. And "if the Devil does not get him," "there will," according to our author, "be but little use of having a Devil." I suppose he means that if slaveholders, who do not repent of the crime of slaveholding, do not go to hell, there will be but little use of having a hell. O yes, there will friend Gay. If it answered no other purpose, it will be of use as a place of confinement for abolition defamers. I do not say for abolitionists, but for abolition defamers. These, all unrighteous slaveholders, and the wicked of the earth, generally will need being confined, and hell will therefore prove useful to the rest of the universe.

The Slavery of the United States, and that which obtained among the patriarchs, and other of God's people, in ancient times, while differing perhaps, in some unimportant circumstantialities, may be considered as involving, and based upon the same principles. And if the abolitionists admit that the patriarchs and others, who held slaves in ancient times were saved, I cannot see how they can deny the salvability of slaveholders, of our own times. Is it on the ground that greater light has been shed upon the world, than was then enjoyed? If so—whence has that light proceeded? Has it come from God? Is it found in the later Scriptures? Has God, by any statute, condemned slavery, & slaveholders since the patriarchial age? He has not. Did Jesus Christ while on earth, so far as we are informed, utter a word against slaveholding? He did not. Did his Apostles from what we can gather from the Acts or the Epistles, ever preach, or write against it? They never did. Whence then cometh the light? The light so called, by which it is perceived that shaveholders simply for the (alleged) sin of holding slaves, will go to hell, is the light of Abolition. It is a false glare. It is artificial—created "by the art of man's device—and not divine. "The light that is in-"abolition"-is darkness, and how great is that darkness!"

3. As to the use of having a Devil. This is a queer idea indeed! It is singular theology surely! The use of having a Devil! "If he does not ultimately have all who will not repent of the wrongs they"—masters and drivers—"have done to the poor suffering, and rejected slaves, there will be but little use of having a Devil." Was this designed merely as a rhetorical flourish?—Hardly. This is doubtless a part of our author's sincere, and real confession of faith, on the subject of slavery. Every other sin is so inconsiderable in point of magnitude, and turpitude, when compared with that of slaveholding, that if the Devil does not have ultimately, all slaveholders who will not repent of the wrong they have done to the slaves, by holding them in bondage, there will be but little use of having a Devil. I may here remark, that if his day of usefulness shall not come until the damnation of all such is secured, it will never dawn upon him at all! But I recur to the idea, itself—the use of a Devil! Consider it abstractly, or relatively to the subject in question, & it is wild and monstrous, in the extreme. Of what real use is he any how, or in any way? Of what use has that being ever been since he became a Devil? If "slavery be of the Devil," and if it be as great a "wrong" as friend Gay represents it to be; he has surely been of no use to the world, in originating it. He has been of no use to the slave, surely if he has through his master, caused him to suffer intolerable "wrongs." He is of no use, certainly, to the owner of the slave, if he has originated a business, and led him into it, which will ultimately land him in hell. A Devil, if I am in my senses, and understand my Bible is by no means necessary—and is in no way useful—except in the imagination of Br. Gay, who would scare slaveholders with him! If this Brother, or any others of his party, in their merciless crusade against slaveholders, find a use for the Devil, they may in welcome, monopolize his services. We have no right to them —we have no desire for them. But from both the Devil, and the (ultra) abolitionists, we will continue to pray—"Good Lord deliver us."

This review I propose to conclude in another letter. When I commenced, I thought I should write all I had to say on one sheet. I fear I have made this letter too long, already. My views, as yet, have not been fully expressed, on the subject of Slavery. In my next, while I shall be consistent with myself in this letter, I propose to take a view of the subject, that will probably be more acceptable to anti-slavery men, generally. I cannot believe that slavery is an offspring of the Devil —but I am not disposed to think at the same time, that God intended it shall be perpetuated thro'out all ages of the world. This last remark, may furnish my readers with some clue to the sentiments which I intend to publish hereafter.

Yours, very sincerely.

BR. SIMON ELLIOTT'S LETTER.

[Brother Elliott has called upon us and insisted that we should publish his letter in reply to Br. G. M. Scott, which we spoke of two weeks ago, authorizing us to omit certain portions. As we are determined no man shall have occasion to complain of unfairness on our part, we here give place to the communication. Ed.]

Columbia Ct. April 22, 1848.

BR. BASSETT: I was about communicating to the President, that the superintedant's, place on this circuit was vacant, but Br. Scott has saved me that trouble. He has however involved me in a greater trouble, as he has made some unqualified statements, and thrown out some unfair insinuations. He sets out by saying, "We cannot report as much prosperity as some of our brethren, but will try to state things as they are." Now, my brother you have not stated things just as they are, for you say that we have held two quarterly meetings, both of which passed off without anything special. Now, for my part, at our first quarterly meeting I was very much refreshed and encouraged in preaching. I felt the power of the Spirit, and enjoyed liberty. In the lovefeast also, I enjoyed myself unusually well, & the brethren and sisters generally expressed themselves as being blessed and encouraged.—Now I ask whether, in these days of declension, such a meeting is not something "special?" At our second quarterly meeting also, my spiritual enjoyment was more that ordinary, and my soul was much drawn out in prayer to God for the good of souls. Brethren of different orders spoke to this effect in lovefeast. We had a very pleasant communion season also. Surely these were some of the special blessings of God, and if Br. Scott did not participate in them, it must be because he was confined in the narrow limits of on prayer, no faith &c. For "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." It is true there was but a poor turn out of the officiary, but that is a very small obstruction in the way of a courageous soul.

Br. Scott goes on to state that the officiary and membership generally have let go all hold to let the ship sink or swim. The Church here, he says has been sinking for the last two years, and is now almost gone. And as the reader may enquire the cause of this declension, he says there is a complication of causes. He says there is a diversity of conflicing views and principles, that operate much against the Church. Here the reader is left to conjecture what are these conflicting views, as he does not tell us. It strikes me however that it is the subject of slavery he alludes to, for I know of no other object about which there is any controversy. I have preached anti-slavery doctrine when it came in my way, as I am convinced it is a bible doctrine, but we have had no quarrelling about it.

Br. S. furthor mentions as a cause of declension in the circuit, a great amount of infidelity in disguise. I have myself noticed infidelity, stalking publicly abroad, denying the truth of the bible, and the existence of God. But Br. S. speaks of a kind of infidelity clothed in the garb of some popular subject of the day. I think the brother alludes to a doctrine not very popular, viz: abolition. But he says there is another and more direct cause. "For the last two years the circuit has had a superintendant that did not meet their wishes. At the commencement of the present year almost universal dissatisfaction prevailed." I will here state a few things which will, I think, present the matter in a better light. Previous to the last Quarterly Meeting of last year, the class at Graham's Station took a vote to determine whether it would be agreeable for me to return to the circuit. The vote was unanimously in the affirmative. Again I enquired of the leader at Point Pleasant Meeting House, what their wishes were,* and he told me he was satisfied, and wished my return, and also said his class were satisfied. There were three other classes that I know of that had no objections to my return that I know of. Some of the members of these classes expressed a strong desire for my return Now here are five classes out of nine. That is not quite "universal." And when the delegate received his instructions, I think there was but a majority of one in favor of another brother in preferance to me, and those who did not desire my return to the circuit, stated publicly that as a man, a Christain and a preacher, they had nothing against me, but they had rather have a stranger. I had no objections, but the delegate could not get those first asked for, & so according to instructions used his own judgement. In addition to what I have already said about this people loving me, I will further state that unsolicited, they gave me license to preach, & also unsolicited recommended me to the An. Con., as a suitable person for the itinerancy. Now who would have thought of a people being so universally dissatisfied with a preacher, of their own making and choosing, through their representative? Yet Br. S. represents this to be the fact. I would here say this circuit never has had a preacher that they loved very well. All the preachers who have been here have got their moral or ministerial character, or both stained before they got away. * * * * * * * * These have all passed off and gone, but a poor Elliott is here to have all the blame attached to him, as he is the direct cause of all the declension. But the circuit has cause to rejoice in God for having in his Providence sent a new vessel along this way, with one of his servants at the helm to carry off this great cause of declension. Columbia Circuit ought to thank the Wesleyans for having done so much good. Now I suppose as the great leading cause has sailed off in the new vessel, the effects will cease, and the church on Columbia Circuit may yet prosper.

I have thus endeavored to state things as they are, and if Br. S. had kept his unqualified communication to himself, I should not have troubled the public with this. Bear with me, till I in conclusion, state my reasons for leaving the M. P. Church. 1. There is Slavery, 2. Fremasonry and other secret combinations which I consider inconsistent with the character of the Christian * * * * * * * * I now wish to say that I have been well used by the Methodist P. Church. When I came to them they received me kindly, and found no fault with me for leaving the M. E. Church, and I hope they will find no fault with me for leaving and joining the Wesleyan Church, as it suits me better than the M. P. Church.

N. B. As I was a member of the Preacher's Aid Society, paid five dollars, and took life membership; I of course withdrew my membership from said Society, and if the brethren think it just, they will please refund the money, by handing it over to Br. Bassett for me.

Yours in Gospel bonds,

SIMON ELLIOTT.

* A poor business, for a travelling minister to chatechise the brethren around his circuit, to find how well the people like him, and whether they will choose him for another year. In our economy, each circuit represents its wishes to the An. Conference by a delegate. And for any itinerant minister thus to interfere in the affairs of a people and their delegate, we consider very unbecoming. We trust that Br. E. will be the last minister in the M. P. Church who will condescend to such things.

☞ If the sick wish a diseased stomach restored and impure blood cleansed without endangering the constitution, go to J. DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisnness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. Selected Poetry.

DIVINE IMPRESS.

There's not a tint that paints the rose,
Or decks the lily fair,
Or streaks the humblest flower that grows,
But Heaven has placed it there.

At early dawn there's not a gale
Across the landscape driven,
And not a breeze that sweeps the vale,
That is not sent from Heaven.

There's not of grass, a single blade,
Or leaf of lowliest mien,
Where Heavenly skill is not displayed,
And Heavenly wisdom seen.

There's not a tempest, dark and dread,
Or storm that rends the air,
Or blast that sweeps o'er ocean's bed,
But Heaven's own voice is there.

There's not a star, whose twinkling light
Illumes the distant earth,
And cheers the solemn gloom of night,
But mercy gave it birth.

There's not a cloud, whose dews distill
Upon the parching clod,
And clothe with verdure vale and hill,
That is not sent by God.

There's not a place in earth's vast round,
In ocean deep, or air,
Where skill and wisdom are not found,
For God is everywhere.

Around, beneath, below, above,
Wherever space extends,
There Heaven displays its boundless love,
And power with mercy blends.

NO. VI.

A CLEAR STAGE AND NO FAVOUR.

"Nature, Sir, effected the cure—Not I. We physicians can do nothing more than remove obstructions to the free action of nature.—She does all the rest." Such in substance, was the reply given by a celebrated medical man, upon receiving the earnest thanks of a patient, who had received the benefit of his skill—a reply not more remarkable for the modesty it evinced, than for the profound philosophy it contains. It may serve us as a text, illustrative of the subject we have in hand—the proper object of civil government. What it was appointed to do, we have already seen—what if revealed truth be consulted, must be set down as no part of its business, craves a word or two of remark, before we dismiss the first branch of our inquiry.

"A clear stage and no favour"—that is all which human nature, whether individual or social, asks at the hands of government—that is all which it can advantageously receive. The laws of Providence affecting mind and morals, are not a whit more unsteady, howbeit less known, than are those impressed on matter. The "powers that be," like ignorant physicians, mistake their calling, when they suppose that their skill is to supply the healing efficacy which is to cure society of the evils which affect it. By attempting too much they have done incalculable mischief. They have never touched but to change the natural order of things. They never yet attempted to build up an "interest," without doing in the long run, far more harm than good. "To develop the resources and character of a people," is as great an absurdity at which for them to aim, as for the surgeon to pretend that he can develop the limbs and organs of a patient. The business of both is to give nature fair play—to remove obstructions—and to rely upon the operation of those laws which are to be ascribed to the Divine, for bringing out of man whatever virtue there is in him. We affirm, then, and shall try to make good the affirmation, that the object of civil government, with a view to secure which it is armed with the sword, does not, and cannot include, individual or social development and discipline.

Each man's life, according to the representations of Christianity, is a probation. Wrapt up within him when he comes into this world, are certain powers, animal, intellectual, moral, and spiritual, which it is the great end of his being to unfold. With a view to this, God has ordered all his arrangements—and external events, as regulated by his providential laws, constitute, as it were, the soil, the atmosphere, the dew, the sunshine, and the showers necessary to expand this immortal germ into blade, stalk, leaves, flower, and fruit. Pleasure, therefore, is associated with every fitting exercise of these powers—penalty and pain with inaction or excess. The infant rolling on the floor, stretching its tiny limbs, testing its coming strength, and crowing its delight—the philosopher grasping an evasive truth in the far-off regions of speculation, and bringing it back with him to the regions of knowledge, with a flush of triumph on his brow—the moralist putting beneath his feet some restless & gigantic passion by sheer force of will—the saint finding daily enjoyment in winging higher and yet higher flights into the "unseen" world—these are but specimens of the care evinced by the universal Ruler, and of the provision he has made, to elicit human capabilities into free, vigorous, and self-sustained action, and of the value he has set upon spontaniety in all that relates to human development.

As if, moreover, to leave us without room for mistake in this matter, he has affixed to every unnatural suspension, waste, or misapplication of those powers, an appropriate penalty. We cannot flee from a duty without, Jonah-like, meeting our punishment where least we expect it.—We cannot gratify a forbidden propensity, without arming us at the same time with the scourge which is to lash us. We cannot transgress the bounds pointed out to us by reason or conscience, without returning within the precincts of law—if we are enough to return at all—wearied and foot-sore. Communities fare in this respect as individuals. They are under a like system of rewards and punishments. They cannot devolve upon a substitute responsibilities which the Highest has imposed upon them. The true blessing consequent upon a duty discharged, is associated exclusively with their discharge of it—the curse following their neglect of it, however well it may have been filled by proxy. And the certainty with which dereliction is connected with suffering—the unerring precision the appointed vengeance smites the guilty party—the fixed and undiminishable proportion which obtains between the wrong done, and the recompence received—render these arrangements of Providence tenfold more impressive. It is evident that this exactness and rigor of moral discipline is needed, in order to the ultimate development of the powers of man, both individual and social.

Christianity recognizes all this—points attention to it—explains its meaning—builds much of its reasoning upon it—and supplies the most powerful of motives for putting forth in accordance with the laws of nature and of truth, all human capabilities. He in whom all government centres—who alone is able to follow causes through all their consequences—who sees to the end of his own work, and can forbearingly wait while one form of error and evil one after another is springing up, maturing, and decaying—He alone, we say, possesses the knowledge requisite to the conducting of this vast and intricate system of discipline and development. Man cannot deal with it authoritatively without deranging it—destroying here what he would remove there—creating many evils where he achieves a solitary good—paralyzing energies which he meant to strengthen—drying up sympathies just where he intended to consult them—letting in troops of miseries by the very gate he set open for the expulsion of a single one—aggravating the mischief which it was his aim to cure.

"A clear stage and no favor." Let us apply the maxim, and our own reasoning upon it, to some definite and tangible question—say, general education. The gist of our observations may then be made more distinct and impressive.

It will hardly be denied that the Divine Ruler has made his own provision for the training up of successive generations. Parental instinct, natural curiosity, the power connected with knowledge, the miseries which grow up apace on the soil of ignorance, His own command, and the peculiar motives for obeying it which Christianity supplies, all constitute part of that moral apparatus which He has constructed to secure the education of rising manhood. Nor can it well be doubted that upon communities, as such, devolves the responsibility of spontaneously supplying those defects which spring out of the inability of individuals. The performance of the duty has its abundant rewards—the neglect of it, its heavy penalties.

Ministerial.

The Christian Watchman.

The faithful watchman watches for seasons when peculiar doctrines may be best inculcated, and particular duties may be best enforced. He watches for opportunities when instruction may be most wisely imparted, consolation most affectionately administered, conviction most powerfully deepened, reproof most discreetly given, and sin most strongly condemned. He watches for providences, under which the minds of men, being softened, alarmed, or excited, may be most deeply impressed with truth, most easily prompted to duty, or most affectually roused to exertion. Having sworn at the altar of God eternal war against the world, the flesh and the devil, he watches continually lest the secret seductions or the open assaults of these spiritual foes should distress or destroy his people. He is always on his watch-tower; and he watches in all things. No enemy can approach the camp without an alarm being sounded.

The most faithful minister may well fear that among the people of his charge there will be found, at the last day, some wicked man whom he had not faithfully warned—some backslider whom he had not tenderly admonished—some hypocrite whom he had not skilfully unmasked—some contemner of God whom he had not fearlessly withstood. Well also may he fear lest there should be found in the day of account some ignorant soul whom he had not plainly instructed—some sorrowful spirit whom he had not gently comforted—some weak brother whom he had not seasonably strengthened—or some thoughtless wanderer whom he had not diligently reclaimed. What, then, may be the dread, and what certainly will be the doom, of the blind, or the ignorant, or the dumb, or the greedy, or the sensual, or the slumbering watchman? Wo to the idle shepherd that leaveth the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye; his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.—Cawood.

Divinity taught by Affection.

A minister was recovering of a dangerous illness, when one of his friends addressed him thus: "Sir, though God seems to bringing you up from the gates of death, yet it will be a long time before you will sufficiently retrieve your strength, and regain vigor enough of mind to preach as usual." The good man answered: "You are mistaken, my friend; for this six weeks' illness has taught me more divinity than all my past studies and all my ten years' ministry put together."

Ladies' Department.

Christian Mothers.

Mothers! we want your sons to stand in these pulpits, which we soon shall vacate. Yours, to be pillars in these churches, yours to go to the isles of the ocean, yours to labor and die on the burning sands of Africa, yours to carry light into the dark heart of India; and yours to go to the snows of the north. Yes! there will, I trust, mothers read these pages, whose sons & daughters ought to rise up for God, and cry, "Here are we, send us!" Train them up for the work of plucking brands from burning, and quenching them in the blood of Jesus, and seeing them become stars in the kingdom of God! Thus you can, and you will hasten on the Jubilee of the earth; & though your eyes will soon close in death, yet from the foot of the throne above, you shall welcome those whom you and your children have led to Jesus. They shall come from the east and from the west, from the north and the south, and shout "grace, grace."

Train up your children to live and act for eternity.

TODD.

A gentle hint to Mothers, or an effective REMEDY.

One of the most celebrated physicians of Philadelphia, informed us a few days ago, that on last Saturday week, he was summoned to attend a sick child, by its mother, who, as all mothers should, felt much alarmed at the ill-health of her cherub. The Doctor after looking at the child and feeling its pulse, ordered the mother to fill a large tub three parts with water—then get a pound of good yellow soap, and a coarse towel:—put the child into the water, and keep it there until it was thoroughly bathed and rubbed—the soap being freely applied the while.

"But, Doctor," said the mother, "you mean to order some medicine don't you?"

"For the present this is all that is necessary. On Monday morning I will call again."

When he came on Monday, the child was perfectly well.

"Why Doctor," queried the mother, "this is very strange. It is just like 'washing.'"

"Very like, indeed," answered the Doctor, as he took his leave.

Benevolent Associations.

Female Reform and Guardian Society.

The fourteenth anniversary of this Society was held at the Baptist Church in Stantan street, New York. The exercises were opened with prayer, by the Rev. Mr. Brown, of Troy. From their Report we learn that during the last year, a house has been leased and opened, as a temporary home for respectable adults seeking employment, and friendless children, either orphans, half orphans, or abandoned by their parents. The number of applicants received from July 1, to May 1, ten months inclusive, has been 605; of this number 334 have been adults, and 271 children. More than 200 of the latter have been placed in christian families by adoption or otherwise. The average number at the Institution has varied from 30 to 75.

The whole amount of funds contributed towards the enterprise to May 1, 1848, is $11,704 24. Received otherwise than by donations $594 34. (See Treasurer's Report.) Of this sum $5,637 75 have been expended, by advice of the reference committee; towards the purchase of building lots, &c., and defraying the current expenses, leaving $667 59 towards the erection of the building, now chiefly in bank, subject to the order of the building committee. To complete the edifice projected, and meet the current expenses for the ensuing year, from 6,000 to $8,000 will need to be raised exclusive of pledges yet to be redeemed. For the collection of this sum the managers rely upon the continued aid of a benevolent public. The corner-stone of this Institution was laid May 5, 1848, on the ground purchased on Thirteenth street, between Fourth and Fifth avenues. In the office and register department there have been 1,232 applicants for homes and employment.

The American and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society held its anniversary, May 10, at 3 P. M.

A very brief abstract of the report was presented by Mr. Lewis Tappan, in which the main points, treated of in the complete report, were merely touched.

It commenced with noticing the principles upon which the republican institutions of our country were founded, their designs to secure the speedy abolition of slavery; it compared the little band of truth's defenders to the numbers and the power which were arrayed for her overthrow; noticed the death of two members of the society during the year, and also the death of the venerable Ex-President John Q. Adams, who had dared, for such a length of time, to stand foremost and alone in this reform.

It called the attention of the audience to the happy effects of emencipation in the West Indies, and also to the treaty of Ghent, and with much force asked whether that had been violated, and the country thereby rendered false to its trust.—The advance of free principles in the European nations was hailed as the onward march of the principles of this society, as also the fact that several new advocates of anti-slavery had appeared in our country, among the leaders of the public mind, the men of the press, and even in the South.

Mr. Tappan presented a long list of resolutions, which he said would be published.

American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

The annual meeting was held at the Tabernacle. Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, President. Since May of last year, eight of the Missions have been reinforced. The South African, Syrian, Nestorian, Bombay, Medina, Sandwich Islands, and Choctaw, by fourteen ordained missionaries and sixteen assistants—thirty in all.—Nineteen clerical missionaries are under appointment, with two missionary physicians, and other assistants. Two have been set apart for a mission to the Jews of Salonica, (anciently Thessalonica,) in European Turkey. There are 26 missions, about 100 stations, 150 ordained missionaries, 4 licensed preachers, 32 lay helpers, and 204 female assistant missionaries—in all 390 sent from this country. The native laborers swell the number to 515. In these missions are 75 churches, 26,000 members; 33 seminaries and boarding schools; 1,358 boarding scholars; 367 free schools; 12,000 pupils, and 11 printing establishments, at which about 600,000,000 pages have been printed from the beginning, in 30 languages. The common schools at the Sandwich Islands, containing 18,000 pupils, are now wholly supported by the native government. The number of converts in the past year is more than 1500. The year's expenditure is 270,000 dollars. The debt of last year was 31,000 dollars. The receipts for the first nine months are 178,000 dollars. The debt is 60,000 dollars. The last financial year commenced with a balance in the treasury of 22,000 dollars. Rev. Dr. Anderson delivered an address, and was followed by Rev. Mr. Wilson, from the Gaboon Mission, Western Africa. He estimated the population of Africa at nearer 200,000,000 than 100,000,000. Of these, 150,000,000 had never heard the name of Christ. The Africans are the most religious people in the world, but without the knowledge of the true God, they are sunk in the most abject superstitions. Between Sierra Leone and the Cape of Good Hope, ten or twelve missions have been established, and the Gospel has been preached to 100,000 persons. The capacity of the Africans is much better than persons imagine. Rev. Simeon H. Calhoun, from the Syrian Mission, said that converts from Mahommedanism and other faiths to Christianity, often fall back to their first faith at the hour of death, and that was the chief difficultty that the missionaries had to contend with.

American Seaman's Friend Society.

This Society held its 20th anniversary last evening, in the Broadway Tabernacle, which was crowded to its utmost capacity. After singing and prayer, and an abstract of the Report, the meeting was addressed by Messrs. H. Chase, of New York, J. Thompson, Esquire, of Poughkeepsie, C. Forbes, late of the Sandwich Islands, and G. W. Bethune, D. D., of Philadelphia.—The speeches, without any preconcert, respectively contrasted the past with the present aspects of the Seaman's cause—described the influence of commerce and its men on the work of the world's conversion; urged the importance of Foreign Missions, not only to seamen, but to the cause of Christian Missions; and, finally, transcendant importance of blending worldly business and religion; so that there shall be entire consecration to God; and especially the business of the sea; so that its mighty agencies should be enlisted in disseminating the glorious gospel of the blessed God. The Report by Mr. Spaulding, one of the Secretaries, but glanced at the prominent and brightening features of the cause the past year—the society having received more, expended more, attempted more, and been proportionably more blessed, than in the previous year. Interesting and thrilling facts keyed up the earnest appeals; so that the occasion was one of much interest, of solemn impression, and doubtless of great good to the cause of the Sailor.—His present condition—oh, how changed! A few years ago he had no home on shore—now he has one in New York, which, in 6 years, has accommodated 21,919 sailor boarders! Then, he had no Savings Bank—now, a single one, in this city, has on deposit more than two millions of dollars. Then, there was no church where he was not regarded as an intruder, now there are six in this city:—no Marine Temperance Society there: now one here, numbering more than 22,000 members!

AM. BIBLE SOCIETY.

New York, May 11th.

The American Bible Society held its thirty-second anniversary this forenoon at the Broadway Tabernacle.

After the reading of the Scriptures by Rev. Dr. Stone, of Brooklyn, the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, President of the Society, made an able address.

From the Manager's report, read by the Secretary, Dr. Brigham, it appeared that one hundred and sixteen new auxiliaries had been added during the year; forty-six new life directors; and seven hundred and fifty-one new life members.

The receipts for the year had been $254.377,-18; and there had been distributed 655,066 Bibles and Testaments; making a total, since the formation of the Society, of 5,780,095 copies.—The Society, besides home circulation, has the past year made liberal grants of Bibles and Testaments to the army and navy, for Oregon, Mexico, and the West Indies, and Syria, Persia, Switzerland, India, and from various mission stations of different denominations throughout the world.

After the report, animating addresses, occupying about three hours, characterized in some instances by brilliant, chastened wit, as well as deep-toned solemnity, were made by Rev. Dr. Feris of New York, Rev. T. B. Sargent of Baltimore, J. M'Murray, Esq., Agent of the Bible Society, S. G. Potts, Esq., of New Jersey, Rev. Mr. Kirk of Boston, Rev. Dr. Tyng of New York, Rev. S. H. Calhoun from Syria, Rev. P. Bridell from the French and Foreign Bible Society, Rev. Dr. King from Ireland, and Rev. Dr. Pomroy of Bangor.

Dr. Pomroy, in alluding to Palestine, Syria, Asia Minor, Greece, Egypt, and Arabia, which he had visited the preceding year, said the work of sending back the Bible to those countries, where it originated, and where the Savior and his apostles prayed, and labored, and suffered for human salvation, was one of peculiar interest. There the Bible is at home. Its allusions to climate, scenery, geography, productions, arts, customs, are instantly recognized. The cast fits the mold. The Bible, he said, was now greatly needed there, to enlighten, civilize, reform, elevate, and bless—somehow it has a most marvelous power in the affairs of time as well as eternity—it constructs roads, bridges, coaches—digs through mountains, and makes the lightening talk like a book—creates inteligence and enterprise—gives liberty, security, moral and religious principle. It would make the magnificent slopes and valleys of Lebanon, the sweet hills and plains of Galilee, a terrestrial paradise.

It is now actually doing its work at Jerusalem, on Lebanon, at Smyrna, Constantinople, and the other parts of the Turkish empire. You can hardly imagine, he said, the delight which converts there take in God. Coming up out of the wilderness of traditions, and fathers, and Church authorities, they feel, indeed, as if they had reached the "delectable mountains."

Go on, then said Dr. Pomroy, with your work. Freight your "swift ships," and send them forth to those regions, where the Gospel of salvation was first preached to man.

In alluding to present critical state of France, he said, if he had control of the government of this country, he would take the noblest ship in our navy, manned by the best officers and crew that could be found. Then he would take a copy of the Bible, prepared in the very best style, for the occasion, put it into the hands of a committee of seven men, among the wisest and best in our land, and direct them to carry it to the French nation.

They should also carry a letter somewhat like the following:

The United States of America, to the republic of France, send Christian salutations: Whereas, in the providence of God, kings and nobles have vanished from among you, and you have proclaimed yourselves a republic, be it known unto you, as our deliberate and full conviction, that nations do not live by charters and constitutions alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Yours, fraternally & eternally.

Signed, Twenty Millions of People.

On reaching France, he said, this comittee of seven should go in solemn procession, and lay this Bible and letter on the table of the national assembly.

A resolution was passed appropriating ten thousand dollars for immediatly aiding the French Bible Society in circulating the Scriptures in that country. Upon which Dr. Tyng said, he was authorized by a liberal gentleman to pledge $1,000 for this specific purpose, payable as soon as the remainder was secured; and he pledged himself to raise $500 in addition. Rev. Mr. Kirk then pledged $100; and Rev. Mr. Vail, of Cincinnati, for himself and a few friends in the west, $1,000. And it may be hoped that American patriots will spontaneously respond from different parts of the country, to an amount, for this important object, far greater than the sum of $10,000.

D.

Anniversary of the Foreign Evangelical Society.

This, perhaps the most interesting of all the anniversaries, was held in the beautiful church (Dr. Potts') at the corner of Tenth street and University place; and though the house was densely crowded, every foot even of standing room being occupied, there was not the slightest noise to disturb the exercises which were protracted to a late hour.

Rev. Dr. Dewitt took the chair at half past seven o'clock, and Rev. Dr. Vermyle read the opening prayer.

The annual report was then read by the treasurer, W. W. Chester, Esq., which showed the amount of the receipts for the year to have been $14,855; for which there had been appropriated for,

Europe,	$11,346
Canada,	1,535
Spanish America,	1,326
St. Domingo,	300
Expenses, salaries, and rents.	4,576
Balance on hand,.	498

The annual report was then read by the Secretary, Rev. Dr. Baird.

From this it appeared that $1,000 had been appropriated to each of the following societies: The Canadian Mission, the French Evangelical Society, and the Paris Committee; and $2,-000 to the American Swiss Commitee. A missionary has been employed in New Orleans, and another in Marseilles; the former publishes a newspaper. The society, anxious to do something for Mexico, has had the French abridgement of D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation translated in Spanish by its Spanish missionary, Mr. Monsalvaige, and it is now half stereotyped and printed by the Tract Society, under the eye of a member of the Executive Committee. Mr. M. has been transferred from his station in Ovan in Algeira, to America; and is expected to visit Mexico, for the sake of making inquiries, and afterwards to proceed to Valparaiso, to co-operate with Mr. Trumbull, who is successfully prosecuting his labors there.

We regret that about one third of the collections of this excellent Society, should be spent upon Salaries and other expenses. Ed. W. R.

American Protestant Society.—This Society held its fifth anniversary in the Dutch Reformed Church. The total receipts of the Society last year were $28,494;14. The money spent equalled that which had been received.—Mr. E. N. Kirk, spoke of a great number of Jesuits which were expected in this country; they have become obnoxious to the people of Europe, were about to seek a refuge here. They would address themselves to the protestant poor and the protestant children. New life had been given to poperty by Pius IX becoming a democrat. All that was required to overthrow the dark and intolerant superstition of popery, were light and knowledge. Mr. Thompson discussed the proposed union of the three distinct societies, known as the Christain Alliance Society, the Foreign Evangelical Society, and the American Protestant Society. Dr. Leonard Bacon and Mr. King, of Dublin, with several others addressed the meeting, and it adjourned at a late hour.

The lead mines of Arkansas are said to yield a larger proportion of silver than any others in the world, being sufficiently large to pay both the expenses of cupelation and raising the ore.

He that accustoms himself to buy superfluities, may ere long be obliged to sell his necessaries.

A readiness to take offence is the sign of a narrow mind or bad temper.

Reformatory.

"Too Strict," ha!

"Too strict!" Man, who says we are strict? God, angels, spirits glorified? Do they? Open heaven's portals—the gates of the Eternal; what's going on—what's the song? Hark! "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood: and hath made us kings and priests to God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever & ever, Amen." Suppose sin should enter the pearly gate, the least 'particle?' what the outcry? All heaven would be in uproar! "to arms! arms!!" Out, out, out;" drive out the grisly monster. Why indulge now in that which causes hell in every bosom? "Too strict;" indeed! Was Adam too strict? What brought death into the world and all your wo!—opened hell-gate—rushed misery and death! death present, death eternal? What! a single glance at the forbidden tree! "Too strict," indeed!—did any one on his dying pillow regret of having been too strict, too much on the look out, "to escape hell and fly to heaven?"—Golden Rule.

He's left it off entirely.

Quit it forever, washed his hands clean. Noble, most noble! For more than thirty years, brother Reddish, of Cincinnati, informs us, he was a slave to the "Brown Leaf." He knew it was wrong to use it—his conscience smote him—he tried and tried to break loose from the dirty tyrant, but still the stone of Sysiphus rolled upon him! What next? he left off trying and quit, on the spot, the "accursed" thing forever.—This trying to leave off is a broken staff. What would we think of a man, who should tell us he was "trying" to leave off swearing, meanwhile profane oaths and blasphemies continued to roll from his lips! "I will do it, so help me God." and the work is done. I will do it now. This chewing, and smoking, and snuffing, and mopping is wrong, wrong in itself, wrong personally, suicidally! wrong every way; wrong in the sight of Heaven; God abhors it! every decent man, woman and child abhors it. No man that has a spark of redeeming conscience, but knows and feels it is wrong for him to use it! Many, very many in our beloved Covington and Cincinnati tell us frankly that all we say on this subject is true, and the half is not told: bid us God speed, & what is still better, very many are determined, God helping, to cease this beastly filthiness and pollution! Praise the Lord—praise him all ye lands; praise him in the heights; praise the Lord, sing to him a new song; let all the earth praise the Lord. Praise the Lord, O our soul! Praise him forever and forever.—Golden Rule.

Clear it Out! Wash it Out!

Scour it out, drive it out, burn it out. Yes, beloved sirs, on Zion's top, it is your province, it is in your power, and is it not your solemn duty to do this; to do it now. What! let a man enter the house of God with his cheeks literally stuffed, then empty his cargo, spew and squirt all about! Shocking! Where the "scorge of small cords?" Where the cat-o'-nine tails? Only a few Sabbaths ago, on a solemn funeral occasion, in that fine spacious church, sat no less than four or five swiggers of the plug and pig-tail. The joice of the vile weed, in a little time was fairly swimming—here a puddle and there a puddle. Horrible! (Happy arrangement; the ladies were seated by themselves.)—Golden Rule.

A few Words for Children.

You were made to be kind, says Horace Mann, generous and magnanimous. If there is a boy in the school who has a club foot, don't let him know that you ever saw it. If there is a poor boy with ragged clothes, don't talk about rags when he is in hearing. If there is a lame boy assign him part of the game which does not require running. If there be a hungry one give him part of your dinner. If there is a dull one help him to get his lesson. If there is a bright one be not envious of him; for if one boy is proud of his talents, and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs and no more talents than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and is sorry for it, forgive him, and request the teacher not to punish him. All the school will show by their countenance how much better it is to have a great soul than a great fist.

Cecil and the Bookseller.

Many years ago, a pious and devoted clergyman entered the shop of a prosperous London bookseeler with whom he was on terms of intimate and Christian friendship. He inquired for his friend, and when told that he was at home, but particularly engaged, sent a messenger to him to the effect that he wanted an interview with him, if but for a few minutes. This message being delivered, the clergyman was invited to walk up stairs, into the bookseller's sitting room. He entered the room, and found his friend sitting by his child's cot. The child was dying, but, with affection strong in death, it had clasped its father's hand, and was holding it with a convulsive grasp.

"You are a father," said the afflicted parent, "or I should not have allowed you to witness such a scene."

"Thank God, thank God," fervently exclaimed the minister as he instinctively comprehended at a glance the situation of his friend: "thank God. He has not forgotten you! I have been much troubled on your account, my dear sir. I have thought much about you lately. I have been much afraid for you. Things have gone on so well withy ou for so long a time, you have been so prosperous, that I have been almost afraid that God had forgotten you. But I said to myself, surely God will not forsake such a man as this; will not suffer him to go on in prosperity, without some check, some reverse! And I see he has not. No; God has not forgotten you."

These were the sentiments of Richard Cecil on the design of affliction; and his friend, Thomas Williams, thankfully and joyfully responded to them. Within three weeks of his death, he related the incident, as it is related here, and the feeling of his heart was, "He hath done all things well."

Your enemy is superior to your friend—when he tells you of faults which your friend conceals.

"Never search for battle, nor shun it when it comes."
Ossian.

MR. EDITOR: I am pleased to agree with "One of the Choir." in some of the points which he has raised; which he has sought, and not of my seeking. "It is not to be presumed that the public care anything about our likes, or dislikes," and I can therefore have no objections to his retiring from 'war,' which he has provoked: nor is it the fact that my reply to his attack on me, was intended "to provoke a personal controversy," or "gratify the lovers of discord." It was a reply to a personal attack; for, his first article never mentioned the real ground of controversy, except to sanction the practice complained of, by the writer in the Journal of Commerce, which I had referred to; and which I have reason to believe he has never read. I have fought, side by side with your correspondent, for years gone by, first in the Temperance cause, and since in the Anti-slavery cause, always denying that a majority of a church, or sect, had the authority to bind the conscience, or prevent us from combatting any sin, which might have crept into the practice of such bodies. I admit that when a man finds himself "on a jury with eleven obstinate men" it is good cause for reviewing his ground, and enquiring whether he builds on truth or error; and this I hope I have done, and believing I have the infallible word of God on my side, as well as the testimony of good men, I ask permission to continue the presentation of this subject, to those of your readers who feel sufficient interest to investigate the question, or read what I propose to offer, notwithstanding my friend retires from the field; still holding the opinion, that his ipse dixit is not sufficient to settle the real subject of controversy, and that he has not, a majority of the Presbyterian Church in Putnam, (exclusive of the choir,) who sanction the views, of, either himself, or Asaph, upon the question at issue. I therefore have to request you to republish the two subjoined articles, that your readers may see that the evil complained of is not of recent origin, or of light consideration, and that our choir have no claim to pre-eminence in this matter, and can claim no originality.

The following is from the pen of the late Samuel Worcester, D. D. of Massachusetts, being an extract from the preface to his copy of Watts' and Select Hymns.

"The Compiler is fully persuaded, and in this persuasion he is sure of the concurrence of the best judges, that the adoption of a few well chosen tunes for permanent use, would be vastly preferable to a great variety & a frequent change. The prurience, indeed, for variety and change is the bane of our public psalmody. It can never be sufficiently regretted that good tunes, as soon as the singers have learned to perform them with tolerable correctness, and just as the congregations begin to be pleased with them, should be capriciously exchanged for others. Good tunes, to be performed with any adequate effect, must be perfectly familiar to the performers. It is impossible that a psalm or hymn should be performed with proper expression, when the tune is not familiar; and until singing choirs will be content with the use of a few standard tunes, not entirely excluding, however, the occasional use of others. Expression, that most important part of musical performance, will be but little known. Besides, good tunes must be familiarized by use, before their beauties and excellencies will be in any good degree perceived and felt; the longer and better they are practised, the more they will be loved and admired; and when they are lightly esteemed, or willingly exchanged for others, it must be owing not to a familiar acquaintance with them, but to the want of such acquaintance."

The following article is from a work called "Christian Philosophy," by V. Knox, D. D. well known as a learned divine and author, and who was for 33 years President of the Tunbridge School, England, and who also, as we learn from the Biographical Dictionary, discharged the duties of parish priest, with unsurpassed zeal and ability, for 40 years.

EPH. v: 19.

"The neglect of PSALMODY, in the congregations at large, has contributed very much to damp the ardor of devotion, and, consequently, to cause an indifference to the Christian religion. Less of instrumental, and more of vocal music, (in which all the people should unite with heart and voice,) would conduce greatly to the revival of decayed piety. It would render our religious assemblies interesting where they are now cold, and merely formal.

Psalmody, it is well known, is confined, in the greater part of the country churches, to a few, and has become a matter of mere amusement, both to hearers and performers. To many, it is tedious and disgustful.

The whole congregation, women and children, as well as men, should sing simple tunes, such as are easily learned, and, at the same time, deeply affect the heart, while they please the ear. The instrument should not be so loud as to drown the voices. An organ, under the hands of an ambitious player, usually overcomes the melody of the voice, and grates discordant on the ear of piety.

When all join, to the best of their power, in singing well-composed hymns, all must be affected; and psalmody will, like prayer, become a powerful means of grace. As it is now conducted, religion seems to have little or no concern with it. Some of the congregation sit with indifference or impatience; others divert themselves, as well as they can, with observing the grimaces of the singers; while one or two, amateurs and practitioners of music, lend an ear, as critics on the skill of the performers.

The soft and sweet melody, in some of the places of religious worship frequented by various dissenting congregations in London, is highly delightful to an uncorrupted ear, while it warms the heart with devotion, meliorates the disposition, and leaves the hearer full of pious sentiments to God, and charitable affections to man. As far as I am able to judge, psalmody requires immediate reformation.

The Apostle says, "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with GRACE in your hearts to the Lord."

Is this addressed only to 10 or 12 persons in every congregation? Certainly it is addressed to all Christians; and there is no doubt but that Christianity would flourish more, were due attention paid to psalmody. Many who are separated from the established church, are influenced, in their separation, by the efficacious method of deriving grace into their hearts, which they experience in their own assemblies, by the pleasing, melting strains of holy harmony."

I have yet other testimony to offer.

COLONIZATION!

The friends and managers of the Colonization Society of Zanesville and Putnam have resolved that at their annual meeting on the 4th of July next, they will have a grand celebration.

Liberia! The REPUBLIC of Liberia, now takes rank among the nations of the Earth. A republic like our own exists on the bloody and benighted shores of Africa.

We extol the Swiss—we huzza for France—we rejoice with the German and Italian—and shall we not, as christians, as philanthropists extend our sympathies to the negro land, which has been so long obscured in darkness, degradation and death? And exult that light and liberty and religion are beginning to irradiate this gloomy region—and that a way is prepared whereby this abused and degenerate race (who are worthy,) can rise to the true dignity of MAN, also become useful to the hundred millions of their own race?

The society may felicitate itself upon the happy prospects before it. The portentious cloud has burst asunder and the light of day is beginning to shine where heretofore all was devastation and death! Eighty thousand people are now united in this new Republic, and are in the enjoyment of 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.'

Many have been the obstacles and embarrassments with which the society has to contend.—Many of its early friends turned away and left us, being "weary of well doing;" disregarding the injunction "in due time ye shall reap if you faint not," but the agony is over: Confidence is restored: Our prospects are brightening. In a few years we shall see the glorious spectacle of not only eighty thousand, but a nation of hundreds of thousands of degraded human beings, rescued from destruction; enjoying all the rights and privileges of freemen, and exerting a salutary influence on the whole African race.

The christian may rejoice that Religion has been firmly planted where horrible superstition reigned—where

"Man's inhumanity to man Made countless thousands mourn."

Politicians may rejoice that a Government of law and sound reason has been established, founded on the rights and duties of man. The philanthropist may be glad that instead of an "aceldama," a beginning has been made whereby Africans shall learn to love and cherish each other, and command the respect of the civilized world. And may we not be glad and rejoice, that our bread that has thus been cast upon the waters, is returning to us again? That we are engaged in one of the noblest and most successful charities of the age? Hundreds are now soliciting the aid of the society and asking for a passage to Liberia. Many pay their own expenses, but a majority are destitute. $50 or $100,000 could be well expended in accelerating the objects of the Parent society. Which is, in fine to provide every good and noble man of the colored race a country and a home worthy his acceptance, and the civilization and regeneration of the continent of Africa. Ladies, will you too assist in this scheme?

By direction of the Board.

A HARD CASE.—A short time since a gentleman extensively engaged in fattening & droving hogs from Ohio, but who resided himself, in this state, sent his son out with a large sum of money for the purpose of re-embarking in the business and defraying some bills of the last operation.—In passing through Mt. Pleasant, Pa., the young man dropped his pocket book in his sleeping room, and the next morning started off for Robbstown unconscious of his loss. When he discovered that his money was missing, he appeared to have given up in despair; and wrote a letter to his father full of distress, in which he stated his misfortune and that he was going out west determined never to return home until he could reimburse his parents the amount he accused himself with having lost.

As soon as the father got the letter, he hastened after his son, to relieve him from distress for a mistake that was not likely to be helped by sorrowing. On his way out, the old gentleman stopped at Mt. Pleasant, when the honest landlord, knowing him returned him the money—every cent of it. The young man had left early in the morning, and the people of the hotel did not know where to send for him, nor where his family resided.

It is believed that the young man proceeded to St. Louis, and thence to Iowa. His parents are in great distress, and it is hoped that Western papers generally, by copying this article, will endeavor to make the young man aware of the position of affairs.—Pittsburgh Commercial Journal.

RAIN.—The fall of rain during the month of May has been six inches and thirty nine hundredths; of which two inches and a half fell in a short time on last Monday night. We understand that some damage has been done, but how extensive it has been, or how far it has extended to the country we are not advised. That is a very great depth to fall in a single shower.—*Z. WESTERN RECORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, June 8, 1848.

☞We are indebted to Rev. T. F. Norris of the Boston Olive Branch, for a copy of an excellent Sermon on the Duty of Churches to Support their Ministers, preached before the Boston Conference, M. P. Church, at its late session.—It is a beautiful pamphlet. The name of the preacher is not given, but we are quite suspicious that Brother Norris is author of the Sermon.

CENTRAL RAILROAD.—On Saturday last, the question was submitted to the voters of the town of Zanesville, whether the corporation should be authorized to subscribe $30,000 worth of stock in the Central Railroad, (from Wheeling to Columbus.) We are gratified to learn that the vote was nearly unanimous in favor of the subscription. Of six hundred votes polled, only fourteen were in opposition to the enterprise. Certainly this speaks well for the public spiritedness of the citizens of Zanesville. Success, to the Central Railroad.

ANOTHER ENTERPRISE.—We learn by the Z. Courier that Mr. O'Reilley has issued a prospectus for a new Line of Telegraph, to be called The Muskingum Valley Telegraph. It is proposed to include prominent towns within reasonable range of Marietta, M'Connellsville, Zanesville, and northwardly towards Lake Erie. The cost of the work is to be one hundred and fifty dollars per mile.

General Conference, M. E. Church.

Friday afternoon May, 26.

M. Simpson submitted a substitute for the report of the Committee on the state of the Church, on the 'plan of separation,' which was acted on in numerous divisions, and adopted by vote of large majority, as follows:

The report of the select committee of nine, on the declaration of the delegates in the slaveholding States, adopted by the General Conference of 1844, of which the memorialists complain, and the operation of which deprived them of their privileges as members of the Methodist E. Church, was intended to meet a necessity which it was alleged, might arise, and was given as a peace offering to secure harmony on our southern border.

It was further made dependent, first, upon the concurrence of three fourths of the members of the several annual conferences, in reference to a part of its regulations; and secondly, upon the observance of certain provisions respecting a boundary, by the distinct ecclesiastical connection separating from us, should such connection be formed.

Without waiting, as this conference believes, for the occurrence of the anticipated necessity, for which the plan was framed, action was taken in the premises by the southern delegates; the annual conferences, by their votes officially received, have refused to concur with that part of the plan which was submitted to them; and the provisions respecting a boundary, have been violated by the highest authorities of said connection, which separated from us, and thereby, the peace and harmony of many of the societies in our southern border, have been destroyed.

Therefore, in view of these facts, as well as for the principles contained in the preceding declarations, there exists no obligation, on the part of this conference, to observe the provisions of said plan, and it is hereby declared null and void.

Sat. 27.

The report on the division of church property was taken up. J. F. Wright submitted a substitute, providing for the appointment of arbiters to settle the difficulty. J. B. Finley and J. Holdich likewise offered substitutes.

May 29.

D. Curry offered a substitute, which was finally adopted, in the words following:

Whereas, it is now ascertained that the recommendation of the Gen. Conf. at its session in 1844, to change the sixth restrictive article so as to allow of a division of the property of the Book Concern, with a distinct ecclesiastical connection which might be formed by the thirteen annual conferences in the slaveholding States, has not been concurred in, by a vote of three-fourths of all the members of the several annual conferences present and voting on said recommendation;

And whereas, the thirteen protesting annual conferences in the slave-holding States have formed themselves into a separate and distinct ecclesiastical connection, under the title or name of "the Methodist Episcopal Church South;" and their General Conference in May, 1846, did authorize three commissioners (whose credentials have been received by this General Conference) to present and adjust their claim on the funds of the Book Concern of the Methodist Episcopal Church;

And whereas, our common and holy Christianity prescribes and enjoins the most pacific measures for the settlement of all matters in dispute between individuals as well as all associations of professing Christians; and the whole Christian world will expect ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ to adopt the most peaceful and conciliatory measures for the settlement of any claim that may be urged against them;

And whereas, this Conference desires to advance as far as its constitutional powers will authorize towards an amicable adjustment of this difficulty; therefore,

1. Resolved, by the delegates of the several annual conferences of the Methodist E. Church, in General Conference assembled, That we hereby authorize the Book Agents at New York and at Cincinnati to offer to submit said claims to the decision of disinterested arbiters; provided, that if said agents, on the advice of eminent legal counsel, shall be satisfied that when clothed with all the authority which the General Conference can confer, their corporate powers will not warrant them to submit said claims to arbitration, this resolution shall not be binding on them.

2. Resolved, That should the Agents find, upon taking such legal counsel, that they have not the power to submit the case to a voluntary arbitration, and should a suit at law be commenced by the commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, said Agents are hereby authorized then and in that case to tender to said commissioners an adjustment of their preferred claims by a legal arbitration, under the authority of the court.

3. Resolved, That should the Agents find that they are not authorized to tender a voluntary arbitration, and should no suit be commenced by the commissioners aforesaid, then and in that case, the General Conference, being exceedingly desirous of effecting an amicable settlement of said claim, recommend to the annual conferences so far to suspend the sixth "restrictive article" of the Discipline, as to authorize our Book Agents at New York and Cincinnati to submit said claim to arbitration.

4. Resolved, That in the occurrence of the above specified contingencies, the Bishops are requested to lay the foregoing resolution before the several Annual Conferences for their concurrence.

Tues. May 30.

Report of committee on Boundaries was adopted, embracing a Missouri, and a Western Virginia Conference.

In the afternoon the election of Editors, &c., took place, by ballot. On the second balloting, Abel Stevens was elected editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal. J. M'Clintock was elected editor of the Quarterly Review. Matthew Simpson was elected editor of the Western Christian Advocate. B. F. Tefft was elected editor of the Ladies' Repository. Wm. Hunter was elected editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate. Wm. Nast was elected editor of the German Apologist. W. Hosmer was elected editor of the Northern Christian Advocate. D. P. Kidder was elected editor of the Sunday School Advocate and Books. G. Lane and Levi Scott were elected Book Agents at New York. L. Swormstedt and J. H. Power were elected Book Agents at Cincinnati. C. Pitman was elected Missionary Secretary on the fifth balloting.

Wed. 31.

A. Stephens resigned the office of Editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, whereupon, G. Peck was chosen in his stead. The Report on the Oregon Conference was adopted, except the third Resolution.

Thurs., June 1.

The subject of the delegated Annual Conference was postponed for four years. A resolution was adopted declaring it inexpedient to organise an Annual Conference for the colored people. The next session of the General Conference is appointed to be held at Boston. Dr. N. Bangs was appointed delegate to visit the Canada Conference. Dr. C. Elliott was requested to write the history of the church for the last four years. Adjourned, sine die.

Communication from Rev. C. SPRINGER.

We acknowledge our obligations to our old friend of Meadow Farm, for the "liberality and friendship" with which he has uniformly treated us heretofore. In addition however to all past favors, we are now indebted to him for another, in sending us the subjoined communication, for which we are determed to feel grateful to him. We had become so accustomed to receiving approbatory notices, from east, west, north and south, in reference to our mode of conducting our paper, that we might perhaps be spoiled by the frequency of these complimentary expressions. But "faithful are the wounds of a friend." Br. S. has come forward to do us a service, in the way of pointing out what he considers our faults, and we pray that the same may greatly edify us. We shall therefore respond with a good man of old, "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head." Premising only this word of remark, we give place to the article of our friend, leaving our readers and the public to judge of the whole matter without any reply from us, save a few corrections which we shall subjoin.

Written for the Western Recorder.

MR. EDITOR,—In your paper of the 11th ult., an anonymous writer alludes to me who signs himself a "boy," which you inform me is the Rev. J. B Peat. He charges me with indulging in the "spirit of wormwood and gall," and insinuates that I am destitute of "epistolary politeness" and "christian love" and prefers several other similar charges against me.

Now, I want to say to you, Mr. Editor, what you probably already know, that the Rev. J. B. Peat never wrote that article only as an amanuensis. It contains allusions that he could know nothing about without information from an older man. Besides, I heard weeks before it appeared in your paper, of a gentleman, not a thousand miles from this place, reciting that article, in substance, as one that he had some notion of writing himself. There can be little doubt that he has brought it forth and that Br. Peat has become god-father to the precious bantling.

This Rev. J. B. Peat I know nothing of, nor do I want to know any thing about a man who is capable of indulging in such cowardly malevolence against one who never laid a hair in his road. And, Mr. Editor, I think it discreditable to your paper to admit anonymous slander into your columns, especially against a person who has ever treated you with liberality and friendship.

As to your editorial in the same number, I very well know how to appreciate that. I consider it in the same light of a similar article you procured (1.) from another "boy" about your office, near the close of the 7th vol., when you wished to curry favor with the barn burning abolitionists, which stated in substance that my essays were "poluting your columns" &c. &c. Your apology to me in relation to this last article, when I had made no complaint to you on the subject, (2.) satisfies me that you very well understood its bearings. Well, bear with me, Mr. Editor, until I get through with the boys and I will promise not to trouble you very shortly again. But I cannot engage to get through by the "first of June."

If I ever published any thing more exceptionable, in all my life, taking all things into consideration, than your two articles above alluded to, (3.) and the article for which J. B. Peat stands godfather, and I will leave it to a committee of your own choosing, out of the church to decide, I will agree to repent in sack cloth and ashes all my days.

You say "a large portion of your readers would prefer to have the present discussion give place to something more interesting and edifying." Yes, Sir, and I can inform you that still a great deal "larger portion of your readers" regret that you ever permitted the repose of the church to be disturbed by a set of inexperienced and reckless young men without one word of editorial dissent. If you do not discourage such things in the outset, and suppress the communications of anonymous slanderers, who have little or no characters themselves, which assail those who have, your paper, instead of being a benefit, will become a nuisance to the church. (4.)

In regard to what the public want, in relation to this controversy, I profess to have some little knowledge myself as well as the editor. I have been written to by a number of the oldest and best members of the church, who know all about my manner of discussing such questions, to reply to those essays against the Restrictive Rule.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. SPRINGER.

(1.) As to our 'procuring' the article he refers to, the idea is a creature of our brother's imagination, and we long since so assured him. Moreover he seems to have forgotten the language and intention of the note alluded to. It referred to more than four writers, who had indulged in severe personalities which gave pain to many, and calling them 'good brethren,' expressed a hope that they would 'get through with their uninteresting controversies,' before the close of the volume, that the new type with which we expected to print next volume, might not be 'soiled with such unimportant matters.' That is the whole affair, only that it was signed, "Printer." It was embraced in about half a dozen lines, and to the best of our recollection after being put in type, was first shown us by the 'Printer,' a boy to be sure, though not then a minor. Shall we never get forgiveness that we did permit that note to pass, though with hesitation lest some brother might be displeased? We did afterwards admit to Br. S. that it was exceptionable in reference to himself, under the circumstances, on account of the juniority, though not minority of the writer. And we offered to rectify the matter by publishing our admission, but he forbade us to do so, and we thought seemed satisfied.

(2.) The "article" now referred to appeared in our paper of May 11, in the words following:

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—We still have on hand six or eight articles ahead on the Restrictive Rule. Writers will have patience, and we will endeavor to treat all by rules of justice. We desire that those who wish to write further on this subject, will please send us all they design to forward us before the 1st of June, for we learn that a large proportion of our readers would prefer to have the present discussion give place to something more interesting or edifying.

As to our "apology" in reference to the above, it was in this wise. We were full of sympathy towards our brother in reference to his domestic afflictions, his excellent lady being at the point of death, at the time we sent a hastily written note to him agreeably to his request, respecting another matter. Lest Br. S. should think that we were disposed to press himself in particular, under such circumstances, to close his series of numbers on the subject, with the kindest feeling and intention, we assured him that such was not our design, that we did not purpose arbitrarily to close the discussion by the 1st of June, but that as various other writers were entering the lists, we thought best to throw out that hint, that it might be understood that it would be desirable to close the discussion upon that topic within the limits of the present volume.

(3.) The two articles referred to, and the third also are before the public, and we cheerfully submit to what extent they are exceptionable, without choosing the arbitration, or wishing our friend to submit to the penance he speaks of. We desire however to be equally penitent with himself in reference to any impropriety we may have committed against our friend S., or any one else.

(4.) We are inclined to think it would be one of the easiest tasks we ever undertook, to show that injustice is done us in the above observations of our brother, but our readers can judge. And as to our paper becoming "a nuisance to the Church," through our mode of conducting it, we here declare that so soon as the Church shall be apprehensive of this thing, we stand ready, at any moment, to surrender up the paper to the Church, that some one more competent or trustworthy may take charge of it. We regret that any thing anonymous, considered slanderous, should have found its way into our columns. And we are bound equally to regret that some things should have appeared, consided by some slanderous, which were not anonymous. The short article of Br. Peat, which we published, was but one out of many which have been sent us, objecting to the severe personalities used in the discussion. It appeared in our paper of the 11th ult.

Finally, we can in all conscience and all confidence appeal to our friend S. and to all who have witnessed our bearing towards him in public or in private, whether we have ever treated him otherwise than respectfully. We trust we have never forgotten that he is our senior, our superior, and our predecessor in the charge of this paper. We have given him full credit publicly and privately as the man who at the request of his Conf. founded the "Western Recorder" press, and sustained it with the aid of his private means when necessary, when it was for a time struggling for patronage to secure its permanent existence. We have long ago published as our sentiment that he is therefore entitled to the gratitude of the church. We shall still maintain this position, and act accordingly. We are sorry that he should have found, or imagined that he found any thing in us unworthy of the confidence heretofore placed in us. And we are willing to excuse him that he is the first man in this wide world who has ever seen good to identify us with "barn burners," or accuse us of condescending to any thing unworthy, for the purpose of "currying favor" with any man or set of men. Our readers will of course form their own opinion in this case.

P. S. The above communication was received in time for our last week's paper, but we thought best to wait a few days, in hope of having a private interview with the writer, but it has so happened, that we have not seen him since.

REV. WM. HUNTER.—We must offer our congratulations to this Brother, upon his re-appointment by the late General Conference, as editor of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate. We confess, we have had our serious apprehensions, that his very liberal course towards dissenting and seceding branches of the Methodist Church, would cost him his office if not his standing.—But we take pleasure in rendering due credit to the General Conference, that by its act in re-electing Brother H., it has virtually endorsed his liberal views and sentiments, so repeatedly expressed, and bid him continue in well doing.—A decided improvement, we trust, has taken place. Times are not as they once were. How vastly different—the General Conference of 1828, in that same Iron City! We are glad to witness these signs of improvement in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The recent division between the North and the South, we presume, has served in some degree to humble that body.

REV. DR. ELLIOTT.—This Brother now retires from the editorship of the Western Christian Advocate, of which he has had charge, we believe, for twelve years or more. Ever since we have been connected with the press, we have found the course of the Dr. to be friendly and courteous as a cotemporary. The W. C. Advocate has become an excellent paper. Some years ago, we used to think it one of the most sectarian sheets we knew of, but we believe it has made improvement in that respect. Dr. E. is an able writer, but as he is now advanced in years, we presume he will find it pleasant to be relieved of the responsibilities of an important press. He has been called upon by the General Conference to write a history of the Church for the last four years.

Hope of Peace.

The Zanesville Courier of yesterday announces the intelligence of the ratification of the Treaty of Peace, by the Mexican Congress.—The statement seems to come from good authority.

News of the Week.

From the Watchman of the Valley.

Remarkable Death.

The authority which vouches for the following fact may be relied upon as unquestionable:

"On Monday, the 1st inst., when riding on the National Road near Manhattan, Putnam county, Ia., I was informed a Mrs. Stanley had died immediate after baptism by immersion.—On my arrival at the place, I learned she had been dead about 45 minutes, and the corpse was in the house at which I called. All appeared solemn—many astonished; and I was told the bereaved husband was almost inconsolable.

The deceased was the mother of two children, the youngest, one said, was not four, others said about four, and another said five or six weeks old. I was informed she had an attack of fever after its birth, and, in consequence of her feeble state of health, one at least had advised her not thus to be immersed; but she would not be dissuaded. She walked into the water; after having been put under, she assisted herself in rising—her head, at the same time, falling on one side. She did not make another effort. Persons on the bank immediately came to her assistance & carried her out. Perhaps she breathed a few times, was pulseless, and died without uttering a word or making an intelligent motion. Two physicians were present, and labored in vain for her restoration.

A SUBSCRIBER.

Extension of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.—The preliminary surveys being sufficiently advanced, we learn that the Directors of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have secured the services of Capt. Child, the eminent New England Engineer, and of Jonathan Knight well known in this community, who, in conjunction with Mr. Latrope, the Chief Engineer, have already entered upon their duties, and are to proceed forthwith to locate the route and recommend the best plan of construction for the extension of the Railroad within the limits of the Charter.

It is understood, that the expediency of extending the road from a point east of Cumberland will receive the particular consideration of the Engineers, as presenting not only a route in all respects feasible, but, unless the right of way through the city of Cumberland could be obtained upon reasonable terms, cheaper than a line projected from the depot in that city.

We are glad to perceive this earnest of a determination by the Board of Directors to spare no exertions to adopt the best line, and most approved plan of construction of this road, and, at the same time, to press our great work forward with the utmost practicable dispatch. We do not doubt that in the reputation and skill of the Engineers selected, the Stockholders have a sure guarantee of a safe and judicious result.

River and Harbor Convention.—A committee of this body met at the Astor House, New York City, on the 16th inst. The Hon. Abbot Lawrence was made Chairman. The duties of the committe is to draft, circulate, and present to Congress, a memorial upon the subject of improvements of river and harbor improvements throughout the U. States.—O. S. Journal.

Awful Depravity of Slave Laws.—Martha Christian has been convicted before the court of Wood Co., Virginia, of of teaching a female slave to read the Bible, and sentenced to imprisonment for ten years in the Penitentiary!

The above is on the authority of the Cincinnati Enquirer. There is a young man in this town who was indicted at Wheeling some years since for teaching black children in a Sabbath school.—Zanesville Aurora.

STEAMBOAT BURNED.—Night before last the steamer Ben Rush, lying at the Monongahela wharf, opposite Penn street, was burned to the water's edge. The flames were discovered about ten o'clock, and extended so rapidly that it was found impossible to save the boat. A German lad, about fifteen years of age, was burned to death on the boat. He was sleeping on board, and was forgotten by the watchman on duty until too late to save his life. When his body was recovered it was burned to a crisp—the head and one arm being entirely consumed. His name was Strull—had lately arrived in this country, and was endeavoring to earn enough money to bring his parents to this country. They will now, probably, never know his fate, but imagine that he has deserted them in their old age.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

Abolition of Slavery in the French COLONIES.

The following decree has just been published:

The Provisional Government, considering that slavery is an attempt against the dignity of man; by destroying the freedom of man it suppresses the natural principles of right and duty; that it is a flagrant violation of the Republican dogma of liberty, equality and fraternity; that unless effective measures follow closely the proclamation made of the principle of abolition, deplorable disorders may arise in the colonies, decrees:

Art. 1. Slavery shall be entirely abolished in all the colonies and possessions of France, at the end of two months after the promulgation of this present decree in each of them. From the promulgation of this present decree in the colonies, all corporeal punishment, all sales of non-liberated persons, shall be absolutely interdicted.

2. The system of engagements for periods of time, established at Senegal, is suppressed.

3. Governors or commissaries-general of the Republic are charged with applying the measures suitable for insuring emancipation at Martinique, Gaudaloupe, and its dependencies, the island of Re-union, Guyana, Senegal, and the other French settlements on the western coast of Africa, the island of Mayotte and its dependencies, and Algeria.

4. All slaves condemned to afflictive or correctional punishments for acts which, if imputed to freemen, would not have been visited with these punishments, are pardoned. All individuals transported as an administrative measure are recalled.

5. The National Assembly shall fix the indemnities to be granted to the colonists.

6. The colonies, purified from slavery, and the possessions in the Indies shall be represented at the National Assembly,

7. The principle that the soil of France emancipates the slave who touches it, is applied to colonies and possessions of the Republic.

8. In future every Frenchman, even when in a foreign country, is interdicted from possessing, purchasing or selling slaves, and from participating, directly or indirectly, in any traffic of this nature. Every infraction of these provisions shall involve the loss of the quality of a French citizen. Nevertheless, Frenchmen who shall find themselves affected by these provisions, shall be allowed three years to conform, from the time of the promulgation of this decree.—Those who may become possessors of slaves, by inheritance, gift, marriage, shall, under the same penalty, emancipate or alienate them within the same delay, from the day on which their possession shall have commenced.

9. The minister of the Marine and Colonies, and the Minister of War, are each, so far as concerns him, charged with the execution of this present decree. Done at Paris, in council of government, this 27th of April.

Caution to Merchants and Consumers.—We have been informed by good chemical authority, that much of the article of Saleratus coming from the country into this market is composed of nearly three fourths of fine ground table salt with ¼ Pearlash, obtaining thereby, fraudulently, extravagant prices for salt; and if that were all, little complaint would be made of a criminal nature. but where a man buys Salaratus for use, he is badly injured, if a counterfeit article is palmed off on him. A man who imposes on community in like impositions to the one related above, should be ferreted out and hunted from society, like the thief, robber & assassin.—Cin Com.

The Pennsylvania railroad is progressing as rapidiy as is consistent with economy. It is expected that during the ensuing winter it will be completed far as Lewistown, and thence to Huntington; the lines will be ready for the rails early next summer. A very few years we think will see this road in operation from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh.

A Rogue in Disguise.—A scoundrel, dressed in the garb of a farmer, went to the Mansion House on Friday last, registered his name, and took a room. On Saturday, before the day's dawn, he was gone, taking with him some two hundred dollars in money. which he collected in six different rooms during the night!—This is another one of the tricks.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Look out.

Two young girls, daughters of Milton Store, were drowned at Burlington, Vt., on the 11th inst. by the sinking of a boat in which they were crossing the river. How truthful is the remark, "in the midst of life we are death."

The Recorder of Buffalo has decided that the Conductor of a Railroad train has no right to require any passenger to change a seat he has taken, ("even to give it to a lady.") unless guilty of disorderly or improper conduct, in which case it would be his right and duty to remove him from the train.

Steamboat Explosion.—The steamer Halifax, a small boat running between Waterville and Hallowell, Me., burst a boiler on the 23d inst., while passing through the lock at Augusta Dam. Five persons were killed instantly, and three more were missing; supposed to have been blown over the lock into the river. Several ladies were badly scalded, and thrown several rods into the water; and nearly all on board, about twenty, more or less injured. This sad accident is believed to have been caused by carelessness, and racing, and should be a warning to all masters of steamboats, not to endanger the lives of passengers unnecessarily.

Fatal Railroad Accident.—Two fatal railroad accidents occurred in this vicinity on Saturday last. An Englishman, named James McCalla, aged 21 years, was standing on the front car of a coal train, managing the break on a grade of the Willow street road, and whilst the train was descending between Second and Front sts., fell forward and across the rails on one side of the road, the whole train passing over the middle of the body, crushing him to death instantly. A young man named James McDenley, employed on the Germantown Railroad, accidentally fell between two cars of a burthen train, loaded with stone, and was almost instantly killed, the whole train passing over him. The accident occurred in the upper part of Spring Garden.—Alex. Messenger.

Late from Jamaica and the French West Indies—Arrival of Santa Anna at Jamaica.—By an arrival at Baltimore, the American of that city is placed in possession of Jamaica papers to the 10th inst. General Santa Anna arrived at Kingston on the 6th inst. He has taken up his residence near the "race course." He will in a few months proceed to Venezuela. By this arrival we have later intelligence from Hayti, which confirms the account of the massacre there.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

Sixty Dwellings and two Factories Burned.

A destructive fire occurred at Baltimore on Sunday afternoon, commencing in the large cotton factory of John Knox, at the corner of Poppleton and Fremont streets. It communicated to the surrounding buildings and consumed about sixty dwellings, generally small and occupied by poor families.

Robert Baker's logwood factory was also destroyed, together with nearly all the property encompassed within the bounds of Lexington, Poppleton, Saratoga and Cove streets. The total amount of loss cannot be less than $150,000.—Mr. Knox was insured to about $50,000 here and in Philadelphia: including $10,000 in the Franklin.

The other buildings were partially insured.—Great distress has been caused to the many families turned out of house and home by this conflagration.

Some of the fire companies, owing to the restriction of the Mayor, did not turn out through spite or revenge, declaring that if they couldn't go where they pleased, they wouldn't go at all.

Distressing Occurrence.—A most distressing occurrence took place in Hadnots, Carteret co., North Carolina, in the 23d ult. A Mr. Wilson Chance, having previously discovered a bee tree, took his son Henry, and three half brothers, Stanly and Isaiah, and James Mabley, to cut down for the purpose of hiving the bees. While taking out the honey, Isaiah, James, and Henry ate of it. On the way home, his son Henry became blind and sick. Isaiah was taken in a similar manner, and in his blindness wandered out of the path. James having eaten a small piece of the bread, as it is called, on his way homeward, was discovered to be blind and helpless. He expired in half an hour after having eaten the last piece of bee bread. Search was then made for Isaiah, whom a neighbor had found, and was met carrying him home blind and helpless. By the frequent use of salt and water, Isaiah and Henry recovered the next day, but not until their lives had been despaired of. This should serve as a warning to all persons to be careful in eating honey taken from bee trees. This is a singular circumstance, and worthy of scientific investigation.

Perilous Voyage.

It was reported at Detroit, Michigan, recently, that Horace Stockman, William Stockman, and another fisherman, were drowned in Lake Huron, near Thunder Bay, on the 23d ult. The men have corrected the statement by re-appearing, and the Detroit Advertiser gives the following account of their escape:—They left Thunder Bay Island for Riviere au Sable, across the Bay. The wind soon commenced blowing a terrific galo, and they were driven to Manitoulin Island. After throwing overboard a barrel of pork, a barrel of flour, and all their fishing tackle, they were driven from thence to the Canada shore, 16 miles above Goderich; from thence they proceeded to Goderich, and then returned to Point Aux Barques, where one of them was left, having his limbs very badly frozen during the night. From Point Aux Barques they returned to Riviere au Sable. They retained on board one half barrel sugar, which they supposed to be pork, and some cheese, which was their provisions. During the night they saw a vessel, which hove up for them, but they were driven past by the sea. The yawl in which they were buffeting the tumbling waters, filled three times while crossing the lake. The distance from starting point to Goderich is 160 miles, from which they returned to Thunder Bay in the same craft, making a distance of 320 miles in a small fishing boat. The whole time in which they were going to Goderich, the wind blew a most terrific gale, subjecting the boat and crew to the most imminent momentary danger, and their lives are due to their own cool judgment in conducting their frail bark through so long and perilous a journy.

Another Revolutionary Hero Gone!—The Maysville Eagle announces the death, in Bracken county, of Abram Williams, a soldier of the Revolution. He was in the one hundred and sixth year of his age, and had been a resident of Kentucky upwards of fifty years.

A woolen factory is in course of erection in Maumee City, by a company of gentlemen experienced in the business. It is to be in operation by the 1st of July, and contain 150 spindles, employ 30 to 40 hands, manufacture 200 yards of cloth per day. The canal on the north side of the Maumee affords a great deal of water power, which with a hydraulic canal in contemplation, if not in course of construction on the south side, will afford, at the foot of the rapids of that river, one of the most extensive and valuable water powers in the West.—Cin. Commercial.

Indian Robbed.—An Indian Chief, on his way home from Washington, whither he had been to receive the annual instalment of his tribe, had his trunk broken open on board the steamer Clipper yesterday. The thief took from it forty-four dollars in money, but from some cause neglected to look deeper into the trunk, for at the bottom there were upwards of five thousand dollars. The red man was fortunate in escaping so easily.—Cin. Com.

Clapping.—An eccentric preacher in the West concluded an impressive charity sermon in the following language:

"My dear brethren, it has been the usual fashion for an audience to testify their approbation of that which has been said by the clapping of hands but I recommend for your adoption a new method of clapping, less timultuous and much more pleasing—when you leave this building, clap your hands into your breeches pockets, and drawing them out again, clap your money into the box which is at the door to receive it; and may the Lord give it his blessing!"

Inoculation from the Dead.—Mr. Jesse Gould, agent for the Winnisimmet (Mass.) Ferry Company is lying in a dangerous condition from being inoculated with virus from the body of the man found in the water on Thursday evening, which he helped to recover. The virus took effect upon a cut in his hand, and the arm swelled fearfully.

Another Telegraph Extension—O'Reilly Wire Webbing.

Indianapolis, May 27, 1848.

I send you the first lightning flash from the capital of Indiana, which is on the line which H. O'Reilly is constructing between Cincinnati and Chicago. The posts are up all the way to the latter place, and the wires and instruments will soon be ready. This is the second line which O'Reilly has extended across the state of Indiana, the first crossing by way of Vincennes from Louisville to St. Louis.

M. Delano, well known to you Philadelphians, is the chief operator on this new line, called the "Cincinnati and Chicago," and as you know, is among the most skilful in the country.—Balt. Reporter.

Tremendous Freshet.

From the Geneva Gazette Extra, May 22, '48.

Our village was visited yesterday with one of the severest storms that our citizens have ever witnessed. About half-past eleven o'clock, a dark cloud sprang up in the west, but not with a very threatening appearance. In a short time the whole horizon was obscured, and about twelve o'clock it commenced raining violently, accompanied with severe thunder and lightning.

The rain appeared to fall in sheets rather than drops. So fast did it descend, that it was almost impossible to see the pavements, and we think we do not exaggerate when we say the water on our most level streets stood from 2 to 3 inches in depth.

The culvert connecting with the creek running by Daskam's Bakery, and passing through the square on the north corner of Seneca and Water streets, becoming filled up, or else not being of a sufficient capacity to admit the volume of water, became dammed at the mouth, and the whole rear of the block, from N. Tamlingson's grocery on Seneca street, to the Temperance House on Water street, was completely flooded, and the cellars entirely inundated. So unexpected was the storm, and so violently did the rain fall, that although many of our merchants began removing their goods in a short time after the shower, they were soon obliged to desist on account of the height of the water. As far as we have been able to learn, the following is the amount of damage sustained:

L. Kelly & Co., Druggists,	$500
Platt & Simpson, do.,	500
A. H. Bradt, Grocer,	500
All others, about	1,500

Indian Rubber Railroad Springs.

Numerous are the applications of Indian Rubber, that as applied to Railroad springs seems likely to be as useful as any, and at no distant period the Indian Rubber spring will probably entirely supersede the steel springs now used.

The Indian Rubber spring is composed of alternate layers of Indian Rubber rings and metal plates, and it combines in a remarkable degree, simplicity, durability and economy with indestructable elasticity. Not the least of its recommendations are, 1st. The great facility with which its power and elacticity may be regulated by increasing or diminishing the diameter and thickness of the ring, and by increasing or decreasing the number of rings. 2d. Its great comparative lightness, being about one-tenth of the weight of steel springs. 3d. Its non-liability to fracture: and 4th, the fact that the material cannot be affected by extremes of temperature.

The comfort to the passengers and the saving of the wear and tear, both to the cars and the permanent way, would be much promoted by the use of these springs. The patent was granted to Mr. Fuller in 1846; the agent is Mr. G. M. Kneurte, of 78 Broad street, New York, where the springs and drawings may be seen.—Neal's Gaz.

Loss of Human Life.

The Germantown Telegraph, which is one of the best of our exchanges, thus speaks of the loss of life in the Mexican war. "The war in which we are involved with Mexico, has been more than usually destructive to life and limb, in proportion to the numbers engaged. From an official statement, that it appears 7,000 seven hundred and seven men are numbered among the dead, and that six thousand five hundred and fifty-eight are registered as being discharged for disability. Of these at least one-half, if not more, have already died. When we remember that this report was made in answer to a call introduced in December last, and that Gen. Twiggs has recently declared that the troops in Mexico are dying at the rate of a regiment a month, some idea may be formed of the actual loss of life in this war."

Willing a Beard.

Mehemet Ali has willed his beard to a woman! Lady Lydia Stanhope, wife of a Colonel in the eastern service, being engaged in collecting "locks" from the heads of the Sovereigns of her day, called upon the Arab for a specimen. He returned a polite answer, informing her that he could not literally comply with her request, being bald headed! but that he would leave her his beard to be cut off after death, Lady Lydia to send him from England two capital English razors! The agreement was ratified.

Distressing Shipwreck.

The following is an extract of a letter from a gentleman of New York, a passenger in the packet ship West Point, which left that city a few weeks ago for Liverpool:

London, May 11, 1848.

On the night of the 27th of April we were run into at sea, in lat. 46, long. 23, by the bark Cove, of Quebec, she was sailing before the wind, at the rate of about nine knots, we about five knots, by the wind. The collision was tremendous. It woke me. Mr. Rowan, our Minister to Naples, came to our state room, and said we were wrecked. I dressed, went on deck, and remained there all night with the captain.

They made loud cries from the Cove: Lay too, we are sinking." She came immediately across our bows, which she nearly destroyed, and turned one of our large anchors, weighing nearly two tons.

We made a total wreck of her. Our bowsprit went across her deck, between the fore and main mast, sweeping every thing before it clean with the deck. Her stern was also carried away, and her first mate, the man at the wheel, and one sailor, either crushed, or thrown overboard by the concussion. We repaired damages as soon as possible, and at about half-past two in the morning bore up towards the dismantled wreck, which we had lost sight of until the dawn of day. At four we were along side, and by 9 took off the Captain, two passengers, and eleven sailors.—The wreck was then abandoned, and we proceeded towards Liverpool; but found what was worse than all, they had left a sick man in the cabin of the wreck. They said he could not be got up without killing him. His lungs were gone, and he could not live many days. There were also two dogs left with him to starve, unless the vessel went down before that event arrives.

Redeeming the Time.—"As in a letter," says Mr. Jay, "if the paper is small, and we have much to write, we write closer, so let us economise and improve the remaining moments of life." "Work while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work."

"I must be very industrious, for this is the only candle I have, and it is almost gone," said a little girl to herself as she sat swiftly plying her needle by the light of a candle that was burned down almost to the socket.

Distressing Accident.

The Burlington (Vt.) Free Press of the 13th May, says: Late in the afternoon of yesterday, as a small party, consisting of Milton Storrs, three sisters, Esther, aged 16 years, Mary, aged 13 years, Martha, aged 10, and a little brother aged 8 years, children of Mr. Spalding Storrs, who live on J. F. Pomeroy's interval farm, north of the village, and Miss Sophronia, daughter of Mr. S. Lillie of this village, were attempting to cross the river opposite Mr. Storr's house, it was discovered that the boat was filling at one end, and young Mr. Storrs requested that some of the party should step to the other.

In their fright, they all rushed to the end of the boat indicated, and it almost immediately filled and sunk. Milton told them to all get hold of himself, hoping, notwithstanding the strong current, as they were but about forty or fifty feet from the shore, to be able to rescue them all. With his little brother under one arm, the oldest sister upon the other, and the other three clinging to such parts of his person as they were able to lay hold of, nobly did Milton strive to reach the shore, but in vain.

His father, having heard their cries, had already reached the bank of the river, but being unable to swim, was obliged to have recourse to a pole, which he thrust towards his struggling children. Milton was so encumbered with the clinging grasp of his five companions, that he was unable to seize the pole except with his teeth, with which he could keep his hold but for a short time.

The two youngest of the sisters soon lost their hold, and were borne down by the current, while the others reached the shore in a state of complete exhaustion. As Mary and Martha were carried down the stream, they shrieked to their father and brother—"help us! help us!" And though he could not swim, the father, unable to withtand the impulses of a parent, plunged into the river in pursuit of his drowning little ones.—But instead of being able to assist them, he soon found himself in danger of drowning.

Milton, thereupon, with a conflict of feeling that can be better concieved than described, abandoned his sisters to their unhappy fate, and hastened to the rescue of his father, whom he succeeded, with considerable difficulty, in bringing to the shore.

The sisters, Mary and Martha, soon disappeared from human sight and human aid; and their bodies, notwithstanding the most anxious and diligent search, have not yet been recovered.

Horses, Cattle, &c.

Mr. Ed. Tupper, the accommodating attendant at the lower Zanesville bridge, has kindly furnished us with the following statement of the amount of stock that has crossed the lower bridge (connecting Putnam and Zanesville) for several months past. We regret that a similar account has not been kept at the upper bridge. Statistics of this kind are always gratifying to public curiosity, and what is more important, they frequently furnish valuable information as business data.

Sad Accident.—A gentleman by the name of McLure, residing at McKeesport, walked overboard from the steam tow boat Star, while that vessel was ascending the Allegheny last Saturday morning, bound to Freeport. Mr. M. was sleeping on a chair on the deck of the steamer, when hearing a noise as is supposed, he rose to make enquiry as to its cause and walked overboard, at Kern's ripples, four miles below Freeport.—He leaves a wife and one child. The body has not been recovered. When he fell over he had on his great coat and boots, which would have rendered it difficult for him to save himself by swimming.

Later.—Mr. McLure drowned from the tow boat Star, last Saturday morning, was the Captain of the boat. His body has not been recovered.

The Telegraph.

A gang of hands commenced digging post holes along the line of the Telegraph westward from this place, on Tuesday. Except for a breach of contract by M. Farris, who was to deliver the posts on three miles before the 5th inst. and has not yet delivered one, the line between here and Athens would be ready for the wires in a couple of weeks. The work will be pushed forward with all possible rapidity, and Stockholders are reminded of the necessity of promptly paying their instalments.—Marietta Intel.

New subscribers this week, 15. Discontinuances, 3.

Much obliged to Brothers Fowler, Haseltine, Robinson, Warren, Reeves and Duling, for those new subs. and especially for your assurance that they are all good, of which we are duly aware, in the case of some of them, from personal knowledge.

The P. M. at Richwood informs us that J. Chapman declines taking his paper any longer. Why then did he not have us notified 7 or 8 weeks ago when his year was up, before he had become responsible for another volume? Our agent will please arrange this matter, and also the one at Prospect, and report to us. When a subscriber pays up, we are always ready to discontinue, when required.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he gives the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. We have concluded to give also our list of those who have obtained five or more new subscribers for the Western Recorder since the commencement of present volume.—We are under obligations to numerous others who have thus far procured us, from one to four subscribers, and we are daily expecting to receive further intelligence from them, of encourniging character.

The names of five or more responsible subscribers will entitle any Brother to have his name added to the following list. Please, however, send only such as are good.

Rev. John Burns, Mt. Pleasant, O.	18
Rev. W. G. Fowler, Painterville, O.	16
Rev. A. S. Robinson, Ridgefield Four Cor. O.	9
Rev. E. P. Kezerta, Bainbridge, O.,	8
Rev. T. Finkbine, Cincinnati, O.,	7
Rev. Wm. Reeves. Pittsburgh, Pa.	6
Rev. O. P. Stephens, Catawba, O.	6

Rev. C. H. Williams, Bournville, O.	5
Rev. V. Lucas, Johnstown, Pa.,	5
Rev. W. Hatfield, Alum Creek, O.	5

☞We hope to add other names each week.

Should we through oversight, fail to give full credit to any brother, we will be glad to make the correction, as soon as it is pointed out to us.

PROSPECTUS OF THE

Fourth Volume of the American Pulpit.

The American Pulpit is a Monthly Magazine, published in the city of Worcester, Massachusetts. It contains thirty-two pages in each number, and will be well supplied with that kind of Literature which is adapted to Ministers and Theological Students, such as Sermons, Sketches, Essays, Biographies, &c. &c.

The leading Sermon, will be of the highest order; and all the Sermons, we intend, shall bear the stamp of superiority. They will be sought, and obtained, so far as it is possible, from the most eminent Divines, on the American Continent. Arrangements are already made to accomplish this end; and no reasonable pains or expense will be spared, to make this department of the Pulpit superior to anything of the kind in existence.

The Sketches will be of the first class. We have accepted the proposals of an eminent minister in England to supply this department, partially—the Rev J Burns, D D. of London, author of "Pulpit Cyclopedia;" &c &c. By securing the correspondence of Dr Burns, the patrons of the Pulpit will enjoy a fine opportunity of comparing British and American talent in the same pages.

In the Miscellaneous Department will be found, Essays, Biographical Sketches, Poetry, and such of exterior shall enhance the value of the work.

The Pulpit is edited by

REV J D BRIDGE,

who will spare no pains to render it not only a welcome visiter to the Minister's study, but a 'profitable' one.—The work is evangelical in its character, and will avoid all controversy, except with sin and the popular errors of the day.

Its patrons, hitherto, have been gathered from all of the orthodox denominations in the country, all of whom the Publisher hopes to return. And we wish it distinctly understood, that Ministers in all the evangelical denominations are invited to become contributors to the pages of he Pulpit. We solicit from them, Sermons, Sketches of Sermons, or Criticisms, on any subject within the compass of Homiletics; and, that no one may feel embarrased in his desire to accept this invitation, we shall dispense wish the "List of Contributors" which has formerly appeared on our cover. We do this not out of any disrespect to any of the worthy names in that List, but that others may not be deterred from contributing, because not numbered in the distinguished catalogue.

By far the largest amount of matter contained in the Pulpit will be 'original;' but it will also be enriched by choice 'selections' from Books and periodicals.

Terms—One Dollar Per Annum, in Advance.

The Pulpit will be mailed regularly during the latter part of the month preceding that of its publication, so that it may reach its destination, in ordinary cases, by the first of each month.

We solicit Agents for the work. We will allow them a reasonable and just compensation for their services, and we authorize all the ministers of every evangelical denomination, and all laymen who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and who desire the extension of his kingdom on earth, to co-operate with us in extending the circulation of this work.

All orders for the work and all remittances for the same should be addressed to

POET'S CORNER.

PARODY ON BRUCE'S ADDRESS.

Soldiers of the cross arise,—
Lo! your captain from the skies,
Holding forth the glorious prize
Calls to victory.

Fear not though the battle lower,
Firmly stand the trying hour,
Stand the tempter's utmost power,
Spurn his slavery.

Who the cause of Christ would yield,
Who would leave the battle field,
Who would cast away his shield,
Let him basely go.

Who for Zion's king will stand,
Who will join the faithful band,
Let him come with heart and hand,
Let him face the foe.

By the mercies of our God,
By Emanuel's streaming blood,
When alone for us he stood,
Ne'er give up the strife.

Even to the latest breath,
Hark, to what your captain saith,
Be ye faithful unto death,
Take the crown of life.

By the woes which rebels prove,
By the bliss of holy love,
Sinners seek the joys above,
Sinners turn and live.

Here is freedom worth a name
Tyrant sin is put to shame,
Grace inspires the hallowed flame,
God will give the Crown.

RESTRICTIVE RULE---Palemon, &c.

NO. II.

Mr. Editor,—Palemon, from want of argument, or a disposition to offer it, endeavors to carry his point, by appealing to the prejudices of the people. He tells them that I am not to be trusted; that I "cannot be classed with the honest opposers of the Restrictive Rule, but with the reckless enemies of our entire system;" and "proceeds to make good his assertion" by giving quotations, which, he thinks, must convince all, that I am in favor of a settled pastoracy. His argument then runs thus;—a minister, in the Methodist Protestant Church, who is in favor of a settled pastoracy, is so, not from a sense of right, but from a desire of "securing for himself a permanent charge;" and whatever he may offer in opposition to this restrictive feature of her economy, cannot be according to his own sentiment, and hence, he must be a dishonest opposer. Surely, that is a strong case! and may be addressed in the language of our author, "wonderful, wonderful logic!!"

He selects two considerations, offered in my prefatory remarks to a series of articles, for the purpose of showing that a public examination of this subject would not be improper, and tells you that they are offered arguments upon the question itself, and then hold them up to ridicule, most triumphantly. Now, who that read my first No. upon this subject, and then read these "strictures" of Palemon upon it, does not pity the indiscrimination of the good brother? And here his examination of my arguments ends. Why does he not go on? He has succeeded so well with what he calls my arguments, why not try those that really are? Why should "strictures" that are so valuable end so soon? If there is nothing else that can be answered by argument, is there nothing that can be sneered at, without turning the sneer of the reader back upon the sneering writer?

In his No. ii., Palemon presents, what he says were the views of the members of the Convention of 1830. From it we learn that the question with the Convention was not, whether they should adopt an itinerancy, with, or without, the Restricture Rule. But it was whether they should adopt an ININERANCY, a settled pastoracy, or a system of congregationalism. But the subject was not under controversy. Palemon gives us his information "from his personal knowledge of the members, and thorough acquainance with the views which influenced their action." He says, "The lay-members of the Convention were all Methodist." (Wonder what the ministerial members were.) "Their education, judgment, will and affections all tended to itinerancy." "To have presented to a body of men, similarly influenced, a system of settled pastorates, would have been presumptious in the extreme." But these prejudices and convictions existed in favor of itinerancy, just as they do with the most of us now; and it was not a matter of inquiry, whether the restrictive members of the itinerant rule was a necessary part of itinerancy or not. They took it for granted that it was; and so they made "a great mistake." Now, if they had considered this matter, none of the prejudides and convictions which Palemon says they possessed, would have induced them to adopt this restrictive portion of the itinerant Rule. Their views would all have been met, by putting into the hands of the Annual Conferences an itinerant ministry, and not a settled pastoracy, or a system of congregationalism. This is according to his own showing, in the Recorder of March 23. He does not pretend, himself, with all of his attachment to the Rule, that the restrictive portion of it, is a necessary adjunct of itinerancy. He, indeed, admits, in his former No., thai it is not. Now, let him show, if he can, by any logical argument, that this restrictive feature ought to control the operations of the gospel ministry under any circumstances.

He presents this objection to the removal of the Restrictive Rule, that it, "by showing off the best talents and acquirements to the wealthier stations, and circuits, would leave the poorer parts of the work to be supplied by men of much inferior grade and attainments." Brother Springer presents the same objection, in his own peculiar style. He says, the removal of the Restrictive Rule "would open the way for a few men of flexible morality, by craft and management, to worm themselves with the best livings in the church, and to drive all honest men from the concern."—Wonder if there are no honest men in the ministry of those churches that have no such rule!!—The objection, then, is this; that if it were not for this Rule, the more talented ministers would be kept in the better circuits, and stations, and the less talented brethren be left to serve the poorer appointments.—Now, I ask of the very same thing does not exist under this Rule? There is, in every Conference, a class of more talented ministers, and a set of better appointments; and there is a class of less talented ministers and a set of poorer appointments; and the more talented brethren are kept moving round in the better appointments, and the less talented brethren are kept moving round in the poorer appointments. The only difference that there could possibly be, is, that now, you shift the brethren of better talent round in the better appointments, perhaps a little more frequently than you would do if this Rule was abolished; and the brethren of less talent, round in the poorer appointments, in the same way. So, if this be an evil, it exists under the Rule the same that it would without it. And if I have to kept in the poor appointments, let me see a possibility of my staying in one of them, as long as I can be more useful, and consequently, make myself more comfortable, in it than I could be any where else.

PRUDENTIA.

At Home, May 4, 1848.

Written for the Western Recorder.

"He that loveth not, knoweth not God."

Mr. Editor,—As a member of Meth. Prot. Church, I have been much afflicted in mind, on account of the little concern or zeal manifested by our members to support the Ministers of Christ, who are said to be "in his stead praying sinners to be reconciled to God." I know that much has been said and written on the subject, but they need line upon line, &c. How is it that Ministers of almost all other denominations, receive from four hundred to a thousand dollars a year, and that too, in many instances from very few members? An elder of the Presbyterian Church told me a few days ago, that they had but twenty paying members, and they were about to employ a young man at four hundred dollars a year, that it would be only twenty dollars a piece, and they could and would pay it. Now thought I, if twenty members of that church can freely give a preacher $400 for his services, surely our members who number from fifty to three or four hundred in each circuit and station, ought to pay their preachers one, two, or thre e hundred, per year for his labors. But some say that the Presbyterians are generally more wealthy, than we are. Not so in the neighborhood of the elder above spoken of; and if they are, may it not be, because they are more liberal? It is said, "he that soweth bountifully, shall reap bountifully." Nay, verily, they have their eye fixed on the command of Christ, they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel, and are more free from covetousness. Hundreds of our members never pay one cent, and others say, of some few of the preachers (for it is but few,) they are better off than me, they have a farm, &c., I will not give them any thing, they ought to preach and give their time for nothing. Now I ask that Brother, would you be willing to leave your comfortable home, and spend your time for the good of the public, in any way whatever, unless you received a reasonable compensation? Ah, well he says, but I am not a preacher. And pray Sir, have all men on earth the privilege of providing for their families a future well-being in this life, excepting the minister of Jesus Christ? He must sacrifiee the comforts of the social loving family circle, all his days and die in poverty, leaving his wife and children in some instances to suffer for the want of the common comforts of life. As to refusing to give any thing to a preacher, because he possesses a liule property, where did they find the law to justify this, is it not nullifying the rule laid down in our Discipline, which has defined the salaries of our preachers, and also lays aside the law of God, to wit: "they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel?" I would add, that he who makes this plea to keep his money or rather the Lord's money in his own pocket, assumes the executorship of the preacher's property, time and labor, and presumptuously takes the judgment seat, and nullifies the plan of Heaven. How would he like for some one to usurp the same authority over him? We fear that such a covetous man would be ready in such a case to fight for his time and property.—Oh! Alas! few there are, but think more of 25 cents, than they do of the prosperity of the kingdom of heaven, when a public collection is taken up for the support of the gospel, many that are in good circumstances, throw in half a dime. May the good Lord have mercy on them.

MUTUAL RIGHTS.

Written for the Western Recorder.

Br. Bassett: Sir,—with your permission I wish to ask a few questions of those who advocate the extinction of the Restrictive Rule from our Book of Discipline. The Annual Conference according to our book is to be composed of itinerant ministers, preachers and their delegates.

Now if those brethren should obtain their desire, itinerancy will be abolished in part if not altogether, consequently there would be no itinerants to enter into the composition of the Conference. Now, 1st. Who is to compose that Conference? 2d. Under the new arrangement will there be mutual rights so that all the ministry of the Methodist Protestant Church (stationed or unstationed,) will have a right to a seat in said Conference? 3d. When the Restrictive Rule shall have been expunged, will those ministers and preachers now called the locality possess the right to be employed to preach by any class or society and receive compensation for their labors?

These questions with some others have presented themselves to my mind while reading the articles in your paper on the above subject. If some of the brethren interested will throw some light on this subject that we may see before we leap, we shall be able to act understandingly.—If these questions should meet with an answer, I may at some future time ask a few more for solution. By publishing the above in the Western Recorder you will confer a favor on

A LOOKER ON.

Pleasant Vale, Belmont Co., O., May 29, '48.

Scientific.

FACTS IN GEOLOGY.

Sea-water appears to contain from ¾ to 4 per cent. of Salt. Its specific gravity is 1,028.

In Icebergs only one-seventh is out of the water, and many are seen 200 feet high.

Lakes vary in size continually from desiccation, and the extinction forms basins of organic remains.

On low coasts, as in Netherlands, and on the sandy mouths of rivers, the reaction of tides throws up the sand in hills or downs, often very high, and always increasing.

In two attempts to sound the Northern Ocean, with lines 1 mile and 1½ mile long, no bottom could be found.

The sands so much enroach on the western side of the Nile, that it covers once-flourishing villages, whose spires and minarets are visible through its surface. Probably the Oasis of Ammon was once part of fertile Egypt. The deluge of sand from the African deserts seems as fatal to the ancient world, as an irruption of the ocean, or the lava of a volcano, and it spreads with fatal certainty.

In general, the color of the sea is a bluish green, lighter on the coasts. In the Mediterranean it has a purple tint. In the Gulf of Guinea it is white. Near the Maldives it is black, and in other places has red and yellow tints. Its component parts, with very slight variations, are water, muriatic acid, sulphuric acid, mineral alkali, sulphate of lime, and magnesia. The freezing point is 28½ degrees.

Springs of fresh water arise in most seas, and some on our coasts. Near Cuba there are remarkable ones.

About thirty fresh water springs are discovered under the sea on the south of the Persian Gulf.

The Mediterranean makes a tide of only one or two feet.

That singular natural curiosity, the floating island, has emerged from the bottom of Derwentwater three times in about 30 years. It contains about an acre, and is quite stationary, and is entirely unconnected with the bottom and the shore; the soil is three yards thick. This floating island is not a solitary example. There is one at the Lake Gerdau, in Prussia, and another at Lake Kolk in Osnabruck.

The Caspian is 306 feet lower than the Baltic, and 345 lower than the Euxine.

The salt lakes Aral, the Caspian and the Baltic were once connected, and perhaps the Caspian with the Persian Gulf, forming Homer's circle of waters, and bounding the then known world. Desiccation seems to be a cause alway operating.

There can be no doubt but the Dutch provinces have wholly been formed by the mud of the Rhine, the Meuse, the Scheldt, and the Weser. So the Delta in Egypt, and perhaps all Lower Egypt has been deposited in like manner.

Lake Erie is rapidly filling with deposits.—The lake of Geneva is contracting, and the lake in Linconshire and Cambridgeshire have become dry in our days. The marine palace of Canute is now near Ramsey, twenty miles from the sea. Wales was anciently separated by an arm of the sea from the Bristol Channel to the estuary of the Dee and Mersey.

Springs are formed by the intervention of clay and sand strata, the former holding water and the latter permitting its free passage. So that in well-digging, there is no water till clay is reached, or clay is penetrated quite through.

Berzelius thinks that all hot springs pass near a centre of volcanic action, perhaps long extinguished; he also thinks that the hot springs of Carlsbad are as old as the rocky mountains. The river Tepel flows over their lid.

In Java, there are apertures in the grouud which throw up mud in spherical masses, and have changed the face of their vicinity.

The Sandwich islands are volcanic, and Owyhee itself is the cone of a volcanic higher than Mount Blanc.

There have been 29 destructive earthquakes in Calabria since 1602, occasioned, as is believed, by the materials of a pent-up volcano, the vapors of which pass through the soil in fissures cracks. and chasms. Animals buried under the ruins of the earthquake of 1793, were taken out alive in thirty or forty days and human beings survived after being buried twelve or sixteen.

In 1687, the sea retired from the shores of Peru, and returned in mountainous waves which destroyed everything on the coast; among other places Callao. In 1746, the same phenomenon again took place, and only 200 out of 400 inhabitants of Callao saved themselves,—19 vessels were sunk, and four, including a frigate, were carried over Callao into the country.

The Dead Sea or lake Asphaltites, stands on the ruins of Sodom and Gomorrah which were swallowed up by one of those supernatural convulsions which have often visited these countries. It is 65 miles long and 15 broad, strongly impregnated with minerals, though fish live in it. The specific gravity is 1,26, and it contains 57,4 water, 24,2 muriate of manesia, 10,6 of lime, and ¾ of soda.

Near Linken, in a cave, rock crystals were found which weighed 4, 5 and 800 cwt. The exudation which forms crystals is a very extensive mode of rock formation in all varieties.

The Hindoos have a record translated by Wilford, describing a great churning, as they call it of the sea, near the Hebrides, which lasted for months, and produced great changes. Perhaps it was a submarine volcano. The Irish chronicles record the separation of the Scilly islands, and there can be no doubt but the English channel was formed, and is still widening by the tides and floods which first opened it.

The cave of Staffa is made by the destruction of basaltic pillars by the sea. It is nearly 400 feet long, and 30 or 40 broad.

Bogs in Ireland are remains of fallen forests, covered with peat and loose soil, often forming hills. The quantity of rain in Ireland has added to the features of all countries. Moving bogs are slips of these hills carried to lower levels by accumulating water.

It seems, on the evidence of Seitzen, Gray, and Ehrenberg, that a sand hill on mount Sinai, called Nakato, by continual falling produces remarkable tones, like an Æolian harp, a murmuring noise like a distant cannonade, and greater at certain times.

Sand floods are frequent near sea shores where the wind carries the sand on the beach and thence over the land. In Africa, vast tracts of native sand are thus carried over adjoining districts and have gradually encroached so as to threaten all Egypt with their sterility, having, since the Christian era, narrowed the valley of the Nile as well as the northern states of Lybia, Cyrene, &c., while the sands of Arabia have encroached on central Asia. These sands float like waves before the wind, and at a distance resemble the surface of the sea, while tornadoes in them are fatal to strangers.

The general changes on the earth appear to arise from astronomical causes, the progression of the line of Apsides and the diminution of the obliquity; and local changes arise from water in rivers, rain and tides; from accumulated vegetation, from decomposition, earthquakes and volcanoes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Little Johnny's Prayer.

A poor widow called her four little children to her one morning, and said to them, "My dear children, this morning I can give you nothing to eat, there is no more bread, nor meat, nor even a potato in the house. I have worked for you as hard as ever I could, and I am now sick, and can do no more. You may pray to God, who has himself said, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver you."

Little Johnny, who was scarcely six years old, being very hungry, was much troubled by what his mother had said. As he was on his way to school, he knelt down and prayed aloud: "Oh God! my Heavenly Father, and my dear Savior through whom I may come to thee, hear me, a little child, pray. Our mother has no bread, nor meat, nor even a potato—do give us something, that we and our dear mother may not starve.—Help us, oh Lord! thou art rich and good, and can easily help us. And thou has promised to hear the cry of the poor and needy, so help and hear us for thy dear son's sake."

This was Johnny's simple prayer. After saying it he hurried on to school. When he returned home in the middle of the day, what was his surprise and joy to see a great loaf of bread, a large dish of meat, and a basket full of potatoes upon the table.

"Now, God be thanked," said he, "for he has heard my prayer. Dear mother, did not an angel bring all these to you through the window?"

"No," said the mother, "but God heard you when you were praying. A lady was near the place, where you could not see her, but she could both see and hear you, and so she sent all these things. She was the angel that God sent to help us in our need. And now, dear children, let us return thanks to God, and trust in him always."

The Midnight Journey.

A farmer in one of the Western countries of England, was met by a man whom he had formerly employed, and who again asked for work. The farmer, rather with a view to be relieved from his importunity than with any intention of assisting him, told him he would think of it, and send word to the place where the man told him he should be found. Time passed on and the farmer entirely forgot his promise. One night, however, he suddenly started from sleep, and awakening his wife, said he felt a strong impulse to set off immediately to the county town some 30 or 40 miles distant: but why he had not the least idea. He endeavored to shake off the impression and went to sleep again, but awoke the second time with such a strong conviction that he must start that instant, that he directly rose saddled his horse and set off. On his way he had to cross a ferry, which he could only do at one hour of the night, when the mail was carried over. He was almost certain he should be too late but nevertheless rode on, and when he came to the ferry, greatly to his surprise found that though the mail had passed over a short time previously, the ferryman was still waiting. On expressing his astonishment the boatman replied.

Oh, when I was on the other side I heard you shouting, and so I came back.

The farmer said he had not shouted; but the other repeated his assertion that he distinctly heard him call.

Having crossed over, the farmer pursued his journey, and arrived at the county town the next morning. But now that he had come there, he had not the slightest notion of any business to be transacted and so amused himself by sauntering about the place and at length entered the Court where the assizes were being held. The prisoner at the bar had just been, to all appearance, proved guilty by circumstantial evidence, of murder; and he was then asked if he had any witness to call in his behalf. He replied that he had no friends there, but looking round the Court amongst the spectators, he recognized the farmer, who almost immediately recognized in him the man who had applied to him for work, the farmer was instantly summoned to the witness box, and his evidence proved, beyond the possibility of doubt that the very hour the prisoner was accused of committing murder in one part of the county, he was applying for work in another.

The prisoner was of course acquitted, and the farmer found, that urged on by an uncontrolable impulse, which he could neither explain or account for, he had indeed taken his midnight journey to some purpose, notwithstanding it had appeared so unreasonable and causeless.

Destructive Fire.—The extensive steam saw mill and mahogony establishment of Messrs. T. & L. Thompson, No. 11 Ridge Road, Philadelphia, was discovered to be on fire a little after 11 o'clock on Friday night, which, together with the machinery, tools, material, &c., was entirely destroyed. The buildings were three in number, four stories high, filled throughout with work and valuable stock. The adjoining three story dwelling, owned and occupied by Mr. T. Thompson, was greatly injured in the rear by the falling of the wall. William and Joseph Allen, of 119 Spruce street, cabinet makers who occupied the third and fourth stories of the largest building, for manufacturing cabinet ware, have lost a large amount of work nearly finished, materials and fixtures. Two fine and extensive public schoolhouses, one fronting on Buttonwood street, and the other on Pleasant street, were burnt from their tops to the floors of the second stories.—Messrs. Thompson are insured for five or six thousand dollars, but they estimate their loss, nevertheless, at thirty or thirty-five thousand dollars. The Messrs. Allen were not insured and are supposed to be losers to the amount of three or four thousand dollars. The public schoolhouses and the furniture and fixtures were insured sufficiently, it is stated, to cover the loss, which it is thought will not be less than six or eight thousand dollars.

Damage by Railroad.—A Mr. Temple has got a verdict for $3,200 against the Fall River (Mass.) Railroad Company, as compenstion for injuries sustained by a collision of trains in February, 1847. He claimed $15,000.

A miser grows rich by seeming poor; an extravagant man grows poor by seeming rich.

A Dramatic Sketch.

Scene, a parlor, with gas lights burning, and coal fire diffusing an agreeable warmth.

Husband—(sitting at a centre table, with papers before him, and addressing his wife.)—My dear, I have just been reckoning the expenses of our family for the last year, and I find them to be considerably greater than my income justifies. Cast your eye over this schedule, and you will be surprised to see how much we have expended and be convinced of the necessity for retrenchment. Four thousand dollars per annum is the estimated expenditure—thus, house rent, $800; carriage hire, $200; tailor's and milliner's bill, $300; articles bought at fancy stores, $300; music teacher and concerts, $150; parties given, $200; three servants' wages, $300;—but I need not proceed, you can examine the remaining items yourself. Now, the question is, how shall we retrench? It is true, I have invested $5,000 this year, but unless I can do better than this, I can scarcely hope to acquire that competency I have so anxiously desired, & upon which I can retire from the cares of business.

Wife.—I am as ready as you can be to retrench, if it be possible; but you know, my dear, that it is necessary to keep up appearances. Our station in society demands this, as well as our daughters, who, you know, are growing up, and whose prospects depend on our keeping a genteel establishment. Still, I think, we have been rather too lavish, not in our necessary expenses, but in our charities. You recollect you gave to the Missionary Society $20, to the Tract Society $20, to the Deaf and Dumb, Blind and Orphan Institutions, $25 each, and I have been in the habit of paying a dollar a year, to—let me see—seven different societies: and then too, you recollect, our pew rent is $25 a year, and, I think, besides this we have given at least $30 during the past year to other charities. Now, all these things count up, and I really think we are not called on to do so much. There is Mr. A. and Mr. B. and Mr. C. that are worth five times as much as we are, and I never hear of them contributing to such objects.

Husband—(musing.)—Well, it does appear to me that we have been a little too liberal in these matters, and—

(Here a knock is heard at the door, and a gentleman is ushered in, in whose countenance, benignity and severity are strangely mingled.)

Conscience.—I hope I do not intrude, but overhearing your conversation, I could not forbear to venture an opinion on the subject of it. You find your expenditures have been too lavish, and wish to curtail them?

Husband and Wife.—Exactly so.

Con.—And you wish to begin by entrenching your charities?

Husband and Wife.—That appears to be the most natural way of accomplishing our object.

Conscience.—Suppose you begin with your luxuries and superfluities. God's providence has bestowed on you all you possess, and do you owe him no acknowledgment for this? If you withhold benevolence from God's poorer creatures, can you expect he will continue his benevolence to you? Does he not hold you in his hand, and can he not, in a moment, blast your prospects, and bring you and your children into a situation to be recipients of charity? If you show no mercy, can you expect mercy? Is there not an account to be given of your stewardship? Would not a very trifling retrenchment in your household expenses enable you to treble your charities, and in doing this, would you not feel better, and have a surer prospect that your money would prove a blessing to you, and not prove a curse to your children?

Husband and Wife—(excited.)—This, sir, is a very unwarrantable and impudent intrusion upon our private matters.

Con.—(retiring.)—I have nothing more to say at present, but remember! I will visit you hereafter, when you will be compelled to listen to more unpalatable truths.—Presbyterian.

Shaker Barn at Hancock, Massachusetts.

The Society of the United Brethren, or "Shakers," at Hancock, Mass., have a large circular stone barn, which is justly regarded as a curiosity. In company with Wm. Bacon, Esq., of Richmond, we lately made a call at the Hancock village, and took a short look at his barn. It was built in 1826, is 300 feet in circumference, and 90 feet diameter on the inside. The walls are of stone 58 feet in height. The entrance for loads is on the second story. The bay is in the centre the teams on entering pass along an avenue between the bay and the wall—the loads are discharged, and the teams go out at the same place they went in. Twenty-five loads or wagons can be taken in at one time. The bay will hold 400 tons of hay. The stalls for cattle and horses are on the girt floor, & are arranged in a circle corresponding to the shape of the building. The animals stand with their heads towards the centre of the barn, and are handily fed from the bay. There are stalls for 75 head of cattle. The barn is substantial and convenient, but not as convenient, we think as the Shaker barn at New Lebanon, described in the Cultivator for 1846, p. 305.—Abbany Cultitor.

Cleanliness Extraordinary.—The village of Brook, near Amsterdam, in Holland, is said to present the most remarkable example of uniform neatness, and punctilious attention to cleanliness that the world can produce. It is chiefly inhabited by wealthy farmers, who live in affiuence upon the income of their lands. Wagons and loaded carriages are not allowed to pass through the street, the pavement of which is kept in the best possible order; while the foot-walk, which is as clean as scrubbing brushes can well make it, is sanded and marked out into fanciful and ornamental figures. The doors and porches are burnished, and the trunks of the trees which grow before them, are polished by frequent scrubbing. To gain admittance at the front door is a favor not to be expected, except by persons of some consequence; and if the shoes of a visitor happen to be a little soiled, a pair of slippers is presented to him at the door, which he is to use as a substitute during his stay.

Fire and Loss of Life.—The Washington Examiner brings us an account of an awful accident which occurred in that county last Thursday night. The house for many years owned and occupied by an old man named Charles Grier, situated in South Srabane township, about four miles north of the Borough, was burned to the ground, and with it were consumed the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Grier.—Pitts Commercial Journal.

New Telegraph Line.—It is proposed to build a line from Baltimore, via the B. & O. R. Road and the National Road, to Wheeling. The Messrs. Townsend have the contract for its construction. The right of way has been granted by the Rail Road Company.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

Dr. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness, and sluggisnness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances, corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS —The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for$5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

☞ We have prepared this volume at great expense: the type large, clear and handsome; paper smooth and white; binding strong and substantial; engravings neat and appropriate. This work is decidedly the cheapest and most popular ever issued from the American press; and, from the orders already received for it, we are satisfied it is destined to have an immense sale throughout our vast extended country. From peculiar circumstances we are able to offer this book extremely low to book-pedlars, postmasters, and others, who may feel disposed to act as agents.

☞ The principles of morality and of a well-regulated FREEDOM are introduced with sufficient frequency throughout its pages; the editor exercising a careful discrimination, while honestly desirous of enlarging its circumference, not to admit within the circle the elements of licentiousness, to which we are liable in the present state of society. Let every parent remember it is to an EDUCATION wisely and liberally provided for our people, America owes her proud superiority over other nations. This will preserve a love of freedom, and detestation of oppression, pure and unadulterated, in the young and rising generation.

☞ As the publisher is desirous of giving this useful Family Work a very extensive circulation, he 'offers the most liberal inducements to Agents,' and is satisfied that any man of good address can make from FIVE to TEN DOLLARS A DAY from the sale of it. LINES,

On the Death of the late Rev. John Fordyce.

'Twas on a bright and blissful morn,
As nature round her orb was borne,
And smiled in passing by;
An aged form beside me lay,
And as I gazed, I heard him say,
"I'm not afraid to die."

"A crisis hath arrived," he saith,
"To try the virtue of my faith,
The source of my supply;
And I'm content to meet my fate,
To enter on a new estate,
I'm not afraid to die."

There seemed no strange confusion wild,
As he neared the verge he calmly smiled,
Hope beaming in his eye;
His countenance was quite serene,
As much composed as ever seen,
He's not afraid to die.

The secret of his peaceful end,
Is that he had secured a friend,
Who lives above the sky;
While life was ebbing out apace,
This friend supplied him with the grace,
That chased the fear to die.

He'd sought the Lord in prime of youth,
And proved he was a God of truth,
On him he did rely;
And after many anxious cares,
Serving the church some fifty years,
He's thus prepared to die.

There is a sweet consoling thought,
That hovers round the secret spot,
Where his lone ashes lie;
O may the example he has given,
Prompt us to seek a home in heaven,
Then we'll rejoice to die.

The Politics of Christianity.

NO. VII.

HANDS OFF. [An Abstract.]

The reasoning in this Essay, is, we rejoice to know, inapplicable to our country. It will, however, be interesting to see how the author deals with state-religion.

That there should be any necessity at this time of day, for discussing the question, whether the religion of their subjects properly falls under the care of civil governments, proves how much is yet to be learnt as to what religion really is, & as to the kind of power which magistracy can weild. [We will copy only the following sprightly illustration.]

In a little village, no matter how named, or where situated, a young man of active habits and athletic limbs, practised, moreover, in the pugilistic art, had by dint of many fights, established himself as the little lord of its few inhabitants. Out of his unquestionable superiority was ultimately evolved a considerable moral power. The rural Hercules, could settle disputes without any appeal to the fist, his authority carrying with it the conviction that there was force enough at the back of it, if needed, to carry into effect its own decisions. The parish minister happened to be most scantily paid by the half-civilized few who frequented his church. A friendship, however, sprung up between himself and the broad-shouldered youth, from which the latter received much spiritual advantage. The question occurred to him, whether, in return for this, he could not confer some benefit on the minister. He reasoned to this effect: "My stalwart limbs, my early training, and the championship which by their means I have secured, are talents entrusted to me to be employed to the glory of my Maker. The minister is in want, & I cannot doubt that the supply of his wants would be a thing in accordance with the divine will.—I cannot supply them myself, but I can make my neighbors do it. They know I can make good my word. I have but to order the thing to be done, and to double my fist in token of my earnestness, and no one will dare to say, Nay." Now what we ask, is, whether this young pugilist is bound by a regard to "God's glory," to scare the inhabitants of the village into a better support of their spiritual instructor—and if it be replied,—"Why, no, because God's glory cannot be promoted by unlawful means"—we rejoin, "Exactly so! Prove to us, therefore, that the use of the sword by the civil magistrate in aid of Christian truth is legitimate—and when you have done this, apply your conclusion as you list. But dont urge a solemn truism with a view to cover a marked fallacy."

Civil government is under obligation to protect all its subjects in maintaining such relationship to their Creator as their own conduct may dictate—a relationship prior to any into which we enter with "the powers that be." But the support of religious institutions is no part of its object—much less the control of religious profession. Christianity, like her Author, when he had risen from the tomb, mildly declines the proffered embrace of a merely secular power—and says, with much solemnity, to the too forward and ignorant advances of magisterial authority, "Touch me not! My kingdom is not of this world—for if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants FIGHT."

Immutability of the word of God.

A Sketch, By "Anon."

"The Word of our God shall stand forever.." Isaiah 40: 6. This is a sublime declaration, elevating the faith, and cheering the heart of the pious Christian; but one which prostrates and overwhelms the false hope of the ungodly. This word, this blessed word—THE BIBLE—the "Book of books," the mirror of God, in which are reflected his divine perfections, his unbounded love.

"Hast thou ever heard
Of such a book? The Author, God himself,
The subject God and man, salvation, life,
And death—eternal life—eternal death!—
Dread words! whose meaning has no end, no bounds.
Most wondrous book! bright candle of the Lord!
That of eternity! the only star
By which the bark of man could navigate
The sea of life, and gain the coast of bliss securely:
The only star, which throws a ray of heaven's
Own light to the hills of God and points the Sinner's eye."

The lamp which God has hung in the moral heavens, to illuminate the dark and palpable gloom of a sinful world,—to throw its pure rays across the path that leads from earth to Mount Zion. Empires have passed away, kingdoms have fallen into ruins, and proud monuments of art, erected to record the achievements of kings and conquerors, have mouldered by the influence of recorded centuries; but the word of God has triumphed amid the ruins of time, and still shines with increasing lustre. The blue vaulted canopy, with its suns, moons, and stars; the verdant and beauteous earth, with its oceans, lakes, rivers, and rills—with its mountains and valleys, trees and flowers, and all the busy hum of human existence;—shall pass away; but "the Word of our God shall stand forever!"—no limitation to its eternal principles—no period to its duration. Its principles directed the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs; it is the rule of our conduct, and of millions yet unborn, and will be the grand test of acquittal or condemnation at the Judgment Day. It has passed through a fiery ordeal, and yet has triumphed gloriously over all its enemies. Denounced by infidelity—torn, burnt, suppressed by Romanish superstition, hid in the gloomy darkness of monkish cells, and destroyed by the hand of the common hangman;—yet has it come out of the fire like gold tried in the furnace, luminous and bright, while its enemies, alas! recline in graves of infamy, their memory unrevered, and their efforts contemned and generally forgotten: Truth is immortal: the bible is truth—the bible is immortal! It may be suppressed, but never can be annihilated! Its divine fires, far more enduring and brilliant than vestal flame, shall burn forever.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again—
The immortal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshippers!"

Well may the pious poet exclaim—

"Read and revere the sacred page—
A page where triumphs immortality;—
A page which not the whole creation can produce,
Which not the conflagration shall destroy:
In nature's ruins not one letter lost."
The word of God shall stand forever,

1. In its doctrines.—However changeable the mind of man is; however great the revolutions in the opinions of society—the great doctrines of Christianity are sure and abiding. There are many individuals in the world that would so change or modify the truths of God, as to render them a partial, if not a complete, nullity. The doctrines of the atonement, New Birth, Sanctification, the Judgment, are so transformed by many modern divines, that it would be impossible for their divine Author to recognize them as the heavenly originals: but yet we are assured that no interpretation of man, can fully obliterate, these prominent doctrines, these great landmarks, these fundamental truths of the Christian system. They shall stand as beacon lights, until their great designs shall have been accomplished.

2. In its requirements.—In the present age there is a great disposition manifested to throw off all religious responsibility—to avoid the requirements of Christianity. However desirous the speculative may be to avoid the truths and the strictness of the Christian doctrines and requirements, there is but one door to the kingdom of Heaven, Jesus Christ; and but one medium of access, repentance and faith in his name. Many, sacriligiously, would scale the walls of the imperial city, avoid the true way and the "one door," by which entrance alone can be gained. It is a lamentable fact, that thousands attempt to get to heaven, by every other mode but the correct one. But, as already remarked, there is but one way, one Jacob's ladder reaching from earth to heaven. The declarations are: "I am the way;" "no man cometh unto the Father but by me;" "ye must be born again." How emphatic and decisive! If it were possible, we might build one scaffolding to the very heavens, but when we attempted to scale the walls of the celestial city, we should be inevitably hurled down to hell. In Christ alone we have salvation: out of him eternal death.

3. In its precepts.—All the threatenings recorded in the Bible against the character of sinners, will be unavoidably inflicted. It is vanity to presume on the merciful interposition of God, while the character remains unchanged. God has emphatically declared, and his word shall stand forever, that though the wicked join hand in hand they shall not go unpunished: there is no peace to the wicked: that the wicked are like the troubled sea; and while they remain thus, their souls will be forever lashed with the wild fury of the tempest that rages within. Not only will this punishment be inflicted here, but beyond the confines of this world; for says the Redeemer, "if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins, and where I am ye cannot come." The penalty attached to the violation of God's law, is inflicted upon individuals possessing a certain character, the wicked; & dying in the possession of that character, and as there is no moral change after death, it must be forever retained; the consequence of which will be eternal punishment, from the presence of God, and the glory of his power. There is no tortuous reasoning can prove it otherwise. "Because there is wrath, beware! lest he take thee away with a stroke and a great ransom cannot redeem thee."

4. In its promises.—And O what joy animates the bosom of the Christian, when he reflects that all the gracious promises of God will assuredly be fulfilled, he having both the will and ability to carry out all the designs of his word for the welfare, happiness, and protection of his people. Does the mourner bow with a bleeding heart at the footstool of the cross, and implore pardon at the hand of an offended and insulted God; the voice of mercy falls upon his sorrowful spirit, like the sweet tones of heavenly music, saying, "He that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out," "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Are the trials of life severe, and is the poor Christian ready to sink beneath a load of affliction?—"My grace is sufficient for thee;" "cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he will sustain thee." Is he called to pass through the dark valley of death? "I would not live always;" for "though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." For every situation in life, in riches, in poverty, in trials and temptations and persecutions, in widowhood and orphanage, there is some bright promise to cheer the heart; as well as for the resurrection morn, the judgment day, and eternal life.

The existence of man is not like that of the brute, nor sun, moon, or stars that shall be blown out, and shine no more.

It is not thus, it cannot be,
That one so glorious endowed,
With thoughts that reach eternity,
Should shine and vanish as a cloud.

Man is immortal; and though he goes down to the grave, yet shall he spring up again in the resurrection morn, to enjoy another and sublimer state of existence. "The gorgeous palaces, the solemn temples, the great globe itself, yea all which it inherits, shall dissolve, and, like the careless fabric of a vision, leave not a wreck behind; but man shall flourish in immortal youth, unhurt amid the war of elements, the wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds." As the flowers of the field lift their beautiful heads when the voice of spring awakes the beauties and harmonies of creation; so shall the righteous arise from the slumber of the tomb, when the voice of God shall break the long wintery silence of the grave. There is a spring time for the children of God, as well as for the works of nature.—How delightful when the first breathings of spring are felt. The fetters of the streams are broken; and, released from their icy captivity, they run gladly murmuring onward to the deep blue ocean: the fields are carpeted with rich and beautiful verdure: the woodlands are arrayed in their rich livery of green foliage; the birds sing cheerily in the sweet scented groves, carroling their hymns of praise to the Great Creator: and the flowers lifting their modest and beautiful heads, display their many tinted hues; while the zephyrs kiss their rich fragrance, and fill the air with sweet perfume. The spring time of the righteous is the resurrection morn. The long, dark, wintery silence of the tomb shall be broken by the power of God. The voice of Him shall be heard who stood by the grave of the beloved Lazarus, and in the majesty of Godhead exclaimed—"Lazarus, come forth!" and he that was dead arose to life and gratitude:—that voice shall be heard throughout all the vaulted halls of the dead, and, at its trumpet sound, they shall arise and go to judgment. With loud hallelujahs shall the saints of God arise first, and fill the wide heaven with the praises of Him who hath redeemed them from the power of the grave.

With regard to a future state of happiness it is said "In my Father's house are many mansions," "to him that overcometh I will grant to sit down with me on my throne," "be thou faithful until death, and I will give thee a crown of life." There has been much needless speculation with regard to heaven, its location, and the employment of its bright inhabitants. It is sufficient for us to know that it is the abode of unsullied bliss, and that those who get there, will be engaged in the most sublime and rational employment. It is the dwelling place of the Most High—the residence of God; and if this beautiful world is the workmanship of his hands; how still more lovely, yea glorious, must be his divine residence, the abode of cherubim, seraphim, archangel, and angel. There we shall gaze on the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Reformers, and Martyrs. There many of us have endeared and cherished ones, with whom we shall wander over the perennial fields, and drink at the ever gushing fountain of Eternal bliss:—

"O! to think of meeting there,
The friends whose graves received our tears;
The child beloved, fond ones adored,
To our widowed arms restored;
And all the joys which death did sever
Given to us again forever!"

This earth was too cold a climate for plants of much heavenly growth; therefore they have been transplanted to a more congenial clime, where they now unfold their expanding loveliness to the gaze of angels and the admiration of the saints! Heaven may be compared to an extensive garden into which God, from the earliest ages of the world has been transplanting, from the barren wastes of earth, the most choice and beautiful flowers, to bloom forever in loveliness and beauty in that happy and congenial climate.

Heaven is a place, also, where sorrow and death are never known. They rest from their labors. Well might the Psalmist exclaim, "O that I had the wings of a dove; then would I flee away and be at rest." How beautiful has Moore described it:—

"It is all holy and serene,
The land of glory and repose,
And there to dim the radiant scene,
The tear of sorrow never flows."

Here the eyes of the Christian overflow with tears, his heart is oppressed with anguish: "Thy waves and thy billows have gone over me," says the Psalmist. Here we are separated by winds and storms; but,

"There all the ship's company meet,
Who sailed with their Savior beneath;
And shouting, each other they greet,
And triumphed o'er sorrow and death.
The voyage of life's at an end,
The mortal affliction is past;
The age which in heaven they spend,
Forever and ever shall last!"

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the Word of our God shall stand forever!"

Narrative.

I'LL TRY.

BY J. P. DURBIN, D. D.

As the sun rose, on one of those sweet mornings in October which render the early autumn so delightful on the southern shore of the beautiful Ohio, I took my leave of the home of my youth, and departed for the village of ———, in the state of ———. I had been appointed by the ——— Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, to preach the Gospel to the inhabitants of that little town. On the evening of the third day I arrived at the place, and found a home in a very plain, but truly pious family. After the lapse of a few weeks, an unpretending, but agreeable man called on me, and said: "I have been raised a Friend; and you know Friends do not pay for the ministry. But my wife and only child are members of your church, and I go with them to the public meetings, as I have not much preference and no bigotry. Your society is weak, and as I do not give money for the gospel, perhaps it might be some relief to the church for me to afford you a home in my house, which I will gladly do, if it pleases you to accept it." I replied I would answer in a few days.

Upon inquiry, I found he was the principal merchant in the village, much respected by the people, and that his wife was one of the excellent of the earth. His daughter was about twelve years of age, a sweet, meek child, and much given to her books and her devotions. I concluded to accept this invitation, and sent him word accordingly. On Monday following I removed to my new abode, which I found to be quiet and neat, and the family very agreeable. The mother, daughter, and myself, worshipped together morning and evening; but the father made a good apology by being at the store. Yet, on suitable occasions, he manifested his respect for religion; and his public conduct, as it appeared to me, was irreproachable.

Towards the middle of December he was engaged in filling his ice-house, which stood in the yard in the rear of his dwelling. He was in the sunken chamber, directing the storing away of the ice, which a man slid down on a long broad plank. A piece of ice struck him on the foot, and he swore violently and profanely at the man above. As he uttered these imprecations, I looked in and heard him, without him seeing me. If I had witnessed a flash of lightning from a clear sky, I could not have been more astounded. I had never dreamed that he ever uttered an improper word. I felt confounded and grieved: but passed on, without saying a word. It was Saturday afternoon. After tea, as his custom, he came up to my room, to spend an hour in conversation. The first proper occasion that afforded, I said, "Mr. ———, did I not hear you swear to-day?" "Perhaps you did," he replied, "for I often swear, and do not know it; it is a bad habit I have fallen into, and I should be glad to quit it." "Suppose you try," said I. After pausing a moment in reflection, he said, "Well I will." "But," I replied, "you will not succeed unless you pray for strength: the habit is too strong for you to break without divine aid." "Why," said he, smiling somewhat quisically, "I never prayed in my life but once; if that might be called prayer when I kneeled down on one knee, when parson W. visited my family, and requested permission to pray with us. I am sure I cannot pray." "Well," said I, "then I am sure you cannot quit swearing." At this he seemed surprised, and a little grieved; but after a moment's hurried reflection, he said, "if you will not tell anybody, I will try and pray, and quit swearing too; and I will come up and tell you next Saturday evening." "Very well," said I.

Next Saturday evening, after tea, he came to my room, and seated himself in silence, apparently waiting for me to speak to him.—But I determined that he should open the subject, which he did by raising his eyes to mine, and with a lightly disturbed smile, saying, "Well, I told you I could not pray, I knelt down twice, and could not utter a word, my tongue was stiff, and my mind fainted and wavered. I had no strength, or heart to pray.—Besides," said he, "I have sworn twice since last Saturday; once when a man forced a barrel on my hand, and almost broke my finger, as you see," (holding up the wounded limb.) "Well," said I, Mr. ———, what must be the fearful condition of the man who cannot pray to his heavenly Father!" At this he seemed sensibly moved; and, after some reflection, replied, "I'll try once more to pray, if you will not tell any one." I smiled encouragingly, consented, and he left my room.

On the following Saturday evening he came to me, sat down, and seemed somewhat embarrassed. At length he said, "I told I could not pray—I cannot." But the utterance of these words gave him evident distress, and afforded me an occasion to press upon him his utter spiritual destitution, and to explain to him his great need of divine aid, which I insisted he could obtain only by prayer.—"Then said he with deep emotion, "I'll try again," and left the room.

On the following Saturday evening he sat down by me and said, "I have ceased to swear."

"Then," I replied, "you have learned to pray." "A little," said he, and the tears came into his eyes; "but, O! how little! how feeble are my prayers! but one thing comes of them: I begin to feel I am a sinner, and I must be pardoned."

"Then," said I, "you must pray always and not faint."—Putting his hands firmly together, and fixing his eyes intently on the fire, he said, I'll try again," and departed.

The following Saturday evening I heard him approaching with a lighter and quicker step, and entering, he said, with eagerness, and yet with a tinge of sorrow, "I have been praying; yes, I tried, and tears came to my relief, and words followed tears, and I can pray." But I have no answer to prayers; no peace." "Well," said I, "you should not expect an answer until you have asked faithfully and penitently. Have you prayed in faith, nothing doubting?" "O!" said he, "all I endeavored to do was, to pray.—Is not this enough?" "No," I replied; you must "believe" as well as pray." Upon hearing this, I found he fell into the same desponding tone of feeling as when I spoke to him of prayer; but I rallied him by saying, "TRY TO BELIEVE; prayer will give you confidence, and confidence will lead to faith." A new light seemed to break in upon him, and he exclaimed, I'LL TRY." I let him depart to make the experiment another week.

At the close of the next week, he came to me and said, "I do believe, but only for a minute at a time, and then doubts obtrude; but I'll try to overcome these, God being my helper." I now perceived that he was not far from the kingdom of heaven, and exhorted him to lay hold on the hope set before him. "O!" said he, I'll try," and rose to depart. "No no," said I, "do not go: I'll help you now;" and we kneeled down to pray. I need not tell the reader the conclusion. In less than three months from the the time I heard him swear in the ice-house he was a living member of the Church of God. Oftentimes afterwards I heard him say, "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." And when any one would complain that he could not pray, could not believe, could not become religious, he would exclaim, "O, TRY! From the depth of the ice-house, I began by TRYING, in the feeblest manner possible, and lo! I have proved that the 'bruised reed he will not break—the smoking flax he will not quench, until he sendeth forth judgement unto victory.'" Reader, say to thyself—if but in the lisping accents of helpless infancy—"I'LL TRY," and God will help you.

THE LAST KISS.

I was about five years old when my mother died, but her image is as fresh in my mind, now that many years have elapsed, as it was at the time of her death. I remember her as a pale, gentle being, with a sweet smile, and a voice soft and cheerful when she praised me; and when I erred—for I was a wild, thoughtless child—there was a trembling mildness about it, that always went to my little heart. Methinks I can now see her large blue eyes, moist with sorrow, because of my childish waywardness, and hear her repeat, "My child, how can you grieve me so."

She had for a long time been pale and feeble, and sometimes there would come a bright spot on her cheek, which made her look so lovely, I thought she must be well. But then she spoke of dying, and pressed me to her bosom, and told me to be good when she was gone, and to love my father a great deal, for he would have no one else to love.

I recollect she was ill all day, and my little hobby-horse and whip were laid aside, and I tried to be very quiet. I did not see her for the whole day, and it seemed very long. At night, they told me my mother was too sick to kiss me, as she always used to do, before I went to bed, and I must go without it. But I could not, I stole into the room, and laying my lips close to hers, whispered,—

"Mother, dear mother, won't you kiss me?" Her lips were very cold, and when she put her hand upon my cheek, and laid my hand in her bosom, I felt a cold shuddering pass through me.

My father carried me from the room; but he could not speak. After they put me in bed, I lay a long while, thinking; I feared my mother would indeed die, for her cheek felt as cold as my little sister's did, when she died, and they carried her sweet little body away where I never saw it again. But I soon fell to sleep as children will.

In the morning I rushed to my mother's room with a strange dread of evil to come upon me.—It was just as I feared. There was the white linen over the straight, cold bed. I tore it aside.

There was a hard cheek, the closed eye, the stony brow. But, thank God, my mother's dear, dear smile was there also, or my heat would have been broken.

In an instant, all the little faults, for which she had so often reproved me, rushed upon my mind. I longed to tell her how good I would always be, if she would but stay with me.

I longed to tell her how, in all time to come, her words would be law to me. I would be all she had prayed me to be.

I was a passionate head-strong boy: but never did this frame of temper come upon me, but I seemed to see her mild, tearful eyes fall upon me just as she used to look in life; and when I strove for the mastery, I felt her smile sink into my heart, and I was happy.

My whole character underwent a change, even from the moment of her death. Her spirit was forever with me, to aid the good and root out the evil that was in me. I felt it would greive her gentle spirit to see me err and I could not do so. I was the child of her affection; I knew she had prayed and wept over me, and even on the threshold of the grave, her anxiety for my fate had caused her spirit to linger, that she might pray once more for me.

I never forgot my mother's last kiss. It was with me in sorrow; it was with me in joy; it was with me in moments of evil, like a perpetual good.

The above is a part of the letter of an old man, who had seen his children about him, and who is a cheerful man, with his gray hairs full of reverence.

Miscellaneous.

From the American Messenger.

A Cure for Melancholy

In the fall of 1825 I went, during vacation in the seminary, to spend a few weeks with a friend. I found in his mansion, elegance, hospitality, and piety. The grounds were large, and the family was agreeable far beyond what is common. I could ride, I could hunt, I could read. For a few days I greatly enjoyed the change: my health needed recruiting, and I felt better. But soon I began to feel uneasy. I lacked full employment. I was not sure that I could give a good account of my mode of spending time. I began to feel guilty. Killing little birds for amusement seemed to me of doubtful propriety. I cared not to ride without an object. In short, I became melancholy.

At this time, I heard of a box of Bibles in the neighborhood, for distribution among the poor.—I determined to walk and distribute them. I went from house to house, meeting with various kinds of reception, but all of them civil, & most of them kind. At length, I came to a very plain house, and was welcomed by a plain woman at the door. I entered, and saw seated around the fire five of her children, not one of whom could walk, or utter an articulate sound. As I entered they raised a hideous noise, but the mother said it expressed pleasure at seeing me. I have never even in a hospital, seen a sight more painful.—Besides these five, she had a son of sound mind, but deformed in his lower limbs. He made shoes. She had also a daughter, well-grown, and strong, but of a very feeble mind and violent temper, as I was told.

The mother was a widow. I soon introduced the subject of religion, which I found to be welcome. The bible was there. It was well read, concernig the goodness of God. I inquired of her difficulties. She admitted them, but told me how the Lord delivered her, and supplied her wants. I found it good to be there. I prayed with the family, spoke a few words of encouragement, & bade them good-bye. I have never since seen a sight so appalling, and yet I have never seen a mother apparently more contented and thankful.

I left the house rebuked for my melancholy, which had in it, no doubt, much ingratitude. I could not but admire the power of divine grace. I did not ask the woman to what church she belonged, nor do I know to this day. I presume she belonged to one invisible company of faithful men, composed of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ. Soon after I left the house, I sought opportunity for prayer. My melancholy left me, and that poor woman's behavior and conversation were the best sermon I ever heard; and if I have ever been useful since, it was owing not a little to that day's lesson. I then found out what I have since proved true, that hearty, self-denying labor to do good, especially among the poor and afflicted, is a first rate cure for melancholy. Reader, try it. W.

CHOIR SINGING—CONTINUED.

Mr. Editor,—While the subject is still a matter of thought amongst the people, I desire to present a few extracts from the views of good men, of other parts of the country; and, of other times. Will you please publish the following extracts from the Christian Intelligencer, the organ of the reformed Dutch Church. I do not suppose that every fact stated in them will find a parallel in this vicinity, but they shew the tendency to the evils I have complained of; and are food for reflection.

A PRESBYTERIAN.

Putnam, June 8, 1848.

"The Church, the Church is to yield Hosannah in the highest strains. "O come, let us sing to the Lord; let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation." "That I may publish," says David, "with the voice of thanksgiving, I went to the house of God with the voice of joy. sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of his," &c.—"Sing unto the Lord with the voice of a Psalm." "Teaching and admonishing one another in Psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs; singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord." With this warrant in his hand, every worshipper enters the house of God. It is his privilege, and he may claim, in the name of the Lord, to have this part of the service so conducted, that with a reasonable share of attention and a moderate degree of proficiency he may be able to join in it. Yet what is the state of the case?—Instrumental music, by thundering demonstrations, seeks to drown the voice of praise; articulation cannot be distinguished and have its effect in aiding, by the conceptions it creates, our affections. There is an evasion of the professed willingness to unite the voices of the congregation in the service by the rapid succession of new tunes, by the difficulty of their execution, and by the alterations made in old ones. There is a decrial of congregational singing, so that the less skilful feel that they are unwelcome, and instead of the "free spirit," they feel when they sing as though they were holding on to a disputed thing."

"I aver," proceeds the writer, "without the fear of contradiction, that in very many cases the organ loft, or choir seats, are the centres of inattention, whispering and levity, if they are to be found at all within the walls of that particular congregation. The stress is laid on musical performance, & effective execution is the point aimed at. Gross abuses of the sanctity of that part of the service exist also in the person of the leader or hired performer. Will any person deny that there are persons who get their living by public singing, mere ministers to public amusement, who are the recognised leaders in the praises of the blood-bought Church of Jesus Christ? that those whom the theatres applaud in the week, the assembly of saints must succumb to on the Sabbath, and be insulted by this elevation of the unholy and the unclean—lepers conducting "the priests unto God," when they bring their spiritual sacrifices? If any man deny it over his name, after examination and inquiry, and on his responsibility, I will prove it. On the authority of a responsible name, I also aver, that there is a house of worship of the "straightest sect," if the description can be applied to the crookedness of High Church exclusiveness, the leader of whose "music" told my informant that he did not know what remedy to adopt for keeping his "choir" in order—being hired male singers in part; that after the opening service and during the longest interval, they would go out to a neighboring porter-house or "saloon," and take "refreshments," and then come back, sometimes hardly even within the nick of time, to finish their "accomplishment of the service of the sanctuary!"

"Preachers complain of jar and annoyance, of disqualification for preaching with warm, concentrated feeling and thought, until, by an effort, the effects of the prevailing incongruities in this part of the service are overcome. And that there are complaints of aged and sober-minded communicants, that that part of service is so conducted, that its benefits are lost to them. Even officers of churches have often given up the effort to praise God vocally in the sanctuary, and closed the book with an emphasis of manner and look, whose meaning could not be mistaken."

"Organs and choirs have lately become substitutes, & are no longer aids. There is a tendency in the system which is betrayed in general and well nigh uniform results. Whatever it may be worth in view of theoretical reasoning, practically it will not stand the test. There are many arguments in favor of dramatic exhibitions which we cannot answer. We allow the value of history; we say, Providence is God in motion: well, here are only scenic representations of transactions in which vice is, in the issue, punished, & virtue rewarded, and the inference is, 'The way of transgressors is hard!' Very plausible; & yet, dear innocents, their actual fruits are evil, only evil, and every theatre has a door to 'the pit' in more senses than one. So here there is an inherent tendency to arrest singing in the congregation, and finally supersede it. It leads to undue and well nigh entire stress on the performance, and has a body of evils in its train which the friends of the system ought to teach us how to sever from it, before they complain of resistance to its extension or continuance."

"It is a day of the revival of formalism, of an external Church,' with its rituals, architecture, festivals, pictures, and music too, and the associations as well as tendencies of the system we have commented upon are well worth pondering. We have lately heard pastors sigh in recollection of 'months past,' and express a hearty desire that they had only the privilege of comparing the two systems by a permission to place the clerk before the pulpit again, though it was only for a month's trial of the good old way."

"As a part of public worship it (singing psalms) is well nigh abolished, and it seems to approach the character of an interlude to relieve the weariness occasioned by hearing read a chapter of more than twenty verses, or joining in a prayer exceeding ten minutes, or listening to a sermon over half an hour. Church vies with church in offering chapels of ease, and bills of fare, until somehow a sentiment seems generated, that without a touch of the Gothic, or the latest improvements, it is questionable whether it be a church, and is entitled to the right hand of fellowship.—We should at least judge that there was a prevailing apprehension of leprosy, or something like it, somehow in old churches, from comparing two facts: first, that the ministers find it well nigh impossible to retain their congregations in even plain and old-fashioned places of worship; and, secondly, that sofa-seats, carpets, a new organ, 'modernizing,' and good paint, have marvellously seductive powers, nay, well nigh moral influence, and keep them, for the time being, at least, steadfast and immovable."

"As progress is the order of the day, there is a something even beyond all this, viz: quartette singing. This is, beyond the choir, a 'labor-saving scheme'—the very homœopathy of public praise—i. e., four persons perform the work of all. And in one church the warblers are in a place appropriated to them, as distinct and snug as a swallow's nest stuck up against the side of a wall: and while they 'do wondrously,' the worshippers, like Manoah and his wife, 'look on!"

Br. Bassett:

Again it becomes my painful duty to record more of Death's doings among us. Since my last notice of the kind, death has made considerable havoc in our peaceful fold. There has been an unusual amount of sickness, and many more deaths have occurred in our congregation, than ordinary. Indeed, during the past winter and spring, my pastoral labors have been chiefly devoted to the sick and afflicted. Insomuch, that at the time we would have held a regular protracted meeting, (we made two or three attempts, but closed before much good was accomplished, in consequence of untoward circumstances,) such was the demand for pastoral visitation, that our President remarked, that it appeared as if Providence had given me "a higher commission" for the time, than even the arduous labors of holding a protracted meeting. And after our own bitter bereavement, it appeared the most appropriate work for us. And in this 'labor of love,' our sympathetic sufferings notwithstanding, we were frequently and greatly blessed ourselves. I am confident I never had near as much of this kind of ministerial duty to perform, wherever I have labored; and I never saw or felt the necessity and importance, of pastoral visitation so much before. It appears to me that as a conference, we ought to awake to the subject of the duty of our itinerant ministers in this respect. For my deep conviction is, that if we are deficient in this respect, preach as we may on Sunday, the church will not prosper in our hand. And would it not be a profitable subject of enquiry, Whether it is the duty of a pastor to visit all his flock, especially all the sick and afflicted of every kind of malady with which they may be diseased? Whether, to benefit the souls commited to his charge, he should be as fearless of disease as the physician, whose profession is to benefit the body? Would not a candid enquiry into these and kindred subjects of a ministerial character, be more profitable to us all, than some subject warmly debated among us? And I think I may safely say, that whatever deficiency may have characterized the efforts in the pulpit, our labors among the sick, have not been in vain, in the Lord. And, to use a Christian paradox, "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing."

Since the last obituary from us, besides a number of the lambs of the flock, upwards of half a dozen of adult members, have departed this life; and all, I thrust, for the life above. Several of these lingered in great affliction and pain for months, before they entered into rest. But it was truly pleasing to witness their Christian fortitude, and the triumphs of grace. And one dear sister, recently closed her earthly career under the most distressing circumstances: but I have no hesitancy in believing that she too has changed worlds for the better.

I shall not attempt to write sketches of all these departed friends, but obituaries of two or three, whose experience was the more remarkable.—In these, I know, brevity should be observed. but if the writer should linger a little in details, he seeks a refuge in the saying of a truly great man, cited by the Biographer of Miss Bacon.—"We are fond," says he, "of talking of those who have given us pleasure: not that we have any thing important to say, but because the subject is pleasing."

The first of these was "an old disciple." The prophet pensively enquires, "Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?"

Steubenville, O., June 5, 1848.

My Dear Br. Bassett:

It is now a long time since you heard from me. About the middle of April, I should have written, but business hurried me on to Cincinnati, and I had not the nerve, head, heart, or time, for writing. Even now, after three days' rest at home, I am utterly unable from exhaustion, to say much.

I visited Brownsville circuit, Union station, Connellsville, Fayette Spring, and George's Creek circuits, according to my published appointments. The meetings were good. The preachers were at their post, laboring faithfully, and their charges were in good order, generally speaking, but there was no special revival, while I was with them—yet in most of these charges there have been times of ingathering, in the fore part of the year. For the Aid Society, Brownsville circuit gave $26 25—Union circuit, $40 50—Connelsville circuit, $88 90—Fayette Spring circuit, $12 25—Georges Creek circuit I was hindered by a great sale in the neihborhood, from having meeting on Monday, and so I did nothing here for the Aid Society.

In Pittsburg, as I returned home, I met my wife and daughter, and remained with them there, a few days—got home on Saturday evening—preached for Brother Andrew on Sunday, the 16th of April, and attended in the afternoon, the funeral of my old, and much esteemed friend Geo. Hull. On Monday morning before day, I left for Cincinnati, got there on Wednesday, found my friends well. On Thursday, went by rail road to Springfield on temporal business. Returned on Saturday. On Sunday April 23d, I preached for Brother Stockton in the morning, and for Brother Dalbey in the evening. Brother Stockton's health was thought to be improving.—Brother Dalbey's health was rather worsted, in the George St. Mission. God bless these brethren, and all my old friends in Cincinnati. What a splendid field of labor the Queen City now is.

On Tuesday 25th of April I returned to my work up the Ohio River—landed at Grahams Station on Wednesday—preached that night, and the next, and then my good friends, the Pennells, according to previous engagement furnished me a horse, and in company with Br. G. G. Collins I went to Jackson circuit. Returned to Grahams Station on Tuesday—went on board the steamboat "Jewess," and landed a while before day, at Parkersburg. Bishop Soule, Dr. Green, and Rev. Mr. Parsons, and sundry other southern clergymen were on board. The Bishop and I talked old times over. He is willing to enter into friendly relations with the Methodist Protestant Church.

After visiting Newark, Harrisville, Tyler, and Wheeling circuits according to appointments, & laboring all I could, at my principal and other meetings through the circuits, I reached home June 1st weary and worn. The river circuits are mostly doing well. On Newark and Wheeling there have been large additions to the church. For the Aid Society Jackson gave $1 75—Newark, the men were mostly gone off with lumber—so I did nothing—Harrisville $25 30—Tyler $20 60—and on Wheeling $4 00.

Our cause in the Pittsburg District, I think, is slowly and steadily gaining strength. Will our brethren please give our church a little rest, from agitating controversy? that she may "renew her strength," and grow in numbers and in grace?—The abolition controversy threw us back seven or eight years, now that is over, do let us have time to get our breath. Since my last report, I have obtained for the Aid Society $220 55—making in all up to this date $923 20. Thank God, and kind friends for so much—our faithful laborers must not be forsaken in old age—no never.

Br. Callihan is expected to visit the Valley mission, Huntersville, Greenbrier, and Braxton, for me—do my work as President, and agent for the 'Aid Society,' and receive for his services, my apportionment at these several appointments.

The superintendents are hereby called on, to take earley measures, for raising a good conference collection, at every place where they preach. It must be done brethren—it will be much needed, to meet the wants of our worthy preachers, who have labored hard, on poor circuits, and got but little for themselves and families, to live on this year. They will likewise please to collect, what is due, on their papers, for the Aid Society, and bring it to conference.

Is our next conference to meet on the 22d or the 29th of August? Will the publishing committee search the Records, and make an early statement of the true time in the Recorder?—This will end all disputes.

I hereby tender to Br. Springer my kindest sympathies, in his present bereavement. Sister Springer, his faithful wife is gone. God sustain our old friend, under this severe stroke. And likewise, the two brothers, John and Jos. Burns, have lost a beloved mother. With these brethren I sympathise. I love them as christian ministers and fellow laborers, and I pray God to stand by them, in this and every other trial. I feel much worn down, with hard service. My wife's health is very feeble. If I live to see another Conference I shall be no candidate for the Presidency. I have served in that hard office long enough. Nor shall I carry out soundings before hand, to see where I may cast anchor for the coming year. Let every brother be supplied according to a fair representation, made at conference, then if any place is left, & my services are desired, I'll take that, for I go for itinerancy as it now stands, in the full belief of its superior utility, to any thing we might get by a change.

I am, &c.,

GEO. BROWN.

Cincinnati, June 9th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: Thro' your valuable paper, we would say to our worthy President, Br. J. M. Young, that the church at Elm St. Mission is laboring hard to make a good report, both for time and eternity, unless we are mistaken in appearances, which we are not willing to admit.—As a church we are engaged in the common cause of christian brotherhood, we are firmly united in the liberal principles of Methodist Protestantism, and the word of God our only basis of hope for salvation, in this, and for the life to come. With these great truths before us, we are steadily urging our passage onward, opposing the various combinations in the christian's pathway to heaven.

Our late protracted and quarterly meetings, were good, very good; no great excitement, but blest, to the great comfort and edification of the church, in reviving and strengthing their holy purposes in the blessed service of God. As a further evidence of our living, and being likely to live, there has been a uniform diligence manifested in attending to the various means of grace; we have not increased in numbers as we desired, but we rejoice in the permanence of the "moral worth," of those who have united with us. In no particular have we had to exercise Church Discipline upon one single individual since our organization. Taking all these considerations into view we believe most firmly that a permanent M. P. Church, will here live, and live to spread a gracious and saving influence over a neighborhood fast filling up with a useful and intelligent population. We now number about 95 members, and our ardent prayer is, that we may increase both in numbers and usefulness. Our Sabbath School is in a flourishing condition, being managed so efficiently by their worthy Supt., Br. J. G. Evans, having a good library and faithful teachers. The scholars in regular attendance number from 120 to 140, with a prospect of more, With gratitude we lift up our hearts to the Giver of all good for past mercies and present enjoyments. And we think we hear you respond, "thanking God," while we all take courage in our work of faith and labor of love. My worthy colleague, Br. W. B. Warrington labors faithfully and efficiently. May we live in such a manner before our charge, that they may follow us as we follow Christ.

Yodr Brother in the Gospel of Christ,

T. FINKBINE, Supt.,

of Elm St. Mission, Cincinnati.

P. S. Brs. Stockton and Dalbey are in pretty good health.

Seven Persons Drowned.—A number of persons were gathered about the railing of a German ship which was entering the mouth of the Mississippi a short time since, to see the pranks of an alligator. A tow boat came in collision at the moment, when seven persons were precipitated into the water, and were drowned.

Bold Robbery.—Mr. J. Allcorn, awning maker, on East Fifth street, over the store of E. S. McClellan, was robbed of $515 on Friday night. He received the money in the afternoon after bank hours and deposited it in the desk in the room adjoing the family sleeping apartment—The villain or villains entered the store of Mr. McClellan from the back way, and through it proceeded up stairs into Mr. Allcorn's room.—They also took about two dollars from the counter drawer of the store.—*Cin. WESTERN REGORDER.

PUTNAM, OHIO:

Thursday, June 15, 1848.

The Treaty of Peace.—The information seems to have come well authenticated, that the Mexican Chamber of Deputies in session at Quaretaro, did on the evening of the 19th of May, ratify the Treaty, by a vote of 51 to 35, It was presumed that the Senate would immediately take up the business, and pass a like enactment. The decision of that body, alone remains to confirm the ratification. So soon as that information is received, we shall be happy to place it before our readers.

Later.—Full Ratification.—Since the above was in type, we have intelligence by the Baltimore Sun, that on the 20th ult. the Mexican Senate ratfied the Treaty by a vote of 23 to 5, so that peace may now be considered established. Orders were issued, calling in the outposts, and the army was to be on the march homewards in ten days. Gen. Smith is to superintend the embarkation of troops at Vera Cruz.

Who will not now be glad and rejoice that a termination has been put to this sanguinary war? Many prayers, in many churches, have been offered up to this effect. A kind Providence has dealt more gently with us than our iniquities have deserved. Let us now give thanks to God that hostilities have ceased. And now let the sword be beaten into a plowshare, the spear into a pruning hook. And let us learn war no more.

The Evangelical Economy Developed, in a series of Discourses on the Facts, Institutions, Appliances, Effects and final Results of the Christian System. By Rev. Thomas Potter, Minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, Zanesville, Ohio, 1848.

We are happy to announce, that after considerable delay, in the printing and binding of this work, it is now ready for delivery to subscribers and purchasers. It is well printed on fine paper. and comprises a volume of 356 pages, substantially bound in muslin. Whilst the work was in press, with leave, we inserted a number of extracts of sermons embraced in the work.—These were read with great interest by many, as we have been informed. Those who were pleased with the extracts, should now possess themselves of the volume. A book of sermons, has by some been considered a dull book. Such however is not the book now offerred to the public. It will be found interesting as well as instructive and useful. Those who read the first sermon, would not be debarred the privilege of reading all. Price, single copy, $1,00. A supply is left with us at this office, to be disposed of at wholesale and retail prices.

Sectarianism.—This is one of the isms which find no quarters with our friend Newton of the "Golden Rule." See how he lets out upon it in the last number of his spicy little paper.

Take Care those Horns.—Those sectarian horns, take care! you may hook somebody; keep them down. These same horns have been known to hook in time past. "Wonderful revival, in our church, wonderful! God is doing great things for us, whereof we are glad." Marvellous! God, at this very time, and in the same city, was reviving many branches of Zion; not a word, a whisper, concerning these! Man, who are you in that strait jacket? You are fenced in completely, confined to a nut-shell; wound up, pinched up, crimped up, shriveled up! Do you ever expect to get out of that nut-shell?—Souls, are not all souls equally precious in God's sight? Is not a Methodist soul as precious as a Baptist soul; a Baptist soul a precious as that of a Presbyterian or an Episcopalian as precious as that of a Methodist or Lutheran? Beloved, open your heart a little; open it, drive in a wedge, press it out, if so be—a little, a very little of the expansive may enter.

When angels rejoice over one sinner that repenteth, is it because he unites with the Baptist church, Methodist church, or Presbyterian church, or any particular branch of God's Zion?

U. S. CONGRESS.

Monday, May 29.—House.

The Speaker laid before the House the following Message from the President of the United States respecting affairs in Oregon.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I lay before Congress the accompanying memorial and papers, which have been transmitted to me by a special messenger, employed for that purpose by the Governor and "Legislative Assembly of Oregon Territory," who constitute the temporary government which the inhabitants of that distant region of our country have, from the necessity of their condition, organised for themselves. The memorialists are citizens of the United States. They express ardent attachment to their native land, and in their present perilous and distressed situation, they earnestly invoke the aid and protection of their Government.

They represent that "the proud and powerful tribes of Indians" residing in their vicinity have recently raised "the war whoop and crimsoned their tomahawks in the blood of their citizens;" that they apprehended that "many of the powerful tribes inhabiting the upper valley of the Columbia have formed an alliance for the purpose of carrying on hostilities against their settlements;" that the number of the white population is far inferior to that of the savages; that they are deficient in arms and money, and fear that they do not possess strength to repel the "attack of so formidable a foe and protect their property and families from violence and rapine." They conclude their appeal to the Government of the United States for relief by declaring: "If it be at all the intention of our honored parent to spread her guardian wing over her sons and daughters in Oregon, she surely will not refuse to do it now, when they are struggling with all the ills of a weak and temporary government, and when perils are daily thickening around them and preparing to burst upon their heads. When the ensuing summer's sun shall have dispelled the snow from the mountains we shall look with glowing hope and restless anxiety for the coming of your laws and your arms."

In my message of the 5th of August, 1846, communicating "a copy of the convention for the settlement and adjustment of the Oregon boundary," I recommended to Congress that "provision should be made by law at the earliest practicable period for the organization of a territorial government in Oregon." In my annual message of December, 1846, and again in Dec., 1847, this recommendation was repeated.

The population of Oregon is believed to exceed twelve thousand souls, and it is known that it will be increased by a large number of emigrants during the present season. The facts set forth in the accompanying memorial and papers show that the dangers to which our fellow-citizens are exposed are so imminent that I deem it my duty again to impress on Congress the strong claim which the inhabitants of that distant country have to the benefit of our laws and the protection of our Government.

I therefore again invite the attention of Congress to the subject. and recommend that laws be promptly passed establishing a Territorial Government, and granting authority to raise an adequate volunteer force for the defence and protection of the inhabitants. It is believed that a regiment of mounted men, with such additional force as may be raised in Oregon, will be sufficient to afford the required protection. It is recommnded that the forces raised for this purpose should engage to serve for twelve months, unless sooner discharged. No doubt is entertained. with proper inducements in land bounties, such a force can be raised in a short time. Upon the expiration of their service many of them will doubtless desire to remain in the country and settle upon the land which they may receive as bounty.

It is deemed important that provision be made for the appointment of a suitable number of Indian agents to reside among the various tribes in Oregon, and the appropriations be made to enable them to treat with these tribes, with a view to restore and preserve peace between them and the white inhabitants.

Should the laws recommended be promptly passed, the measures for their execution may be completed during the present season, and before the severity of winter will interpose obstacles in crossing the Rocky Mountains. If not promptly passed, a delay of an other year will be the consequence, and may prove destructive to the white settlements in Oregon.

MEMOIR OF THE LATE REV. JOHN FORDYCE, OF GREEN CO., PA.

"The memory of the just is blessed." And such of them as have been the honored instruments of furthering the Divine will, either immediately or remotely in turning men to righteourness, are entitled to "double honor." They have an especial claim to grateful remembrance. Their example is productive of useful imitation; though dead, they yet speak in the records of their well doing: they live in all who tread in their footsteps. We are enabled to give your readers some particulars of such a character, of one who was a just man in his generation. The wish that his "memorial should not perish" has induced us to collect and communicate those particulars, although his life was not marked by any uncommon vicissitude or suffering. The usefulness which gave its character, was supported by unvarying integrity, disinterestedness and consistency. These virtues shone in him preeminently: they were the distinguishing features of his conduct, and, being sanctified by sincere devotedness to God and his cause, rendered his life an edifying example.

Rev. John Fordyce was born in Morris County, New Jersey, on the 17th day of September 1775. His parents removed to Greene County, Pennsylvania, when he was 15 years of age, where he resided until his death, which took place on the 30th day of April 1848, at thirty-five minutes past 3 o'clock, A. M. He was married to Elizabeth Garrard on the 16th day of September, 1798.

Elizabeth departed this life on the 12th day of December 1838, at the age of 60 years and 9 months, between 5 and 6 o'clock in the morning. They lay side by side in the Kirby grave yard, and rest in hope until the morning of the resurrection of the just.

With regard to the particulars relative to the conversion of our worthy deceased Brother, your correspondent is not in possession, so as to give dates, but from information and personal acquaintance, we are safe in stating, that in early life, he saw that outward observances are neither the whole nor the substance of religion. He became convinced that confining of it to these is that "righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees" which must be "exceeded" by every one who shall "enter into the kingdom of Heaven." He felt and acknowledged his inward depravity, and humbled himself at the foot of the cross. He sought redemption through the blood of Jesus, and as he sought earnestly, and believingly, he found it, and received the assurance of his acceptance through the Beloved.

This assurance he never lost, and to his dying hour, gave evidence by his walk, that the fabric of his hope was not built upon the sand, but upon the truth of grace, and his faithful reception of it.

Previous to this, our worthy Br. had been instructed in the Calvanistic faith, but now, having embraced the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, He was satisfied that the doctrines taught by the Methodists were scriptural and found them to be the means of enlightening his mind and converting his soul. He cast in his lot with this (then) persecuted people. He had "counted the cost." He "knew in whom he believed," and had well weighed the ground of his faith in Him. He looked on the cause of Methodism as the cause of God and truth, and he remained steadfast to his purpose.

We find amongst his papers, his ordination authority as a Deacon, this took place in the year 1818, he was elected to the office by the Baltimore Conference of the M. E. Church, and set apart to the work, by the imposition of the hands of Bishop McKendree. He used the office of Deacon well, and thereby obtained to himself "a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus."

He was now established for life, so far as it concerned his marriage state and local residence, he moved in a sphere of usefulness & prosperity both spiritual and temporal; his character was marked for uprightness and diligence, and the Lord blessed him in all he undertook. While the whole of his conduct evinced that he was more careful for the bread of eternal life, than for that which perisheth, he was not slothful in business. His industry was unremitting, which may be known by his having served the county in which he resided 24 years as county surveyor.

The hospitality of his house was almost proverbal, not only the preachers and his christian friends, but all others who had occasion to come to it, were received with undissembled cheerfulness. His provision was made without grudging on the one hand, and, without wasteful extravagance on the other. He did not forget the poor.

"Soft was his heart, their pains to feel
And swift his hands to aid."

He was liberal in the support of the cause of the Lord, and always bore his past in meeting the expenses of the church, and where the occasion required it, his bounty was proportionately increased.

He was temperate in all things. In dress he was a model of plainness and cleaniness. In food he was ever moderate, and held in abhorrance the use of spirituous liqours. The reward of his temperance was a healthy frame. Thro'out his life he was seldom confined by illness. He was strictly punctual in all his dealings in trade. His word was sacred to him; and this was so well known, that his credit was unlimited. Whilst he exhibited himself generous, he always proved himself just. He never aimed at obtaining an advantage over the unwary, but maintained a character, untainted and undisturbed, for pure and manly disinterestedness. This leads us to observe that all these good qualities proceeded from the only legitimate source of every moral good, a conscientious regard to the law of God, written on his heart by the finger of divine love. He followed Christ in the regeneration. His faith was not Anti-nomian, but humbly, and cheerfully, and permanently working by love. All the means of grace were precious to him, and for the last thirty years of his life, his Sabbaths were more or less spent in proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ; in the great work of the ministry he dealt with that fidelity which distinguished him in civil life. Plainness and solemnity were the leading features of his addresses, he was always heard with acceptance. His auditors recognized in him the living example of the truths he taught. They were convinced that he believed what he asserted, they knew that he practised what he professed. Two years he travelled as an itinerant minister in the M. P. Church. He was amongst the early Reformers, and in the days of the controversy on Mutual Rights, he stood forth as a champion for ecclesiastical liberty, and was one of the first who united in the organization under the Conventional Articles in Western Pa. He lived to see the church of his choice spread all over these lands, with 30 Conferences, with 700 itinerant ministers, with 60 or 70 thousand members, with many houses of public worship, some of them amongst the most splendid in the Union, with Sabbaths Schools by hundreds, and now at the close of a long and useful life, after a sickness of eight days, in prospect of eternity he says, "I am not afraid to die." Death to him had lost his sting, to him, he would open the door to glory and immortality. A peaceful end crowned a holy life; he evinced a patient, thankful resignation to the will of God, and such a serenity and evenness of temper as excited the grateful joy of his relatives, and the admiration of all around him. He had the pleasing reflection of knowing; that his companion had entered the port of everlasting life, that after having raised a large family, every one of them, had given their names to the church, and one of his sons, by the providence of God had been called to the work of the ministry, (may a double portion of his Father's Spirit fall on him;) with these matters all before him, with a knowledge of his acceptance with Christ, well may he say, "I am not afraid to die"—"a crisis has arrived to try my faith in Christ"—"my days are numbered, my race is run," he fell asleep without a groan or convulsion, to mark the precise moment, where his happy spirit returned to God.

Four weeks afterwards the writer of the above, delivered a funeral discourse at the Kirby meeting house, to some 7 or 8 hundred persons, from 2 Sam. 14th Chap. and 14th verse, eternity will unfold the effects produced by that effort. It was in the open air. it was amongst persons of all the surrounding denominations, who met to pay their last tribute of respect to one, whom they in life respected.

May all the family be saved in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ; and for myself, I say, may my last end be like his.

Yours, very respectfully,
P. T. LAISHLEY.

"A widow, a widow indeed,
A mother in Israel is gone."

Yes,

MRS. HANNAH BEST

Is gone to rest, with those who live in heaven.

The maiden name of mother Best was Hewitt. She was born in the county of Armagh, Ireland, November 12th, 1775. Her parents were of the Presbyterian order, by whom she was educated in the strictest observance of Christian morals.—And early in the day of life she was blessed with the privilege of attending the preaching of Rev. John Wesley, and united with the first of the societies formed by him in the north of Ireland: of which she continued a strict and faithful member until the year 1829, when she accompanied a large family of emigrants to America, and settled in Pittsburgh, where she attached herself to the Methodist Protestant Church, and continued a worthy, exemplary and devoted Christian—"a burning and a shining light," till the day of her death. When she united in marriage to Mr. Best, the writer is not informed, nor of the time when she was bereaved of her companion in life; but he remembers an observation of hers, that she had been a widow a great many years. And how the Lord had been with her; and preserved her even in the time of the bloody rebellion,—when so many Protestants were slain.

The subject of this brief biographical sketch was truly a venerable Christian matron,—and a fine specimen of real old-fashioned primitive Methodism; one of the true John-Wesley type. And whatever external embellishments—art, and the physical refinements of society may have given to the profession of Christianity in our day, in the estimation of the writer—compared with the beauteous simplicity of New Testament religion—and the experience of the primitive Methodists, it resembles full well—paint on a diamond. The intrinsic sparkling glory is but obscured thereby—the artificial adornments of the day do but veil the native loveliness of vital piety, and the shining graces of salvation, designed to illumine and influence the world for good, are almost concealed from view, by the murky clouds of form and fashion.

Our aged and venerable sister Best was a woman of strong mind, and possessed a large stock of good common sense; and was quite gifted in the exercise of religion. She had a clear and comprehensive view of the plan of salvation, and an extensive acquaintance with the Scriptures. Here laid her strength: With deep piety, warm Christian zeal, boldness to speak in the name of the Lord,—clad with the whole armor of God, she could wield to excellent purpose, the sword of the Spirit. She was a very good woman & useful in society and in the community. Loved and prized by all who knew her.

For many months before her decease, bodily infirmities, and distance from the sanctuary, deprived her of much of her former enjoyment—in the attendance upon the public and social means of grace. But she would try and obtain a little second-handed, by getting other members of the family to repeat the substance of the sermon, &c. on Sunday. And for some time before her demise, she seemed to have a premonition of her approaching death. About three weeks before her departure from the world, a grandson who had not before visited her in her affliction, —came to see her;—she chided him for neglect, and remarked that she should not long remain here. To this he replied that he had not seen her look better for a long time. "I feel," said she, "that I am like a ripe shock of corn, ready for the heavenly garner."

I had visited her repeatedly before, and as her end drew near, I visited her daily. Not that she needed ministerial instruction, or the presence and influence of friends to cheer her spirits, (though she was pleased with their presence,) for she was "strong in faith, giving glory to God," and happy in the prospect of a blissful futurity. Indeed she would keep equal pace with the preacher in citing, expounding, and applying Scripture; and not single passages alone, but give the sense and leading import of whole chapters in the prophets, but a few days before her death. So that her pastor was a learner as well as teacher, by her bed side; and not in grace alone, but also in Biblical Knowledge.—Her life was holy, and her death was happy. She closed her eyes to sleep in Jesus, on Feb. 11th, 1848, in the 73d year of her age. "Precious in the sight of the Lord, is the death of his saints."

Her funeral was on Sunday, and a great company of friends attended, among whom were a number of members of the E. Meth. Church, where some of her connexions belong. And one of the stationed ministers of the city assisted in the solemnities of the occasion. Since then, while visiting another afflicted sister, in the neighborhood, I learned that the physician, astonished at the happiness of mother Best upon her dying bed, and her familiar conversation respecting it, enquired of this sister, where Mrs. Best went to church? He wished to know the denomination to which she belonged; for he had never witnessed so happy a person in death, in all his practice! This, of course, to me was grateful news. Ah! such elevated spirituality of mind, such demonstration of the power of God, and such holy triumph in death, must and will be felt and seen. And oh! may her surviving children follow her as she followed Christ.

News of the Week.

Beware of Altered Notes.—We lately warned the people against taking five dollar bills altered from ones. Yesterday Mr. Jonathan Panooast, Jr., at D. A. Powell's in a sum of about eight hundred dollars, hurriedly taken, received a ten dollar bill, as he supposed, on the State Bank of Ohio, but on taking the amount to the Trust Co. Bank, it was found that the said bill had been altered from a one dollar note! The deception is so good that those handling money, are liable to be deceived. Look out! This is the first altered to a ten we have seen.—Cin. Com.

A gentleman informs us that, while digging, a few days since, near the wreck of the steamer A. N. Johnson, some hundred dollars in specie and several gold watches were found.

The Grand Jury of St. Louis county, at their late session, presented the Government of that State, for his indiscriminate exercise of the pardoning power, and furnished a list of fifty criminals set loose from the penitentiary by him. Six of these were guilty of murder.

On the 26th ult, a member of the St. Louis bar named Blennchassett, moved that the presentment be expunged. After some remarks from other members of the bar, the motion was postponed until the next Wednesday morning.

Oregonian Statistics.—From a source that is deemed worthy of reliance, we have gleaned the following facts respecting Oregon:—The entire white population would fall a little below 7000.—About 400 are Catholics, most of Canadian descent. The Methodists are the most numerous. There are 6 itinerating Methodist Episcopal preachers who hold meetings at 30 or 40 stations, 8 or ten local preachers, besides 2 Protestant Methodist clergymen; Baptist Missionaries 2; Congregational or Presbyterian clergymen 4; and several Campbellite preachers. Regular Physicians, 4; Quacks, number unknown. Sawmills, 8 to 10, and Flour-mills 4 to 6. The amount of exports this year exceeds that of any former year.—Considerable attention has been paid to schools. An edition of Webster's Spelling Book has been published at the "Spectator" office. One paper is published in the country.

While there are many encouraging facts in regard to the present condition of the Oregon Territory, there is one that appears dark and protentous. There are many of the newly arrived emigrants resolutely opposed to any restrictions upon the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. Some traders having taken advantage of the change in the laws of the country, have flooded the country with rum and brandy. We hope the friends of tetotalism there will not falter nor yield one inch of territory without manful resistance. We have heard enough of the country to believe that a thriving wealthy, prosperous and moral community will ere long dwell upon the banks of the Oregon and Willamette.—Honolulu Friend, September 23d.

Western Sabbath Convention.

The undersigned, a committee appointed to secure the co-operation of the friends of Sabbath Reform in the West, having by correspondence and other means ascertained the views of individuals and associated bodies in different parts of the country, hereby recommend that a convention be held in Xenia, O., on Wednesday, 21st day of June next, at two o'clock, P. M., to accomplish the following objects:

1. To recommend measures of general interest in procuring the sanctification of the Sabbath.

2. To give expression to public sentiment favorable to a suspension of business on public thoroughfares on the Lord's day.

3. To organize a Western Sabbath Union, with a view to employing such agencies as may be necessary to secure harmonious and efficient co-operation in prosecuting the measures for promoting Sabbath reform, that may be recommended by the Convention.

The friends of this cause in the West are earnestly invited to attend the Convention: and it is further recommended, that public meetings be held in the various cities and towns to appoint delegates, and suggest topics for the consideration of the Convention. Where such general meetings are not held, churches are invited to make the appointments.

Sudden death of a clergyman.—The Rev Thomas Davis, co-pastor of the Presbyterian congregation of Blairsville and Salem, in Derry township, Indiana Pa., died suddenly on Sunday last, immediately after morning service. He had arrived at a great age, and was subject to a disease of the heart.

Bank Notes.—The law prohibiting banks from paying out the notes of other states took effect on the first day of the present month. They of course will not receive, what they cannot use, and unless in cases wherein they can send the money home, they will refuse to receive such notes. The effect must be to drive foreign notes out of the state.—Zansville Gazette

Storm on the Reservoir—Serious Accident.

On Tuesday afternoon, the 16th, a very heavy rain and hail storm broke over the Reservoir, near Thornport, accompanied with a very heavy wind and vivid lightning, which soon lashed the waters into a foam, presenting all the appearances of a miniature Lake. Several parties of persons, out fishing, were caught from shore, & being cast about among trees and stumps, were in great danger of their lives. Mr. Tell or Thiell, one of the commissioners of Perry co., was among the unfortunate,—having his thigh broken in two places, by falling timbers and also his skull fractured. His recovery is questionable. A boy was also struck in the face by a falling limb, but not seriously hurt.

The reservoir is the best fishing place in Ohio this side of the Lake, is resorted to from all the neighboring counties and towns, and affords the finest perch, bass, catfish, and other varieties of the finny tribe, that we have ever had the pleasure to share in. Two or three hotels (and friend Hamilton, in Millersport, keeps an excellent one,) are constantly crowded, and a large business is done by those who frequent different points to obtain fish to sell.

The reservoirs, however, (the old and new,) are often visited by storms, at the first appearance of which "sailors on the sea," if they know what safety is, make quickly to the shore. The space covered by water is very extensive, with here and there an Island dotting the surface, but unfortunately the old reservoir is strewn with timber,—trees standing yet in their majesty to threaten the safety of passing sportsmen, and stumps innumerable, to bring up standing the gliding boat. That part of the fishing region, in this county is about 10 miles north of us, and if it were as near Cincinnati, in season like this, would be crowded on its banks with hundreds every hour.—Ohio Eagle.

Cows on Railroads—The Law.

We find the following paragraph, which is of importance to the farmers living near Railroads:

Judge Beardsley, of New York; has decided that railroad companies cannot be made pay for cattle killed by being run over by the cars. The decision is no doubt a correct one. Farmers should take care of cattle by fencing them in instead of allowing them to stray about to the great inconvenience and danger to the traveling public.—Ger. Tel.

Abolition of Slavery in the Portuguese Colonies.

The following is a decree of the Government of Portugal, appointing a commitee to prepare a plan for the total abolition of slavery in all the Portuguese possessions:

"Marine Department.—The slave-trade being already prohibited by law and treaties in all the Portuguese possessions, and it being also in accordance with the true spirit of justice and equity, on which all good policy rests, that an end should be put to negro slavery, still tolerated and permitted in these possessions, the public weal requiring, however, that so important an alteration in the social state of those countries should be made with such prudence and forethought that fortunes may not be suddenly destroyed, nor the grant of liberty serves as an occasion for the slaves to abuse that benefit, which, though entirely conformable to the principles of humanity, cannot but entail a serious sacrifice on the State, as well as on the slave-owners—I am pleased to appoint a committee of the following members:

"The counsellors and Honorary Ministers of State, Jose de Sousa Pinto de Magalhaes and Ildefonso Leopoldo Bayard; the Counsellor Antonio Ramalho de Sa, Judge of the Tribunal of Goa; the Counsellor Jose de Costa Carvalho, captain in the navy; the merchant of Lisbon, Faustino de Fama; the lieutenant in the navy Jose Joaquim de Andrade Pinto; the Bachelor Carlos Zeferino Pinto Coelno de Castro; the first of whom shall act as president, and the last as secretary; which committee, taking as a basis the principles of equity and justice, and keeping in view the laws and practice established in the Portuguese possessions, and also the lessons of experience offered by those regions where slavery has been abolished, and other considerations which ought to be attended to, shall propose to me the most efficacious and proper practical means of carrying into effect the emancipation of slaves existing in the Portuguese ultramarine territories, and shall prepare the necessary projects of law and regulations for carrying out that object.

From the Illinois Republican.

Riot in Galena—Rescue from the U. S. Marshal of an Irish fugitive from justice.

The town of Galena was thrown into great excitement on Saturday evening last, by the arrest, and subsequent rescue of an Irishman, charged with having committed a murder in Ireland. The circumstances, as we hear them are that Richard White stands charged with having committed a murder in Tipperary, Ireland, in October last. He immediately fled to this country, and reached the lead mines in the vicinity of Galena last fall, where he has ever since been residing. By some means, the British Government ascertained were he was, and took the necessary steps to have him arrested and sent back, under the provisions of the Ashburton Treaty. A police officer was sent out from Ireland to identify White, and convey him back.—The papers were forwarded to the British consul at New York, who, after having them properly authenticated, dispatched Mr. Boudinot, an active member of the New York police, and the man who had come over to identify White, to make the arrest. On their arrival in Illinois, they applied to Judge Pope of the U. S. District Court, and obtained a warrant, which was placed in the hands of the U. States Marshall to be executed.

White was residing in the Vinegar Hill diggings, and, from the number of his friends there and in the vicinity, it was deemed necessary to inveigle him away before he was aware of the intention to arrest him. About two o'clock on Saturday, Mr. Boudinot succeeded in getting White and a friend of his away from his residence a mile or two, when he arrested him, and carried him to the Four Mile House, where he delivered him up to the United States Marshal and his deputies, who immediately conveyed him to the Sheriff's room, in the third story of the American House, in Galena. Meantime, White's friend, who was with him at the time of arrest, gave the alarm and the workmen, from the various diggings, commenced pouring into the town, and, by night, the crowd was very large. The Marshal became apprehensive of an attempt to rescue the prisoner, but the Mayor of Galena assured him nothing of the kind would occur. The crowd increasing, the Marshal applied to the "City Guards," a volunteer company, to act as a posse; but as the company were leaving their armory, the Mayor countermanded the order,—giving the officer to understand, that they were going out without any sufficient authority, and the responsibility of any consequences that might ensue would rest on them individually. They did not go.

About nine o'clock in the night, the crowd—then numbering full 300—made a rush for the Sheriff's rooms, & succeeded in getting possession of the prisoner, and carrying him away.—When White was brought to the head of the stairs, Mr. Boudinot, who was in an adjoining room, rushed out, seized the prisoner, and attempted to hold him; but the rescuers were more numerous and powerful, and they seized Boudinot and threw him over the banisters. Fortunately, he was not injured by the fall. The crowd then dispersed, but without doing any injury to the house or persons.

The excitement against Boudinot, and the man who had come out to identify White, was very great, and as fresh parties continued to arrive, up to a late hour in the night, it was deemed advisable for these men to leave the town, which they did.

The conduct of the Mayor is strongly censured by all the reflecting portion of the community. They believe that the rescue could have been avoided, and the mob quelled, if he had actod with sufficient promptnes and decision.

The case presents a novel feature. The demand was regularly made by the British Government upon the United States, for the arrest and surrender of a fugitive from justice, under the Ashburton treaty. The facts of the arrest and rescue will, doubtless, be communicated to the British minister at Washington, and he will demand of the United States Government an enforcement of the provisions of the treaty. Will the United States Government enforce them? Or will it shrink from the responsibility which it imposes?

The whole affair shows the vigilance and efficiency of the British police, and the determination with which the Government pursues violators of her criminal law. In this case, it may be truly said they have not only pursued White across the ocean, and a thousand miles into the interior of the country, but in fact, into the earth itself, for he had reached the mines, where, living in their deep shafts one would suppose, he might have spent a life time and not have been discovered.

Friends Wanted.

A boy, named Wm. Saunders, in a very helpless condition, (crippled in one arm and leg,) without money or friends, was brought to this town last week, in search of his two brothers, who moved from Caroline County, about three years ago. Since then his parents have deceased, leaving him utterly destitute. By the kindness of strangers and proprietors of public conveyances, he has been passed free, by railroad, steamboat, and stage, from Fredericksburg, Va. to this place. All inquiries for his brothers have, thus far, proved fruitless. It is possible that they are not in the county. But in the hope that they are, and that the boy may be relieved from his forlorn condition, we publish this notice, trusting that our readers will give it a wide circulation.—Newark Gaz.

Drowned.—We learn from the Examiner, published at Washington Pa., that two brothers, named David and Daniel Sutherland, and an other man, named Robert Patterson, were all drowned while bathing in a mill-dam near that place, on Thursday last.

New Subscribers this week, 6. Discontinuances, 2.

☞ We are very thankful to our old friend, Br. T. Finkbine of Cincinnati, for a remittance of twenty-five dollars, in payment for all the subscribers embraced in his Mission. As he has advanced the money for most of them, they will of course hand the amount to him without being called upon. It will be seen that we are overpaid $2 of the above amount. If another subscriber at the Queen City will pay that amount to Br. F., it would indemnify him and oblige us.

OUR LIST.

Shortly after the commencement of our present volume, we addressed an appeal to our friends, and especially our agents, in behalf of the Western Recorder. We showed how easily one thousand new subscribers might be added to our list within a short time. Our paper is sent to more than one hundred and fifty travelling ministers, of several Conferences, most of whom have their copy free, for their agency. We remarked that if each of those brethren would obtain for us from five to ten new subscribers, or an average of seven subscribers each, the matter would be at once accomplished. A number of brethren have responded nobly, others have begun well, and will we trust succeed still better, others have not yet reported to us. The Publisher of the Methodist Protestant has also proposed to raise one thousand new subscribers, for that paper, by enlisting two hundred agents to obtain as many as five each. In his last paper he givos the names of twelve brethren, who have thus far complied. PROSPECTUS OF THE

Fourth Volume of the American Pulpit,

The American Pulpit is a Monthly Magazine, published in the city of Worcester, Massachusetts. It contains thirty-two pages in each number, and will be well supplied with that kind of Literature which is adapted to Ministers and Theological Students, such as Sermons, Sketches, Essays, Biographies, &c. &c.

The leading Sermon, will be of the highest order; and all the Sermons, we intend, shall bear the stamp of superiority. They will be sought, and obtained, so far as it is possible, from the most eminent Divines, on the American Continent. Arrangements are already made to accomplish this end; and no reasonable pains or expense will be spared, to make this department of the Pulpit superior to anything of the kind in existence.

The Sketches will be of the first class. We have accepted the proposals of an eminent minister in England to supply this department, partially—the Rev J Burns, D D, of London, author of "Pulpit Cyclopedia;" &c &c. By securing the correspondence of Dr Burns, the patrons of the Pulpit will enjoy a fine opportunity of comparing British and American talent in the same pages.

In the Miscellaneous Department will be found, Essays, Biographical Sketches, Poetry, and such as shall enhance the value of the work.

The Pulpit is edited by

REV J D BRIDGE,

who will spare no pains to render it not only a welcome visiter to the Minister's study, but a 'profitable' one.—The work is evangelical in its character, and will avoid all controversy, except with sin and the popular errors of the day.

Its patrons, hitherto, have been gathered from all of the orthodox denominations in the country, all of whom the Publisher hopes to return. And we wish it distinctly understood, that Ministers in all the evangelical denominations are invited to become contributors to the pages of he Pulpit. We solicit from them, Sermons, Sketches of Sermons, or Criticisms, on any subject within the compass of Homiletics; and, that no one may feel embarrassed in his desire to accept this invitation, we shall dispense with the "List of Contributors" which has formerly appeared on our cover. We do this not out of any disrespect to any of the worthy names in that List, but that others may not be deterred from contributing, because not numbered in the distinguished catalogue.

By far the largest amount of matter contained in the Pulpit will be 'original;' but it will also be enriched by choice 'selections' from Books and periodicals.

Terms—One Dollar Per Annum, in Advance.

The Pulpit will be mailed regularly during the latter part of the month preceding that of its publication, that it may reach its destination, in ordinary cases, by the first of each month.

We solicit Agents for the work. We will allow them a reasonable and just compensation for their services, and we authorize all the ministers of every evangelical denomination, and all laymen who love our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and who desire the extension of his kingdom on earth, to co-operate with us in extending the circulation of this work.

All orders for the work and all remittances for the same should be addressed to

POET'S CORNER.

ODE FOR THE FRIENDS OF PEACE.

BY REV. ELNATHAN DAVIS.

Not with the flashing steel—
Not with the cannon's peal,
Or stir of drum,
But in the bonds of love;
Our white flag floats above,
Her emblem is the dove,
'Tis thus we come.

The laws of Christian light,
These are our weapons bright,
Our mighty shield;
Christ is our leader high,
And the broad plains which lie,
Beneath the blessed sky,
Our battle-field.

What is that "great intent,"
To which the heart is bent,
Our host among?
It is that Hate may die,
That War's red curse may fly,
And War's high praise forave,
No more be sung.

That all the poor may rest,
Beneath their own vines blessed;
In glorious Peace;
That Death and Hell may yield,
And human hearts long steeled,
By Love's pure drops unsealed,
From warfare cease.

On then, in God's great name,
Let each pure spirit's flame,
Burn bright and clear;
Stand firmly in your lot,
Cry ye aloud, doubt not,
Be every fear forgot,
Christ leads us here.

So shall Earth's distant lands,
In happy, holy bands,
One brotherhood,
Together rise and sing,
And joyful offerings bring,
And Heaven's Eternal King,
Pronounce it good.

Some Notice of Rev. John Scott.

Mr. Editor,—In your paper of May the 18th the Rev. John Scott has endorsed a production which is probably the effusion of the captain's heart. The spirit of the article decidedly shews that the boys are writing under the inflictions of "Joking or facts." I should not at all think the thing worth noticing, only they have, for the want of something better, to say, no doubt, instituted against me certain charges of high crimes and misdemeanors, which if not repelled, many gain credence with some, especially those who might be gratified to believe that way.

1. I am charged with "traducing their characters." Why my dear brethren you have no "characters" to "traduce." You have not lived long enough in the world to establish permanent characters of any kind. I do not speak about your private relations; of these I know but little. But I speak of your public characters, with which we have at present to do. The only act which has given you any notoriety is an attempt at revolution. For such men to talk about "character" surprizes me. I will, however, give you an anecdote, which may afford you some consolation under the circumstances, by shewing that godly men of other days have had their difficulties as well as you. It bears that Br. Snyder of the M. E. Church, who was in the habit of getting intoxicated, after being reproved and borne with for a time, was expelled from the church, who, when informed of the fact raised up a monstrous pitiful whine, exclaiming—"all that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution!"

2. He charges me with "gross misrepresentation" because I had given his name among them who had "agreed" to discuss the expediency of the Restrictive Rule. I said, on the authority of the Rev. E. S. Hoagland, that some, more or less, had agreed to discuss the expediency of said rule, & then inferred from the fact Br. Scott was already engaged in the discussion that he was one of the "league." I did not say, or wish to be understood, that there was any covenant instrument signed sealed and witnessed on the subject, but that there was an express verbal promise by some, and an implied "agreement" by others, to assail the Restrictive Rule, and that the Rev. John Scott was implicated in the matter I had no doubt. And are you not? did you not second the motion to attack this rule in the Pittsburgh Conference; and did you not then and there speak against it? Where then, we ask, is the "gross misrepresentation?"—This quibble shews the boys are hard pushed to make out a case.

3. He represents my principal object to be to "impeach their motives" and "ridicule their intelligence." In reference to your motives, Br. Scott, I am willing that your actions shall determine as to them.—But with regard to your intelligence I have seen yet but precious little to ridicule. But of vanity, sophistry and importance I have witnessed any amount. And you will please excuse me, because irony,—or ridicule as you are pleased to call it,—is the only weapon which can be successfully used against such.

4. Our worthy friend further states that I "assert" the boys "are influenced by pride," and "have fallen into condemnation of the devil," &c. No brother Scott, or rather Joseph, it was not I but Paul which used this language. When I introduced this interesting corps of young men, by name, to the notice of the church, as the leaders of a revolution, I admonished the public by referring to I Cor. 3. & 6th where the Apostle cautions against promoting "a novice lest being tempted with pride, he fall into condemnation of the devil." So Paul was this "human searcher of hearts" and you must settle the matter with him. But he thinks you can easily dispose of Paul by placing him among the "fathers of Methodism," of whom you say, —"though wise and good, like all other men" "were fallible and erring creatures." "They did much, very much but who could reasonably have expected them to do all. The system they devised is excellent, but like every human production is imperfect." That is in other words, we admit the "fathers of Methodism" were great and good men, in their day, and have done much in forming plans for the spread of the gospel, but be it known to all whom it may concern, that I Joseph Burns, John Scott and Co., live in an age of far more light, and standing on the shoulders of the "fathers of Methodism," we are capable of taking a more extensive and liberal view of such plans as the age calls for, in spreading the truths of religion. We, therefore, with these superior advantages propose to perfect these "imperfect" systems of our fathers, and to adopt such plans for the object as shall be worthy of the enlightened generation in which we live. This, gentle reader, is the idea carried out in full. Could any thing reach such consumate vanity but the keen lashes of irony?

5. Our esteemed author has indicated that I have attempted to silence their "rational investigations" by "authoritative dictation" and "personal abuse." Why bless the dear brother, I have seen nothing very "rational" about their "investigations." Their essays have generally been as weak as puddle water. And as to "personal abuse," if I have been guilty of that I exceedingly regret it, and apologize to them for it. It is true I called them boys and intimated they were a little too much conceited, as boys are apt to be. But it occurred to me in all this I kept within the record. But still I acknowledge my fallibility, and as "dictation" and "abuse" are things I very much depreciate, either in young or old, I will try to be on my guard in future.

With personal good will to the projectors of this new enterprize, and with a firm belief that we shall all get through this controversy without any very serious calamity befalling either ourselves or the church, I subscribe myself,

Restrictive Rule—Rev. C. Springer.

NO. II.

Mr. Editor: I have had the pleasure of perusing the Rev. Springer's second article on the "Restrictive Rule." As he proposes, he first pays his "particular respects to Prudentia."—Now I deem it rather unfair for two of the "Fathers," in quick succession, to apply their rods of correction, to such a mere stripling. It is rather singular, indeed, that there exists any necessity for such a course. A person would almost naturally have supposed, that a single stroke from one of the "Fathers," would have been entirely sufficient, to overthrow the "airy arguments" of this "beardless boy." But such it appears is not the case. One of the "Fathers," it is presumed, made the attempt—another deeming him unsuccessful, steps forward to his assistance. The fact of their great age, however, may afford sufficient apology for their conduct. My sympathy for Prudentia, would prompt me to offer him my assistance,—but, in his growing strength, I deem him entirely sufficient for the task before him.—I will, therefore, leave him to explain his own motives, and defend his own arguments, and turn my attention more particularly to that part of the article which appears to be of more general application.

"Indeed," says the writer, "it is not likely that God who generally makes use of the instrumentality of natural causes, to carry on his great purposes in relation to man's redemption, would tie down the ministry to any set of rules, in spreading the truths of religion, without reference to its utility." On this point it is conceived there is no controversy—at least there is none with me. But how are we to determine the probable utility of any system? by reference to its adaptation to circumstances as they exist now, or to circumstances as they existed a century ago? It should be remembered that the same causes operating under different circumstances do not always produce the same effects. Those rules and regulations which are adapted to the condition of the church, and best calculated to promote its interests, at one time, may fail to accomplish the same end, if adopted under different circumstances. It is impossible suitably to adapt a changeless rule, to changing circumstances. The great Founder of the church, perceiving this impossibility, sent forth his apostles "to preach the Gospel," leaving the particular direction of their ministry to be determined as circumstances and the openings of Providence might indicate. Were it, then, even proven, which is not the case, that the existence of the "Restrictive Rule," during one period of the church, has been highly beneficial, it does not, therefore, necessarily follow, that its existence through another period, would be equally so.

The main argument presented in the article in support of the "Restrictive Rule," or at least that which the author appears to esteem such, is the prosperity of the Methodist churches. "We call attention," says the writer, "to the English Wesleyan Methodist, and the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States. These have itinerancies more 'restricted' and rigid than our own. Well, have they prospered with their restrictions?—If the boys were only old enough to look back upon the state of the churches, on the rise of Methodism, and contrast the past with the present, they would be astounded at the change.—O! how changed! And changed too mainly by the instrumentality of a church, who, without an itinerancy would have made but a feeble essay upon the world." It is asserted here that other Methodist churches have itinerancies as much, nay more restricted than our own, and that they have prospered, and have been instrumental in accomplishing much good,—but that without an itinerancy, they "would have made but a feeble essay upon the world." It will be perceived at once, that the writer instead of drawing an argument from the prosperity of those churches, in support of the utility of the "Restrictive Rule," derives an argument from it, in support of the utility of itinerancy. That they have restrictions, and that they have prospered with them, is admitted; but that they have prospered in consequence of them, is denied.—This is the point here in dispute; and this the writer does not attempt to prove. He seems to change his ground, and instead of arguing in support of the restrictions of itinerancy, he argues in support of itinerancy itself. Is not this, in reality, a "yielding" of the point?

The writer apparently aware of the awkwardness of his position, in the next paragraph, anticipates in reply to his so called argument, the truthful assertion, that "we do not wish the itinerancy destroyed," but "left free to move on according to the openings of Providence." In this assertion what do we claim but the supremacy of God's authority over that of men? And who will object to this? But as the rule now stands, let it be ever so clearly indicated, that it is the Divine will that a minister should remain longer than two years in a station, or three years on a circuit, the Divine will must be disregarded, or our law violated. "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." In order to leave ministers free, then, to be governed by the indications of the Divine will, without producing anarchy or confusion in the church, the removal of the restrictive article appears evidently to be necessary.

But we are informed that "the old system has worked admirably well, and that any man of practical good sense is generally disposed to let well enough alone." For the writer to claim that the present system is "well enough," and ought, therefore, to be let alone, is a begging of the question—for that is the great point in dispute. He may think it "well enough," but others think differently. To say that it has worked well, and ought, therefore, to be let alone, is to assume the position that those regulations which are adapted to the condition of the church, and calculated to promote its prosperity, at one time, are equally adapted to its condition, and calculated to promote its prosperity at all times.—This position he has himself abandoned. Its fallacy has, also, already been shown. In addition,—were it true, it would not only manifest a want of benevolence but also of wisdom in the great Founder of the church, to leave his followers without any particular directions upon a subject so intimately connected with their peace and prosperity, when it might have been forever settled by Divine authority. Moreover, if this principle were universally acted upon, the progress of mind would be staid, and every improvement in society at once arrested. But so long as human systems are imperfect, they will be susceptible of improvement.

In the last place we are told that "this new proposition"—an itinerancy without restrictions—"has in no instance been acted upon," but "is all theory." This, were it true, it is conceived does not afford a sufficient reason why it should not be adopted. Had our Revolutionary forefathers acted on this principle, we would still be groaning beneath a foreign yoke, and tributary to a foreign Power. Writers on Political Economy regarded their effort in the light of an experiment. Paley, so late as the year 1785, termed it an "experiment, on a large scale." But it was a successful one; and by it the world has been taught that there may be "a church without a Bishop, and a State without a King." Look, again, at the history of our own church." What was it but an experiment? When, in the history of Methodism, did our fathers find an exact model, after which to form the government of the Methodist Prot. Church? Did the writer of the article under consideration, wait till he had found such an example, before he manifested his opposition to the unjust powers of "the divinely authorized expounders?" We trow not. Is the human mind now to be arrested in its search after truth, by the declaration that "what has not been, ought not to be? Is reason now to be chained, and are men to be compelled blindly to follow in the beaten track of their fathers?" If so, surely "these are the men, and wisdom will die with them."

Mr. Editor, as there is another, yes, another able pen, employed in defence of the "Restrictive Rule," we will perhaps receive some new light on the subject.

Very respectfully,
JOHN SCOTT.

Fairview, Va., April 24.

Singular Circumstance.

A man residing in Boston, who has always maintained an unblemished character for sobriety and regular habits, the other day drew $500 from a bank, put the money in his pocket, took a cab and drove away. He was absent two or three days, when he returned, covered with mud and filth, but could give no account of where he had been, and the money which he took from the bank was gone. Within a day or two he has received a letter from a relative in Maine, acknowledging the receipt of $500, and enquiring what disposition is to be made of the money.—The only plausible explanation of the affair is that while in an insane state of mind he sent the money to his uncle: and, as he was, soon after his return, attacked with brain fever, it may, perhaps, be supposed with some degree of plausibility that he was all the while under the effect of the fever, which had not then developed itself.

Never Violate the Sabbath.—It was advertised that the American Atlantic steamer Washington would leave New York for Liverpool on the 20th of February. When it was found that the 20th was the Sabbath, not only Christians, but the secular newspapers remonstrated. The agent said he had no authority to make the change, and so she must leave on Sunday. The morning arrived, and at 8 o'clock the Washington left the dock. In the meanwhile, such a dense fog rose and obscured the city and harbor, that it was impossible for her to move with safety. After going a short distance, she dropped her anchors off Castle Garden, and remained there during the day. The next morning, the sun rose in a clear, bright atmosphere, and the "Washington" once more started successfully from her moorings on her voyage. It has since been officially announced, that no more steamers of this line will sail on Sunday.

The Diamond.

The diamond is the chief of stones, the hardest and most luminous, even phosphoric in the dark. Among the ancients the perfect crystals were alone valued. They were not aware of that property which enables modern diamond-workers to produce such brilliancy; viz: the use of its own powder as the cutting agent; many stones which, with our skill, are of enormous value, would have been rejected by them. Though said by Pliny to be so hard as to indent the hammer that strikes rather than break, in the direction of its axis of crystallization it fractures readily. This quality is used in the first stage of manufacture. It was in the year 1476 that Louis de Berghem, of Bruges, first discovered the property of powdered diamonds, and the mode of application. Roses and table diamonds were the only kinds that he produced. The most perfect shape for reflection or refraction of light is that which is called the brilliant, being two truncated pyramids united at their bases; the upper bearing of the lower in height above the girdle or line of junction the proportion of five to ten, leaving the plane of truncation, or the culet of the lower pyramid one-fifth the superficies of the upper, or as for distinction it is termed the table. The sides of the upper pyramid are covered with triangular facets; those which have their base on the base of the pyramid are called skill-facets; those radiating from the table are called star-facets. These in a well cut stone meet half way down the sides. The lower pyramid is similarly treated—the skill-facets being to the culet-facets as three to two in length.

This is the best form for bringing out the brilliancy of the diamond; if the sides are too perpendicular, the light is radiated from the eye of the spectator; if too horizontal, a flatness of lustre arises, for the light passes more easily thro' the crystal in the direction of its poles than transversely through its liminæ; it is therefore in a thin brilliant less reflected. Experience has found that the discovery of larger diamonds bears a fixed proportion to that of smaller, so that the price is regulated accordingly—the rule of calculation being that as the square of the weights so must be the value.

So jealous are Indians of the size of their diamonds, that when they work them they make the facets follow the form in which the stone is found, be it a perfect or imperfect crystal; but rather than this small loss, they frequently are content with them unwrought. Stones of extraordinary size are claimed as the property of the Prince, and transmitted as heir-looms, through generations, a small dot being made on some part of the stone by each possessor.

The finest collection of gems in the world is in the possession of the Shah of Persia, obtained by the plunder of Delhi about two centuries ago. Cardinal Mazarin, in the reign of Louis XIV, was the first who wore a brilliant. This truly scientific arrangement is, therefore, but of modern invention. Extraordinary value attaches to some diamonds. The largest diamond in the world is in the possession of the Great Mogul, in form and size equal to half a hen's egg, weighing about 700 carets; supposing it to be worked and fine, giving £8 as the value of a single caret stone, and applying the rule of geometrical progression, the result is enormous. The next in size is the Brazilian diamond, in the possession of the King of Portugal, weighing 215 carets.—The third is an oriental diamond, bought by Catherine, Empress of Russia, for £90.000, and an annuity of £4.000. The fourth is the Pitt or Regent diamond, bought by the Duke of Orleans for £100.000, now in the crown of France. To those of merely material conceptions, such values may be indications of folly; but to those who regard gems as symbols of ideas, as without doubt they have been, and even now are held, money seems to be but a poor parallel.

The supplies of Europe are chiefly drawn from Brazil. The famed mines of Golconda are no longer worked, and but a limited quantity, in value £100,000 per year, is still sent from Allahabad, in Hindoostan. The great influx of diamonds which followed their discovery in South America, alarmed the holders about the year 1736, lest diamonds should become as plentiful as pebble stones. They fell greatly in value, but have since regained their worth, and have for years maintained a value rather increasing than diminishing with the growing wealth of the world. —History and Object of Jewelry.

The Jesuits.—This able but mischievous body of men, seem to be becoming unpopular in all parts of Europe. Lately the cause of serious civil conflicts in Switzerland, and losing their power in France in consequence of the late Revolution; the spiritual father and temporal prince of Rome has ordered their speedy departure from the territories of the Church in Italy; and the Austrian government has commenced their expulsion from that empire. Where they will go, is as yet uncertain, as is perhaps, as yet, the question whether they can be driven out. Hitherto the effect of decrees of expulsion has been only to produce temporary concealment, but it is now evident that those measures of avoidance which have heretofore been effectual will no longer be so. Something new must be done or they will be forced to abdicate.

It has been suggested that the order contemplates an emigration to China, a country where they once possessed great influence, which, it is thought, may be regained.—Ohio State Journal.

Marriage of the Lakes and the ATLANTIC!

The Toledo Blade gives an account of the Arrival Extraordinary of the first Atlantic Steamer, at that port.

This vessel will run from the Ocean to Chicago. Her arrival is an Era in the history of the West. It heralds Internal Trade, when combined with our mighty rivers, which has never before existed on earth. The Blade says:

An Atlantic steamer, the "Free Trader" lies in our harbor. She arrived this morning from Montreal, which port she left on Wednesday, of last week, stopping by the way, at Hamilton, on Lake Ontario, and Port Stanley and Cleveland on this Lake, making the trip, exclusive of stoppages, in less than six days. The Free Trader is built expressly for Lake and Atlantic trade, and will run as occasion requires, to any ports between Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Chicago, Illinois. What a world we live in! Here is over two thousand miles of river, canal and Lake navigation, for vessels and steamboats of a respectable size; and the vast and increasing products of our Western El Dorados, can be transported from the extreme end of Lake Michigan to any part of the world, with but a single transhipment on the Atlantic Sea Board.

The Free Trader has capacity for the stowage of 35 bbls. Flour; is propelled by a low pressure engine of 75 horse power, and her speed is 12 miles per hour. Her engine is placed in the stern, so as to enable her free passage through the Welland Canal. She is owned and was built by Messrs. Hooker, Horton & Co., of Montreal, and was launched three weeks since. Success to her.

"God Loveth a Cheerful Giver."

"How is it, Betty," said an elder of the church to a poor woman in Wales, who was always observed to contribute something whenever a collection was taken; "how is it I always see you drop something in the plate? where do you get it?"

"Oh, sir, I do not know," she replied; "the Lord knows my heart and my good-will to his cause; and somehow or other, when a collection is to be made, I am sure to have my penny before me; and when it comes, I put it in the plate."

"Well," said he "you have been faithful in a little take this sovereign and do what you will with it.'

"A sovereign, sir," said she; "I never had so much money in my life as a sovereign; what shall I do with it?"

"I dare say you will find means of spending it," said he; "if your heart is devoted to the Lord's cause."

Soon after this a man came round to solicit subscriptions for some benevolent object; he went to one of the elders, who gave him half a sovereign, and another gave him five shillings; both of which were regarded as very liberal donations. Not liking to pass by any member of the church, he asked this poor woman what she would do.

"Put my name down for a sovereign."

"A sovereign!" said he; "why, where did you get a sovereign from?"

"Oh, sir," said she, "I got it honestly: put my name down for a sovereign."

She gave him the sovereign and in about two weeks from that time, she received a letter from Doctors Commons, informing her that a friend had just left her one hundred pounds.

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."—Prov. ix., 25, 26.

Self-Culture.

You all have time to cultivate your minds, if you only go systematically to work. Lay out your plans and follow them up closely, and you will be surprised at your attainments. If you lack system in your efforts, you will be likely to come short of your object, and be discouraged.

A Rat Powder.

A correspondent of the Albany Cultivator recommends the following for rats, of which he relates this story:

"I once, however, did 'see' a tame rat, (in Edinburgh, at the back of the Castle, in the year 1837,) which, having been previously smeared with a certain composition—that which I am about to describe—was let loose in a vault, and in less than half an hour returned followed by some half dozen others, which seemed so enamored of the decoy, or of the scent that hung about him, that they suffered themselves to be taken alive in the rat-catcher's hands without ever offering to bite. The preparation I purchased from an eminent practitioner in rat-catching. It is as follows: Powdered asafœtida, one quarter of a gram; essential oil of rhodium, three drachms; essential oil of lavender, one scruple; oil of aniseed, one dracm."

Anecdote of the Late Judge Davis.

Not many months before the death of this great and good man, on the occasion of a dinner party at his house, at which Mr. Justice Story and other eminent jurists and lawyers were present, the conversation turned upon the advantages of the different periods of life. Some thought that the seasons of youth & manhood were fullest of enjoyment, and others gave the preference, for solid satisfaction, to the period of age. Judge Davis did not state his opinion until he was invited to do so; and then, in that calm and benign manner for which he was remarkable, he said: "In the warm season of the year it is my delight to be in the country, and every pleasant evening while I am there, I love to sit at the window, and look upon some beautiful trees which grow near my house. The murmuring of the wind thro' the branches, the gentle play of the leaves, and the flickering of light upon them, when the moon is up, fill me with an indiscribable pleasure. As the autumn comes on, I feel very sad to see those leaves falling one by one; but when they are all gone, I find that they were only a screen before my eyes; for I experience a new and higher satisfaction as I gaze through the naked branches at the glorious stars beyond."—Boston Traveller.

Benevolent Contributions.—The total amount of contributions during the past year to the American Bible, Tract, Home Missionary, Seaman's Friend, Board of Foreign Missions, Colinization, Anti-Slavery, Foreign Evangelical, General Assembly's Board of Missions, Protestant, Jews, New York Institution for the Blind, American and Foreign Bible Society, Union Missionary, and Home Missionary, is $1,276,951.—Neal's Gaz.

Coal Mines of Ohio.—The coal rigion of Ohio embraces Columbiana, Belmont, Jefferson, Stark Holmes, Tuscarawas, Carroll, Harrison, Coshocton, Muskingum, Guernsey, Monroe, Morgan, Washington, Athens, Meigs, Gallia, Lawrence, and parts of nine other counties, the whole comprehending nearly one third of the State. The aggregate quantity mined annually for export, which is at but few points on the river and canal is between four and five million bushels. I have no doubt this quantity will be multiplied five fold in less than ten years. At present the only considerable mining operations are in the summit county, which supplies Cleveland and the Lake. Athens, which exports to Lancaster, Columbus, Chilicothe and Circleville; and Pomeroy, which supplies steamboats extensively, as well as contributes to the coal market of Cincinnati.—The consumption of Cleveland alone is 932,180 bushels anually, equal at present to consumption of all Ohio besides, if we exclude Cincinnati.

Besides the Pomeroy coal, we consume here Wheeling and Pitusbugh coal, in vast quantities. I make the consumption of Cincinnati, after referring to the Pomeroy sales here, the measurer's report of upper Ohio coal, and the other data, to be 4,900,000 bushels. This may seem large, but when it is recollected that we consumed all of two million bushels in 1840, as appears by that year's statistics, I am convinced it is within the fact—our manufactures having almost trebled since.—Cist's Adv.

Sad Accident.—A laboring man named Mr. Murphy was killed yesterday in Diamond Alley by the unexpected explosion of a blast in which he was engaged in blowing up. The blast hung fire so long that he supposed it had failed, and incautiously approached and was leaning over it, when the explosion occurred, tearing his head to fragments. He left a wife and family.—Pitts. Com. Jour.

DR. LE ROY'S
Wild Cherry, and Sarsaparilla PILLS.

DR. LE ROY has most happily succeeded in combining Wild Cherry and Sarsaparilla with other vegetable ingredients, so as to produce a medicine at once tonic, and purgative, the only perfect discovery of the kind ever made. Their great peculiar excellence, and that which distinguishes them from all other purnatives is, that their operation is followed by no re-action. Their unrivalled purifying and purgative properties, for which they are indebted to the essence of Sarsaparilla, and other ingredients, being controlled by their highly tonic virtues, derived from the extract of Wild Cherry, they do not strain the digestive organs into action, as is the mode of operation with other cathartics, but on the contrary strengthen them into action. Thus all other purgative medicines produce more or less subsequent costiveness; and sluggishness of the gastric juice, while Dr. Le Roy's Pills leave all the machinery of the system full of life and activity, and the bowels open and natural. "Hence," writes Dr. Cheeseman, "they are the only active purgative which I can recommend with confidence, and without alarm; for they remove nothing but what ought to be removed—neither rack, nor strain—occasion no apathy or debilitation—and leave the bowels free, open, and vigorous." But the great virtue of Dr. Le Roy's Pills—the virtue which has spread their fame over the two hemispheres with a rapidity almost miraculous—lies in their purification of the blood. Here they not only stand altogether unrivalled, but fill up the measure of desire. They at once arrest the formation of bad blood, by removing all impurities from the chyle, of which the blood is formed; and moreover keep it clean, by toning and strengthing the digestive organs, so as to be able to exclude from it all matter of an innutricious nature; and then they purify the blood already in circulation; and never cease operation until it is entirely free from every noxious particle & full of health, life, and vigor. THE CHRISTIAN WREATH

Is published monthly as a RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY PERIODICAL, each number containing 32 octavo pages, with new and beautiful type, and embellished with fine MEZZOTINT and STEEL PLATES, and COLORED ENGRAVINGS of Flowers, Birds, &c. The Publisher intends to issue it with regularity and promptness, and to use his best exertions to make its pages highly interesting and instructive, and thus to secure for it the kind regards of the moral and religious part of the community.

The design of this work is to take the place, in some measure, if possible, of the trashy, frivolous, and in some instances corrupting issues, that are now constantly teeming from the press and deluging the land; and to contribute its quota in the efforts that are making to wake up in the minds of the people a taste for more ennobling, elevating, and pure literature, being fully persuaded of the beneficial results that must follow such efforts, if successful. In these efforts, the publisher and editor earnestly asks the co-operation and influence of those gentlemen, clergy and others, who desire to see a wholesome and sound literature pervade the land, and take the place of that which is not only useless but highly injurious. Art, science, and beauty will be made to contribute their share to the pages of the Wreath, and to go hand in hand in the advancement of Religion, with which they are, more or less, inseparably connected.

TERMS.—The Christian Wreath will be furnished as follows:—1 copy, one year, for $1,00—4 copies, one year for $3,00—7 copies, one year, for $5,00—12 copies, one year, for $8,00—18 copies, one year, for $10,. The volume begins with January.

☞ We have prepared this volume at great expense; the type large, clear and handsome; paper smooth and white; binding strong and substantial; engravings neat and appropriate. This work is decidedly the cheapest and most popular ever issued from the American press; and, from the orders already received for it, we are satisfied it is destined to have an immense sale throughout our vast extended country. From peculiar circumstances we are able to offer this book extremely low to book-pedlars, postmasters, and others, who may feel disposed to act as agents.

☞ The principles of morality and of a well-regulated FREEDOM are introduced with sufficient frequency throughout its pages; the editor exercising a careful discrimination, while honestly desirous of enlarging its circumference, not to admit within the circle the elements of licentiousness, to which we are liable in the present state of society. Let every parent remember it is to an EDUCATION wisely and liberally provided for our people, America owes her proud superiority over other nations. This will preserve a love of freedom, and detestation of oppression, pure and unadulterated, in the young and rising generation.

☞ As the publisher is desirous of giving this useful Family Work a very extensive circulation, he 'offers the most liberal inducements to Agents,' and is satisfied that any man of good address can make from FIVE to TEN DOLLARS A DAY from the sale of it. There is scarcely a town or village in the Union but will furnish more or less subscribers. A small capital, of from $25 to $100, will be necessary to make a commencement.

LINES,

On the death of John R. T. Widney, infant son of S. W. and M. J. Widney, who died June 16th, 1847, and was interred near Mosequau's village, Miami Reserve.

Rest, tender infant, calmly rest,
As erst upon thy mother's breast;
No writhing pains, no earthly woes
Shall ever break thy deep repose.

Sleep, lovely child, serenely sleep;
Though o'er thy grave we fondly weep,
Yet our affliction's bitter cup
Is mixed with the sweet balm of hope.

What though around thy little grave,
The tall dark forest trees may wave;
What though the prowling wolf may howl,
In concert with the gloomy owl.

Sweet sleeper, thou hast nought to fear,
The angel band is hovering near,
True to their Heaven committed trust,
Watching around thy sleeping dust.

Soon too shall we, who o'er thee weep,
With thee in death's embraces sleep;
Soon with our lovely babe arise,
To live forever in the skies.

The Politics of Christianity.

NO. VIII.

LETTER INTERPRETED BY SPIRIT.

We have done with the Object of Civil Government—its structure claims notice from us now. The design of the machine having been ascertained, we pass on, in natural order to inspect the nature of the machinery. We are to learn, if possible, what Christianity teaches on that head.

Let us, then, start with as clear an understanding as may be of what we are to look after. It is obvious that the worth of our conclusions will be very mainly dependent upon the character of our aim. If, for example, we strain ingenuity to discover in the system of revealed truth, intimations which, when torn from their natural connexion, and peiced together, may furnish us with a complete scriptural model of civil government, we may spend on the task prodigious labor without finding any adequate reward in its results. The steam-engine will be searched for in vain amongst the objects of nature. The various contrivances by which its movements are adjusted, are exclusively of human origin, altho' suggested in certain particulars, it may be, by natural phenomena. But, as in the case of the steam-engine, a thorough acquaintance with the laws of the material world, may throw much light upon the fitness of the mechanism to accomplish the end introduced by it, so a correct knowledge and application of the principles of Christianity, may help us to a sound judgment of the value of the several forms into which man's wisdom or folly has thrown civil governments.—Now, something like this is what we are about to attempt, in a few following papers. We shall bring under the consideration of our readers certain moral laws, found in Divine revelation, in perfect harmony with which all forms of State-rule ought to be framed.

There is, we suspect, a vague feeling abroad, that Christianity has directly sanctioned, or proscribed, certain systems for the government of mankind.—All are human contrivances, more or less adapted to answer the end in view—mere mechanism put together by man's ingenuity.—In particular conditions of society, and at special junctures, each may be found superior to the others—none can claim for itself as a form divine authority.

Why, then, it may be asked, consult Christianity upon the subject at all? Why seek a response from the oracle when you know already that upon the subject mooted it is silent? Why intimate that you will ascertain what revelation teaches on a question respecting which you acknowledge revelation teaches nothing? Softly! softly, gentle reader—and we will furnish you with an answer.

In olden times, as you well now, knowledge was transmitted from one generation to another by means of manuscript. Books, accordingly, were few and dear. Men possessed of more than one volume were singularly favored. Rich indeed was he who could boast of a library containing twelve. In due time printing succeeded writing—the pen was supplanted by the press.—Imagine, now, a controversy to have arisen, as to the scriptural lawfulness of the new method of fixing and transmitting human ideas. Imagine religious men contending for the divine sanction given in the Bible to the simpler, earlier and more elaborate mode of transferring the product of mind to paper. Should we not be right in saying that, considered merely as different methods of doing the same thing, Christianity knows nothing of them, and that writing with a style on vellum, or with a goose-quill on paper, or with fixed or moveable type by means of the printing press, are matters in themselves considered, about which it is supremely indifferent? And yet, having said this, might we not gain some light in reference to the comparative superiority of the one to the other by taking into account some of the leading characteristics of revealed truth—the obligation it imposes, the motive it seeks to excite, the ends it is designed to obtain, the means by which it will compass them, the deep interest which all have in its blessings, the responsibility of each to all for diffusing them—might not these and many similar topics peculiar to Christianity be urged to prove that the adaptation of the printing press to multiply the means of knowledge and add wings to those who proclaim the everlasting Gospel places it under the special sanction of Christianity? And should man's genius hereafter discover some method of reaching the same end by means as superior to the steam-press as the steam-press is to the pen, might not the same considerations avail to recommend the substitution of the more for the less efficient instrument? Thus while Scripture is silent on the subject of machinery, it yet abounds with instruction which, wisely applied, may teach us how and why to prefer this form above that. And in what circumstances to be thankful for either.

The case of civil government is precisely analagous. They who contend for one form of government as having the sanction of revelation rather than another, because it is the form commonly met with in sacred history, might just as reasonably esteem writing on parchment a more religious act than printing on paper. The last decision would not be a little more absurd than the first. We affirm that Christianity recognizes no form of government,—as such denounces none. Yet does it contain great principles of equiety, justice, and benevolence,—teach important truth regarding man's nature, position and destiny—impose weighty obligations of individual and social morality—and proceed upon the recognition of elementary laws affecting our destiny as responsible and immortal beings—all of which may help us to determine whether the machinery of civil government, as constituted in our own times, is in unison with the objects and spirit of Divine revelation. We are to look at the structure, not with a view to pronounce which form—this or that—is Scriptural—but, bearing in mind what Christianity is, and what it purports to do, we are to fill our hearts with those of its instructions, which will best qualify us to judge of any, and every form which may come before us.

Ministerial.

A Pastor's Musings on a Saturday Night.

To-morrow is the blessed day of rest, and I must again stand up before my people as an ambassador of Christ to preach the everlasting Gospel; O that I may be faithful in this ardous and awfully responsible duty. May the Holy Spirit abundantly aid my weakness by His Almighty power.

During the whole week my people have been continually present to my mind. Every day and every night I have thought of them. Every family, if not every individual, has been remembered in my prayers. In preparing my sermons for the Sabbath, I have endeavored mainly to think of my wants. I have prayed to be directed to such texts, and such meditations as would be most suitable to their case. I long, O how earnestly I do long for their salvation. Help, me Lord, to set before the plainly them truth as it is in Jesus.

I have had much to grieve me through the past week. O how little do people know of their minister's trials. The responsibility alone, is enough to weigh one down. To have precious souls depending upon us to teach them the way of eternal life, is surely enough to call forth every energy and awaken every feeling of the soul. Alas! I well know that I come far short of my duty, and have great need to repent, and redouble my efforts. I am pained because so little good seems to be doing amongst us. I do strive rightly to divide the words of truth. I call upon believers to watch and pray, to labor faithfully in their Master's service, to live near to Christ by faith—and to show out of a good conversation their works with meekness of wisdom. I call upon sinners to repent and turn from their evil ways. I tell them of Christ's love and power to save. I warn them of the dreadful consequences of sin, and entreat them to escape the wrath to come. I weep over them in secret, and pray that God would have mercy upon them; but for all this sinners seem unusually careless and even believers—the spiritual members of the flock, appear to have lost their deep interest in the things of God. I fear lest I am to blame in this matter; O that I may be delivered from blood guiltiness

I have heard this week of two of my communicants, who, by their omissions of duty and evil lives, have given great occasion for the enemies of God to blaspheme. This grieves me more than all, that the Savior should be wounded in the house of his friends. "For this," with the prophet, I can say, "mine eye runneth down with water." Like Peter, may they bitterly weep, and truly repent them of their doings. I often feel as if I should have to answer for the sins of others. I have been told that Dr. Pilmore used often to say, in view of the responsibility resting upon the ministry: "I sometimes wonder how a minister of the Gospel can save his own soul." If our help was not in the name of the Lord, we should indeed fail.

I should like to known whether my people pray for me, if they think of me daily and hourly, as I think of them; what a comfort it would be to me if I could believe that I am daily remember by them at the throne of grace. This night particularly I wonder if they are lifting up their hearts for God's blessing upon the services of the morrow, that precious souls might be saved, and believers strengthened in their holy faith.—If they are, who can tell, perhaps to-morrow may prove a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. I have great confidence in the prayers of God's people offered up in faith. And who has more need of their earnest, hearty continued prayers, than the Christian minister? Though the Pastor is unusually sad to-night in view of the past; I trust a brighter day is about to dawn upon us. I am thankful for the promise and I sincerely believe it, "In due season ye shall reap if ye faint not." Lord keep me from growing weary in thy service. Thy grace is sufficient for me. H. B.

Western Sketches.

From the Oberlin Evangelist.

Journey to the West.—With Incidents and Observations.

BY PROF. THOME.

"But by constraint
Wandering this darksome desert, as my way
Lies through your spacious Empire up to light."

We experienced, on nearing St. Louis, that singular sensation arising from sudden extreme contrast—the contrast between the wild, cultureless aspect of the shores, from the mouth of the Ohio upward, and the magnificent phenomenon which burst upon our vision—the second city of the West.

We are strongly reminded of the only other instance in which we ever enjoyed, in travelling, the same excitement, to any very high degree, a sketch of which we beg leave to introduce here, as it may serve to illustrate our meaning in the present case.

About ten years prior to the period of which we are now writing, we left the harbor of New York, in the middle of November, bound for the West Indies. Our last view of land, as we sped to sea before an outward gale, was the cheerless one of a snow storm, enshrouding earth and sky, while the wild wail of the roaring winds and waters, answering to the gloom of our own solitary heart, rendered the scene doubly funereal. A stiff chilly gale—sometimes too stiff for a rag of canvass, and too chilly to dispense with a fire in the cabin, drove us fearfully over the boiling sea, and continuing with little abatement most of the voyage, landed us in nine days at the Danish Island of St. Thomas. With the howling snow blast, and the wintry aspect of our native coast still in mind, and with toes scarce relieved from the benumbing cold of the middle passage, we stepped upon the wharf and entered the port town of the Island, amid singing birds, waving trees, and exuberant gardens, verdant with summer foliage and fragrant with every odoriferous flower. Every object that met the sight, stationary or in motion, was, in the widest possible manner, contrasted with the scene behind us. Danish soldiers from the neighboring fort, indolently lounging in the shade, bare-head slaves chatting at the corners in a mongrel tongue, huxters in the market and beneath the awning chaffering with the country slaves for the tray of corn meal or peck of sweet potatoes brought from miles distant upon the head, at once a covering and a load, little negroes skipping half naked through the throng, tawny colored women clad in white, with turban head-dress and parasol, exhibiting that listless look and slip shod gait peculiar to the creole females of the West Indies, open windows that never saw a sash or a pane of glass, with heavy, close shutters for hurricanes, else swung back day and night, green verandahs, verdant bowers, ever and anon fruit stalls with oranges, bananas, plantains and pine apples, and around all, the flashing, brilliant light of a sun that knows no winter obliquity—such a glowing midsummer panorama expanding upon the retina, whose latest impression was that of a bleak and shrubless coast, from which every green thing and every flitting bird had disappeared, produced an excitement of the most pleasurable description. It was like a dream—We seemed in a fairy land. How could it be a reality! Yet the perspiration on our brows from walking to the hotel, satisfied us that it was all a reality. The almost delirium of excitement experienced in this case, was produced by the sudden transition from winter to summer, from barrenness to bloom; from the death of nature to its fullest life.

In the case which we are about to describe, the sensations were very much the same, and the contrast was similar; though the materials, so to speak, composing the extremes, were entirely different. He who journeys through a wilderness, from the force of a natural propensity, stronger often than the convictions of the intelligence, expects only more dreary scenes, and is surprised when, after days of such forlorn progress through increasing sterrility, an Eden of beauty and fertility breaks upon the view.

There is scarcely a spot along the Mississippi, from the junction of the Ohio to St. Louis, to relieve the monotony. A long, low, level, marshy margin, untouched, for the most part, by the hand of cultivation, constitutes the shore of the Father of waters, save when his turbid flood swells beyond its wonted dimensions, and rolls for miles over the descending swamps back to the bluffs, fitter ramparts to the giant stream.—Occasionally these craggy bluffs relieve the dead level of the shore, by obtruding their everlasting barriers upon the water's edge, or jutting boldly out into a point; but usually they retreat more or less distant, with a low interval subject to inundation, and for this reason seldom cultivated or inhabited. This circumstance robs the traveller on this river of that contrast between the free and slave States which is to be seen on the Ohio. Illinois and Missouri are alike unpeopled and unimproved along the great river. It is very rare that there is a favorable spot for a village or a farm on either side. No inquisitive traveller, perhaps, ever, for the first time, swept around the point of Illinois, from the Ohio into the upper Mississippi, without exclaiming, what a noble spot for a large city! but on enquiry, he learns that the splendid city site is often several feet under water.

We have been inclined to wonder, since we have seen the newspaper accounts of Barnard's Panorama of the Mississippi, how the artist could have found, amid the monotony, the revolting flatness, and the dismal wildness—dismal we say, for wildness, sometimes is picturesque, that variety and life essential to the effect of a painting. But he has the advantage of crowding upon his three miles of canvass, the few points of interest which lie scattered along the almost interminable coast stretching from St. Louis to N. Orleans, the most of which, it may be added, are to be found below the mouth of the Ohio.

In ploughing the soap-suds waters of the Mississippi between such gloomy wildernesses, it is almost impossible to resist the conviction, that you are exploring some hitherto undiscovered country, some half chaotic world of mud, and that you are destined to land, if land you dare, where slimy monsters will affright you, and hideous goblins of all doleful shapes will dispute your right to set foot upon their shore.

It is just as these morbid fancies begin to assume consistency, that the brilliant vision of a great city, rising "like an exhalation," relieves and charms you, while it fills you in spite of yourself with wonder that such a product of advanced civilization and refinement, should be the terminus of a route lying through the dominion of mineral nature. Such was the sensation with which we beheld St. Louis.

If the reader would see the thought which we have been so poorly developing in this letter, poetically drawn by the great master, we would refer him to the latter part of the second book of Paradise Lost—descriptive of Satans' first voyage through the Empire of Chaos, in quest of Earth:

"Nigh foundered, on he fares,
Treading the crude consistence, half on foot,
Half flying—
O'er bog or steps, through strait, rough, dense or rare,
With head, hands, wings or feet, pursues his way,
And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies.

* * * * * *

But now at last the sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heaven
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn."

Temperance Department.

THE BAD LUMP.

The following incident we relate on the authority of the old sailor, who delivered a temperance lecture on board a steamboat running between New York and New Haven.

Having found a man who was divested of all decent clothing, and in a wretched state of health in consequence of drinking, he induced him, amidst the discouragements of the tavern-keeper, at whose house he found him, to sign the temperance pledge for one year. The landlord prophesied that he would not keep the pledge a year, or that if he did he would never renew it. As the year was coming to a close, the old sailor called upon the man, and secured his signature again. He signed it for 999 years, with the privilege of a life lease afterward! When the day arrived upon which his first pledge expired, he roguishly went to visit his old friend the tavern-keeper.—"There he comes," (said the eager rum seller,) "he will have a great spree now to pay for his long abstinence." When arrived at the tavern, he complained of a bad feeling at his stomach, and of various evils, among which was a bad lump on one side, which had been growing for a number of months. "Ah," said the landlord, "did I not tell you it would kill you to break off drinking so suddenly? I wonder you have lived as long as you have. Come, what will you take?" and suiting the action to the world he placed a decanter before him.

'But said the visiter,' I have signed the pledge again for 999 years, with the privilege of a life lease after it!'

"What a fool!" said the landlord; "If you go on as you have done, you will not live another year."

"Do you really think so landlord!"

"Certainly. Come, what will you take!"

"Oh no, landlord; I have signed the pledge again, and then this terrible lump on my side.—I do not believe that drinking will make it any better."

"It is all," said the landlord, "because you left off drinking. You will have a bigger lump than that on the other side before long, if you continue another year as the last."

'Do you think I will? Well, then so be it.—I will not violate my pledge, for look here, landlord (pulling out a great purse with a hundred dollars in silver shining through the interstices,) that is my lump which has been growing for so many months and, as you say, is all in consequence of signing the pledge. This is what you would have had, if I had not signed it; and it I have a bigger one than that for 999 years, I will not go to drinking again!"

GEOLOGY.

BY JOSIAH HOLBROOK.

Geography, Geometry and Geology, are all derived from the Greek word ge, signifying earth or the world, Grapho, meaning to write or describe, added to ge, makes Geography, or a description of the earth. Logos, meaning a word or discourse added, forms Geology, or a discourse about the earth. Metron, meaning measure, added, forms Geometry, or the measure of the earth. The specific objects of these three sisters sciences are to describe, analyze and measure the earth. Geography tells us the places, and Geology the ingredients, of mountains, islands and continents. The one tells where the Andes mountains are, the other what they are. Hence the one is essential to a full knowledge of the other.

The editor of the New York Tribune, after witnessing, by visits to the schools of the City of New York, the great interest and intelligence, even in very young children, in the specimens of Geology exhibited to them, inquires emphatically, "What more rational or appropriate starting point in the race after knowledge, can be selected, than the elements of our globe?" at the same time adding, "that every person in the world ought to know of what the world is made; especially as this information can be acquired at a very early age, and with the greatest ease and delight."

Ten simple minerals are the elements of all mountains, rocks, and soils; and hence are called the "Geological Alphabet." These minerals variously combined from about twenty-five different kinds of rocks. The names of these minerals and the rocks which they compose, can be learned easily by children. The knowledge thus obtained is of the most substantial, as well as interesting character; and the more substantial and interesting, because very young children not only may, but do, both learn and prepare this fundamental lesson of knowledge for themselves.

The first time a little child picks up a pebble, he learns the most important lesson that can be learned in this very interesting and useful science. This pebble is one of the most important letters in the Geological Alphabet. It is called quartz, and is the only mineral found every where. It enters more largely into rocks, mountain, and soils, than any other, and also forms, under different colors and textures, much the greatest portion of gems, used as ornaments, and articles of commerce, in all ages of the world. The twelve precious stones placed in the breastplate of Aaron, the High Priest, were varieties of quartz, as were those named in the book of Revelations, as forming the streets of the New Jesuralem. Quartz is also essential in the manufacture of glass, of every variety.

As quartz, the first and most important letter in the Geological Alphabet, also one of the most instructive and interesting things in the world, is found every where, we invite every child in every school and family to look for it, as he will most certainly find it, and as certainly learn it. It is very hard, and scratches glass. It also has a great many colors, and is sometimes beautifully crystalized, with six sides. Frequently the middle ofthe crystal is a six-sided prism, and the two ends six-sided pyramids.

Great quantities of quartz crystals are collected by the children at Little Falls, New York, and sold to travelers under the name of "Diamonds." Red quartz, with a fine texture, is called jasper; when purple, it is called amethyst; if clouded, agate; if yellow, cornelian, or perhaps topaz; when of a pearly lustre, it is called opal.—Sabbath Recorder.

Wonderful Instincts of Coral Insects.

Most of the coral reefs are built in the form of a crescent or the segment of a circle, with the back to the sea, as if the little architects were aware of the properties of the arch, and knew that it would resist the dashing of the waves better than a straight line. The back of the coral crescent is generally directed towards the quarter from which storms frequently come. The care taken to work perpendicularly in the early stages of their operations would also mark a surprising instinct in these diminutive creatures. Their wall of coral, for the most part built in situations where the winds are constant, having arrived at their surface affords a shelter to leeward of which their infant colonies may be safely sent forth; to this their instinctive foresight, it seems to be owing, that the windward side of a coral reef exposed to the open sea, is generally, if not always, the highest part, rising almost perpendicularly, sometimes from the depth of 200 fathoms.

From the Golden Rule.

A VOICE FROM THE WEST.

Dear Sir—It is well known and understood,
That stubborn facts, somestimes, best demonstrate Important truth; which must be known and felt,
Reclaiming men from sin, its work reform,
This worthy object I intend to gain. * * * *

And here I wish to state one other fact,
This happened at a time when Synod met;
Composed of Presbyterian ministers,
And delegates from different churches met,
Of different stamps, of schools, both new and old;
Which formed a judicatory supreme.
And here I cast my eye around to see,
How many of them I had seen before;
And as I looked, I felt surprised to find
So many jaws in quick succession move.
Another fact, I could not help observe,
That those who most inclined to chew and spit,
Had gathered round the stove, and there let drive,
At every crack and crevice, which they filled:
And one among the rest, the most expert,
I eyed more close, and then enquired his name;
His mouth he'd fill, and quick distill, then pour
The rill, as from a Hill, with force to kill.
I sought a chance with him alone, which soon
Occurred, while he was in the act again,
Of filling up his mouth. I asked, "are you
A minister of Jesus Christ? he said, "I am."
How then can you, be true to him,
Indulging in a habit of this kind?
"Well, then, a question I'll propose to you.
Do you profess to be a Christian, sir?"
I do, "How do you manage then with this,
'Be not a busybody in others
Matters?'" This is the way I manage sir,
By keeping steadily in view, this great
Command. "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke
Thy neighbor, and not suffer sin on him,"
"Of some compassion have, a difference make,
And others save with fear, and pull them from
The fire, and hate the garments spotted by,
The flesh."—"Your duty then is done, as I
Suppose."—if sir, you have the least desire,
I'll help to pull you from the fire
"Away," he said, "I'll hear no more,
Then quickly hastened out of door.

How to Prosper.

1. Rise early; begin and end the day with God, always.

2 Be active; whatever you undertake, drive it—drive it through, with your might: don't falter.

3. Mind your own business. Some people interfere, dabble, in other men's matters. Stop it.

4. Be diligent; don't lounge. There are many loungers now-a-days; street talkers. Some Christians, (so called,) lounge about, and gabble nonsense! Man, take your name from the church book—scratch it off, quick, else repent, and do your first work.

5. Work with your own hands; take off your gloves—take them off—"A cat in gloves catches no mice."

6. Be frugal: "Gather up the fragments."—Frugality will enable you to be liberal. Very many are always poor, because they are wasteful, extravagant.

7. Be polite to everybody, kind, very: there's nothing like it. A single look of love, smile, a nod, a grasp of the hand, has gained more friends, than both wealth and learning. Some are stiff, morose, sour, crabbed, crusty! Run, run for your life!—Golden Rule.

More Stabbing.—Three men in company attacked an Irishman out the Fourth street road last Sunday. The Irishman defended himself bravely, and finally beat off his antagonists, although severely stabbed in several places.

The Irishman we are informed, offered no provocation. The man who stabbed him is known as "Balty." He has not been arrested.—Cincinnati Commercial.

How to avoid Quarrels.

The Rev. J. Clark, of Rome, was asked how he always kept himself from being involved in quarrels, to which he replied, "By letting the angry person have all the quarrel to himself."—This afterwards became a proverb in the town. When a quarrel was rising, they would say,—"Come, let us remember Mr. Clarke, and leave the angry man to quarrel himself." If the reader will always follow this rule, he will save himself a great deal of trouble, and perhaps many hard knocks. Remember, it always takes two to quarrel.

Seek Religion while Young.

Let no one think, that there is greater difficulty in becoming a Christian in childhood, than there is at a later period of life. There is much less. If any one wanted a tree in front of his house, would he go and dig and transplant a great tree, with a tall heavy trunk, wide-spreading branches, and great roots running deep into the ground? He might possibly do it; but it would be a work of great difficulty, and the tree would not be likely to live. He would rather choose a young tree, which would be easily and safely transplanted. In like manner, the difficulty of becoming religious, increases as one grows older.

A woman of ninety lay on her death-bed who had been a disciple of Christ for half a century. Conversing with a friend she said, "Tell all the children that an old woman, who is just on the borders of eternity, is very much grieved that she did not begin to love the Savior when she was a little child. Tell them, youth is the time to serve the Lord."—Cong. Journal.

Disobedience to Parents.

A young man was sentanced to the South Carolina penitentiary for four years. When he was about to be sentenced, he stated publicly that his downward course began in disobedience to his parents—that he thought he knew as much of the world as his father did, and needed not his aid and advice, but that as soon as he turned his back upon his home, then temptations came around him like a drove of hyenas, and hurried him on to ruin. There is no place so safe and happy as a good home.

Cures for Fits.

For a fit of passion.—Walk out in the open air; you may speak your mind to the winds without hurting any one, or proclaiming yourself to be a simpleton.

For a fit of Idleness.—Count the tickings of a clock. Do this for one hour, and you will be glad to pull off your coat the next, and work like a negro.

For a fit of Extravigance and Folly.—Go to the workhouse, or speak to the ragged & wretched inmates of a jail, and you will be convinced—

Who makes his bed of brier and thorn,
Must be content to lie forlorn.

For a fit of Ambition.—Go into the churchyard and read the grave stones; they will tell you the end of ambition. The grave will soon be your bed chamber, the earth your pillow, corruption your father, and the worm your mother and your sister.

For a fit of Repining.—Look about for the halt and the blind, and visit the bed-ridden and afflicted, and deranged; and they will make you ashamed of complaining of your lighter afflictions.

For a fit of Despondency.—Look on the good things which God has given you in this world, and at those which he has promised to his followers in the next. He who goes into his garden to look for cobwebs and spiders, no doubt will find them; while he who looks for a flower, may return into his house with one blooming in his bosom.

For all fits of Doubt, Perplexity, and Fear.—Whether they respect the body, or the mind; whether they are a load to the shoulders, the head, or the heart, the following is a radical cure which may be relied on, for I had it from the Great Physician—"Cast thy burden on the Lord, he will sustain thee."

Anecdote of Dr. Franklin.

After the celebrated Samuel Johnson, D. D., first President of King's (now Columbia) College, N. Y., had resigned his charge of a Congregational church, in Connecticut, where he had been settled, and taken orders in the Church of England, he became acquainted with Doctor Franklin. A frequent correspondence between them ensued, in which Dr. Franklin strongly urged him to remove to the city of Philadelphia, and accept the Presidency of a College, which Dr. F. was engaged in founding in that city, [about the year 1752.] Dr. F. as an additional inducement to Dr. J's. removal to Philadelphia, had proposed to get a new church erected for him. Upon Dr. J's. expressing some doubts as to the propriety of this measure, Franklin endeavored to remove the difficulty by the following arguments.

"Your tenderness of the Church's peace is very laudable; but methinks, to build a new church in a growing place, is not properly dividing but multiplying, and will really be a means of increasing those who worship God in that way. Many who can not now be accommodated in the church, go to other places, or stay at home, would go to church. I had for several years nailed against the wall of my house a pigeon box that would hold six pair, and though they bred as fast as my neighbors' pigeons, I never had more than six pair; the old and strong driving out the young and weak, and obliging them to seek new habitations, At length I put up an additional box, with apartments for entertaining 12 pair more, and it was soon filled with inhabitants, by the overflowing of my first box, and of others in the neighborhood. This I take to be a parallel case with the building of a new church here."

The Power of the Press.—In the year 1272, the wages of a laboring man were just three halfpence per day; and, at the same period, the price of a Bible well written out was £36 sterling. Of course, a common laborer in those days could not have procured a Bible with less than the entire earnings of thirteen years! Now, a beautifully printed copy of the same book can be purchased with the earnings of half a day!

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT.

Jane Lew, Lewis Co., Va., June 1, 1848.

Br. Bassett: I would state that my circuit is in a pretty good condition. We have some prosperity. Some 30 or 40 have been added this year. We are looking for better times. I would have written a communication for your excellent Recorder, giving the state of my circuit long before this time, but a press of business has prevented me.

GEO. NESTOR.

MUSKINGUM DISTRICT.

Delaware Circuit, June 7th, 1848.

Br. Bassett: The Lord of Hosts is with us still on this Circuit. On May 20th, we held our third Quarterly Meeting at Sheets' School House, and we had a remarkably good time. Although the weather threatened to interrupt us by being very rainy, and on the Sabbath we had to hold our meeting in the open air in the woods, where there was no shelter from the wet, such was the deep, absorbing interest excited under the preaching of the word, backed by the good Spirit so manifestly working upon the hearts of the persons present, that regardless of the falling rain, the congregation retained their places in profound attention and quiet until the Sermon was finished; and when we repaired to the School house to celebrate the Lord's Supper, after the house had been filled, a crowd still continued outside attentive spectators, without seeming to care for the drenching of the shower. The sacramental service was a truly solemn and affecting exercise. An aged person who had hitherto held to close communion, being present, was so affected during the service, that he dropped on his knees, among the other communicants, and cried out, with tears in his eyes, "the old Baptist has to come down at last;" and he united with our Church as a member at the same time. The Love-feast on Monday morning was a season of refreshing and rejoicing. Between forty and fifty spoke of their hopes and their joys, and the shout, as of those who have gotten the victory, went up from every part of the house. The result of the Meeting, which closed on Monday night, was twelve persons added to the Class at Sheets' School-house, which, tho' a new class, only organized this year, now numbers 23 Members, all, without any exception, doing well. This addition makes our increase on the whole Circuit, so far this year 63. Although the settlement about the place of meeting is comparatively new, and the dwellings thinly scattered over the neighborhood, the Quarterly Meeting was nobly sustained, and visitors, from other and distant places of the Circuit received the most cordial and hospitable entertainment. Our ministerial Brethren indeed, who had been so long and earnestly invited, failed to come to afford their assistance; but Brethren of the Old side volunteered their services most generously, & labored with us & for us throughout the Meeting, with all their soul and strength. Our prospects in this field, are increasingly cheering.—We have openings for preaching, and loud calls to labor from almost every quarter; and I need only more time and strength, to swell out the bounds of the circuit very much, and to double the number of preaching places. We hope to be able to report still more of our success before the Conference year closes.
